Rail trail group is still at bat

By Amy Lambiaso
ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

A group of area residents has resurrected the Rails-with-Trails concept pitched to the MBTA last year. The Scituate-based group is gaining support from surrounding towns in hopes of making the concept a reality.

Spearheading the cause is Scituate resident and Walking Magazine Editor Mark Fenton, who held an informational meeting in Scituate Wednesday after the Mariner wentto press. Fenton is trying to garner as much support as possible in his next endeavor to have the plan adopted by the T.

"Something like this would make for a phenomenal trail," Fenton said. "It really would be great for everybody."

Fenton envisions creating a corridor running from the Greenbush corner in Scituate to Hingham Center, passing through Cohasset. Ideally, Fenton said the plan would include a 6 to 10 foot wide asphalt or crushed gravel surface parallel to the tracks, with the tracks separated from the trail with as much space, along with a fence and vegetation.

Fenton says such a trail would encourage train riders to walk or ride their bicycles to the train stations, reducing the traffic and parking problems in the areas and be an overall benefit to residents' health. Fenton believes that people would also use the trail to walk to the train as well as to area businesses when the train is not running.

Historically the MBTA has not supported the concept of putting a walk or bike path next to an active rail line because of the safety concerns, and did not include any such plan in the town's mitigation agreements.

MBTA Spokesperson Joe Pesaturo said that not only is the whole idea behind the project a safety issue, but such a corridor isn't possible because design work for the Greenbush line has already been completed along with submitting final environmental reports for the project.

"We'd be very concerned about having a recreational path along an active rail line," Pesaturo said. "It's just not a good idea to encourage anyone, especially children to be near the trains."

Scituate Town Administrator Richard Agnew said that because the MBTA owns the "right-of-way" in each town, it controls the project and whether such a trail could be built.

"I don't think it's a good idea anyway," Agnew said. "There is enough intrusion already on these people's backyards — they don't need bicycles going through there too."

But town officials from Hingham and Cohasset are confident that the letter-writing campaign underway by Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, and Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, to the MBTA will get them the support they need.

"I think it's a terrific idea," Cohasset Town Manager Mark Haddad said. "And hopefully this latest effort and involving the state will make the difference."

Haddad said the plan already has the support of the Cohasset Board of Health and planning officials from both Hingham and Cohasset. Fenton was hoping to gauge other support more closely after the meeting Wednesday night.

"Not only would this bring in more business for the T," Cohasset Health Agent Joe Godzik said, noting that it would most likely increase the amount of riders on the train because it would be more accessible. "But the health benefits are great as well."

Rails-with-Trails has become increasingly more popular across the country with similar trails existing in more than 20 states, including in Western Massachusetts. More than 100 Amtrak trains that fly through towns at more than 100 miles-per-hour see a trail corridor alongside it.

In looking at the train path between Hingham Center and Greenbush, Godzik said the train would follow a fairly straight path, reducing the chance of derailment.

"Obviously (derailments) are a concern," Godzik said. "But that is always a concern for people on the train as well."

Fenton also said that certain federal funding programs are designed and given specifically to pedestrian and bicycle transportation and could be used to fund such a plan.

Senior Overlay district is on November 18 STM warrant

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The Senior Housing Committee is looking to create a senior-housing overlay district in order to enable the creation of independent senior housing in Cohasset.

The SHC is working on developing a town-based proposal for creating a senior housing development, that could include private collaboration. But the SHC needs changes to the zoning bylaws in order to get around density issues. The proposed changes are scheduled to be on the warrant for the upcoming Special Town Meeting.

"There are an awful lot of people in our community that have lived here for years and years and have made great contributions that are being force to leave," said Joe Nedrow, the chairman of the SHC. "They might have a house that they paid $50,000 or $60,000 for that is assessed at $700,000 or $800,000 and they don't have the cash flow to stay there and they have to move."

"They might have a house that they paid $50,000 or $60,000 for that is assessed at $700,000 or $800,000 and they don't have the cash flow to stay there and they have to move."

— Joe Nedrow, Senior Housing Committee

On Tuesday night, Nedrow appeared before the Zoning Advisory Committee to discuss the proposed changes to the bylaw. The Zoning Advisory Committee was created about a year ago, in order to serve as a gatekeeper for the Planning Board for zoning bylaw changes presented by members of the community.

"There is no place for seniors to go, with the exception of the 60 or so units behind the police station, which is income restricted," said Nedrow. "As we said here tonight, anybody can cite numerous people that have moved to Duxbury(where a project similar to what the SHC is proposing was built), because somebody down there has developed a place for them to go."

The senior housing district would overlay the Residential B and C districts and would allow a project to have a higher density than the current regulations. That being said, it is not carte blanche for developers, town-based or otherwise.

"In order to be qualified for the higher density, you need to A) age restrict the project to residents 55-and-older, and B) you need to provide 25 percent of the project for residents of low or moderate income," said Town Planner Elizabeth Harrington, who drafted the new bylaw. The proposed regulations have been reviewed by Town Counsel with only minor structural revisions.

"We're looking for independent senior housing, because we have Sunrise Assisted Living and we have Cohasset Knoll, which is a nursing home," said Nedrow. "Our immediate need is to create independent senior housing and in order to do that, with the sites that we need to have this zoning change to allow that to happen."

The Senior Housing Committee has targeted a town-owned parcel behind Stop and Shop on Route 3A as a prime location for a 60-unit development. They are looking into bringing partners online in order to realize the development, but the overall goal is to create a development that will stay affordable to seniors into the future.

"They are great neighbors," said Nedrow. "The lights are off at 8:30 p.m. or 9 p.m. They're not racing cars through the area and generally speaking they do not place a lot of burden on the town infrastructure. The only thing they incur more of is their ambulance runs and normally, third party insurers pay that."

Once the town's percent of multi-family residences reached 20 percent, the bylaw would no longer be applicable. Currently the town is at 13 percent. "Were the proposed AvalonBay project constructed, the town would be close to that 20 percent figure. According to Harrington, the new regulations would allow either AvalonBay and one senior housing project, or no AvalonBay and approximately three senior housing developments.

"That is basically a cap on the number of projects that could be built," said Harrington. "It is a pretty standard way of controlling that type of development."

Nedrow is concerned that the lack of senior housing is draining a valuable town resource.

"We've all lost good neighbors that had to go to another town to live," said Nedrow. "They could have still made great contributions to our town, but there is just no place for them to go."

Storm-water plan gets OK from DEP

The Cohasset Water Commission's new Surface Water Supply Protection Plan for Lily Pond and the Aaron River Reservoir has been approved by the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection.

"We are pleased to announce that, on the 30th Anniversary of the national Clean Water Act, which is this Friday, Oct.18," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission, "that we have in place an approved comprehensive program for protection of our surface water drinking water resources for the next 10 years."

"We are pleased to announce that on the 30th Anniversary of the national Clean Water Act we have in place an approved comprehensive program for protection of our surface water drinking water resources for the next 10 years."

— John K. McNabb, Water Commission

Other important steps are being taken to protect the quality of our public drinking water supplies,

"We are performing an environmental study of Lily Pond to determine the sources of nutrient loading that promote weed and algae growth in the Pond," McNabb said. "Also, we are cooperating with other Town departments in a comprehensive storm-water mapping program to identify all storm-water structures in the Town so we can reduce or eliminate storm-water runoff of pollutants and nutrients into the water supply and can comply with the Clean Water Act requirements for storm-water regulation."

The Surface Water Supply Protection Plan was prepared by Norfolk RAM for the Water Commission under a $45,000 grant from the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) and the United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

Copies of the Surface Water Supply Protection Plan are available for review at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library and at the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant.

This award, given annually by the SSAC, is presented in recognition of the recipient's "expertise and dedication in teaching art to young children".

The South Shore Art Center is a regional center for the arts with two galleries offering changing exhibitions of contemporary work by regional and national artists and a year-round schedule of courses and workshops in the visual arts. The Center hosts the country's oldest outdoor art and craft festival. For more information call 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org.

Please make sure to take the time this week to tell the ones you care about how much you love them. Also, try to make time in your schedules to enjoy and relax your family and friends and slow down a little in your hectic, everyday schedule. I know that I have to try and do just that as my children are growing up so fast and life can just in the matter of a few seconds. Are the things that we do all so important in the big picture or do we just think they are? Something for all of us to think about.

That is all for this week. Please send me anything you may have no later than Mondays at noon.

Nothnagles named to Special Olympics Team

Local Special Olympics coach and Marshfield resident, Francis Charles, as well as Cohasset residents, Jeff and Jay Nothnagle, have been selected to represent Massachusetts and Team USA at the Special Olympics World Summer Games in Dublin Ireland next June.

Special Olympics athlete Nothnagle will compete in sailing. Jeff Nothnagle will act as Unified Partner and will be paired with Jay to compete together Charles will act as sailing coach for the Nothnagles. In all, four coaches and 16 athletes from the Bay State will have the honor of representing Special Olympics Team USA in Dublin.

The Rack in Boston recently hosted a celebrity fundraiser to help raise funds for Special Olympics Athletes from Massachusetts attending the Special Olympics World Summer Games and to kick off the "Road to Ireland." The approximate cost for each athlete and coach will be $2,000. Coach Jim O'Brien of the Boston Celtics headed up the event and has been named honorary head coach of the team here in Massachusetts.

Other celebrities lending their support to the team included, Mike Vrabel of the New England Patriots, Red Sox legend Luis Tiant, WCVB's Ed Harding and Kelley Tuthill, ESPN's Steve Levy, Bruins' Goalies Steve Shields and John Grahame, and Boston Breakers Sarah Dacey and Sarah Yohe.

Unified Sports, pioneered in Massachusetts brings together athletes with and without mental retardation of similar age and ability to compete on the same playing field. This program increases opportunities for all athletes involved. Unified Sports has dramatically increased inclusion of people with mental retardation into their communities by breaking down barriers that have historically kept these people apart.

The Special Olympics World Summer Games will be one of the flagship events of the Special Olympics movement. The 2003 Games will showcase the athletic skills, courage, and dignity of 7,500 athletes with mental retardation from around the world. Special Olympics has chosen Ireland to host the 2003 Special Olympics World Summer Games. Support for the 2003 Games transcends political and religious affiliations across the entire Island, which is an enormous tribute to the athletes, families, volunteers, and staff of Special Olympics Ireland. Train tunnel could unearth rare, colonial artifacts

Local historian wants experts to be on board

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Without professional archeologists harvesting and interpreting the treasure trove of artifacts in the strata, centuries of history will be lost.

First settled in 1633, Hingham is one of the oldest towns in the United States. And the community's history — which parallels that of America, itself — is buried beneath Hingham Square and along the old railroad bed, says John P. Richardson.

Richardson, 68, whose Fort Hill Street house is like a museum, has collected innumerable artifacts over the years from the old rail bed and other parts of Hingham Square. There are hand-blown glass bottles, pottery and ceramics of every size and description, coins, buttons, cooking implements and countless other items that early settlers used in their households, which are chockablock on every available surface in his home, known as the Old Fort House.

Richardson also believes the 10-20 feet of fill in the square holds Native American relics as well, including stone bowls and utensils, and perhaps the remains of a canoe.

But the local historian is concerned that without professional archeologists harvesting and interpreting the treasure trove of artifacts in the strata, centuries of history will be lost with the construction of the Greenbush line between North and South streets and the digging of the tunnel under Hingham Square.

To that end, Richardson has written to the MBTA and Cashman Balfour-Beatty, the company that is constructing the Greenbush line, about the "nationally significant historic resource in Hingham" and what needs to be done to protect it.

"But they don't pay much attention to me," says Richardson, who is so passionate about preserving the past that he has even threatened the MBTA and Cashman with a lawsuit if they destroy the public resource.

Richardson — who says he has received no evidence of a professionally structured plan for harvesting and protecting, recovering and interpreting of what has national archeological potential — has also requested under the state Public Records Law copies of all MBTA correspondence relative to the archeological resource in Hingham.

But the MBTA is bound by an agreement reached with the Army Corps of Engineers, Massachusetts Historical Commission, the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation in Washington and the five Greenbush towns to ensure historic resources are projected in what is called a "Section 106" document.

"The agreement includes archeological surveys when needed," explains Maureen Cavanaugh of Epsilon Associates of Maynard. Epsilon has been selected as project conservator for the train project.

"The conservator's role is to make sure the MBTA lives up to the Section 106 programmatic agreement," she says.

In addition Cashman-Balfour Beatty has its own in-house cultural resource staff and the MBTA also has a cultural resource firm on board.

Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan is confident the town's historic resources will be properly handled.

"John's comments are valid," says Macmillan, a former chairman of the Hingham Historical Commission. "My feeling is these issues have been and will be dealt with." He says Richardson would be asked to an upcoming meeting with Epsilon and other members of the project team.

"I'm sure they (project team) will be very interested in hearing any information he can provide and take that into account," Macmillan says.

Unique

What makes Hingham unique among the other Greenbush towns that include Braintree, Weymouth, Cohasset and Scituate is the town's square, which is on filled land and the plans to dig the tunnel to protect the square that is on the National Register of Historic Places.

"Because the village developed along, and overlooking, a stream (Town Brook) terminated at Hingham Harbor, expanding residential and commercial activity over more than 300 years necessitated vast filling of wetlands," Richardson explains, adding the filling was accomplished by oxcart and wheelbarrow, so there are many strata containing artifacts.

The Greenbush rail bed runs nearly down the center of this sensitive archeological resource.

In the early 1800s Hingham Harbor that was a port of entry that included a custom house, a fleet of some 60 ships and 177,000 square feet of wharves. And nearly two centuries before that, where North and South streets meet (near where Buttonwood for Kids and Hingham Square Barbershop are today), was the early landing place for colonial settlers and Native Americans.

Before the Greenbush line raised the rail bed when it was first built back in 1849, Richardson explains there used to be common land on either side of Town Brook that runs between North and South streets (which still contain a large number of wood-frame 17th-century houses). Early residents of those homes along Town Brook would use the wetlands or backyard privies as places to dump their trash, which in those days consisted of mostly of broken dishes and other unwanted items that today could tell a story.

Recently, Richardson found in about 12 feet of fill over the original peat in a deep cut for a garage foundation behind 131 South St. contrasting strata some of which was loaded with glass, iron and ceramic artifacts.

"Now they're going to dig it all out for the tunnel," he says. "And disrupt what I consider to be important strata," he says.

Unearthed

Just what might be unearthed?

Richardson says beads, bottles, bricks and brickwork, buckles, buttons, candlesticks, ceramics, clock parts, coins, combs, cooking vessels, cutlery, glasses and decanters, firearms, furniture hardware, window glass, hinges, horseshoes and horse fittings, locks, porcelain, jewelry, silver, tiles, smoking pipes, toys and wig curlers are some examples.

Over the past 45 years recovered during public works and private digs along Town Brook, Richardson has in his repository fragments of stoneware bottles, sleigh bells, whole 17th-18th century wine bottles, stones used in bridges, harness and shoe buckles, a brass candlestick, many examples of British ceramics, gold coins, iron pots and skillets, drug pots, lead glass, and horse fittings, among many other finds.

Richardson hopes the MBTA will set up a program with experts doing the digging to harvest and interpret some 300-plus years of American history buried there.

"That doesn't happen in many places," he says about the concentration of potential artifacts from the early days of the country.

John P. Richardson of Fort Hill Street in Hingham stands by a display of just a few of the many artifacts he's found when earth is dug up along the Greenbush railroad bed in Hingham Square.

There could also be a Puritan-era skeleton or two. Richardson says the hill in front of Old Derby on Main Street used to be a burial ground that extended out to where the Hingham Journal Building and CVS are today. When the sewer was installed along the stretch of Main Street in the square, several skeletons were discovered in front of Loring Hall.

Richardson, who was opposed to the train for a long time, says he isn't trying to stop it, and he's not against the tunnel.

"If it's going through, it's going through," he says.

He only hopes that someone is listening about the potential for destroying such a historic resource.

"In the fill, there's all sorts of stuff that can tell a story," he says. "But archeology doesn't seem to be as important as it used to be. The world is rushing too fast to take an interest in it."

Cohasset town history moves into cyberspace

The Town of Cohasset announced its book, "A Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III" (Dormitzer) is now available on amazon.com, the online superstore. The book was released in June, 2002 and immediately sold more than 1500 copies, making it one of the summer's best sellers on the South Shore.

The availability on amazon.com makes the Cohasset history book available to online buyers around the world.

"It's true, but hard to imagine that someone in Australia or Japan or England can order a copy of our history book in a few seconds", said Wig Pierson, chairman of the committee that published the book.

For those who prefer to shop in a more conventional way, the book is available in Cohasset at Buttonwood, Cards & Shards and Cohasset Hardware.

"A Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III" (Dormitzer) covers the period from 1950 to 2000, during which the Town evolved into one of the South Shore's finest communities. The book traces the events and people that made their mark on Cohasset, ranging from the anti-war marches of the 1960s to the great train debate of the 1990s and include both scandals and the committed efforts that took place in that era. The book is 388 pages long and is packed with pictures and maps.

Troubling

Students arriving under the influence of alcohol at school dances is nothing new. But the schools should be able to handle tipsy teenagers without fear that other students are going to gather around in an intimidating, defiant manner as was the case at the Homecoming Dance.

Cohasset has a bad history when it comes to teenagers showing a lack of respect for police officers as evidenced by two Halloween melees on the common. It is troubling that some teens in town have no respect for authority figures, including school administrators.

At dances chaperones speak to youngsters who are under suspicion of being under the influence, according to Supt. Edward Malvey. That's just what Health Coordinator Michael Gill and Principal Michael Jones did when a male student appeared to be drunk at the Homecoming Dance.

But it didn't stop there. A verbal confrontation ensued with some of the students' friends who followed the administrators to the office and then a large group of students also gathered outside the office window where the boy was being questioned.

Although there is no evidence the incidents are related, vandals later broke windows at the school.

Underage drinking is dangerous whether the student gets behind the wheel of a car or walks down the street, and it cannot be tolerated. School administrators, who act as chaperones at dances, have the obligation to make sure the students are safe and that no students are under the influence, which could cause harm to themselves or others.

We think detail officers at school dances – an option that is being considered – is a good idea. An officer in uniform stationed at the door can be a good deterrent. We'd also bet you'd find that most students would feel safer with an officer present.

The other option is canceling all school dances, which would punish all the students.

Clearly, the schools must take some action.

Dr. Malvey points out there have been problems at two of the dances last year and the first dance this year.

All this begs the question – where's Mom and Dad? Some parents come from the school of thought – that underage drinking is inevitable, and they condone it. That way of thinking is short-sighted and risky. Early drinking is not only a recipe for disaster in terms of personal safety, but can lead to alcoholism later on.

It's time for some tough love. Smell your kids' breath if you're suspicious and pay attention to who their friends are. Take away the keys. Say no.

As School Committee Chartis Tebbetts says:

"Parents have to step up and be responsible for their children," said Tebbetts. "They should go to school events sober, and without alcohol. They should be dressed appropriately with all the 'I's' dotted and 'T's' crossed as to where they are going and how they are going to get home."

Parents should also talk about police, teachers and school administrators with respect at home and not permit their children to rank on authority figures.. Negative dinner-time talk, can lead to the kind of inappropriate behavior exhibited at the Homecoming Dance.

Chicken wire?

TO THE EDITOR:

Do we need to install a chicken wire barrier between the selectmen and the unruly and unmannered audience, like in the Blues Brothers movie? At least our local yahoos haven't (yet) thrown any beer bottles, and have limited themselves to angry invective. and bad manners.

As always, the opponents of something or other are out in force, making the noise, while the supporters are more passive (and absent).

League speaks on debate issue

TO THE EDITOR:

As the president of the League of Women Voters of Hingham, I am writing in response to the "Letter to the Editor" published in the Oct. 10, 2002 Cohasset Mariner regarding a debate between the candidates for State Representative. The League would like to clarify why there was no debate scheduled. The League of Women Voters in Hingham is co-sponsoring this year's candidates debate with the Community Newspaper Company. The League proposed candidates forums for the office of State Senator, State Representative and District Attorney however the Community Newspaper Company decided not to sponsor a State Representative debate. Unfortunately, we were unable to come up with a date that was agreeable to all for a debate that would be sole sponsored by the Hingham League. We believed that this ended the prospect of a candidates debate for State Representative this fall.

The League of Women Voters of Hingham is a nonpartisan, political organization that encourages the informed and active participation of citizens in government. We will continue our efforts to sponsor candidates debated including this years State Representative race.

HEALTH NOTES

Health Board plays a role in projects facing town

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Citizens in town have been sent several important initiatives recently. One is by Cohasset Action, and discusses the proposed Avalon Bay development at the Webb Norfolk property. The second is the notice of a meeting by the Growth And Development Committee notifying us of a meeting on Oct. 21 to discuss a master plan. A third is the several documents associated with the Cohasset Revitalization Committee. The Board of Health will have a part in all of these activities. And to some extent, we have not been doing our job with respect to some of the committees representing these initiatives.

Let us take, first, the activities of the Revitalization Committee. Much money and effort has been expended in an attempt to enhance our downtown by this committee. To some extent, to one who has paid too little attention to the effort, it looks like an unnecessary attempt to beautify an already pretty attractive town. From a Board Of Health standpoint, however, there is a great need emerging which should be a part of Revitalization's core purpose, and that is ease of communication by encouraging activities which promote exercise like walking and bike riding, and discourage the use of cars. The Board has identified lack of exercise as well as improper diet as the two greatest threats to our citizen's health for the next 30 years, and statistics back us up. If Dean Rizzo wants better support for revitalization, he will become allied with some genuinely beneficial initiatives such as the Rails with Trails initiative just beginning in town, and come up with a plan to enhance the safety of all of Cohasset's walkways; especially those along our gold coast on Jerusalem, Atlantic, and the other places where we see walkers and runners, where it's now sometimes scary to walk. Not, necessarily, by the way, by adding standard wide macadam sidewalks, but more environmentally friendly pervious gravel paths which are at once more attractive and, when properly designed, help the environment by permitting recharge of storm water.

Need specifics

And now, about the Growth and Development Committee, a public meeting will collect a number of viewpoints from those who come to the meeting, but if no specific initiatives are presented we are behind the curve. Everywhere we look, in town, our zoning laws are being tested by greedy builders and heedless projects. In many cases, it may be too late to save much of the character of the town. The Board of Health intends to implement new proposed standards for management of new small construction projects as a result of new EPA requirements, but it may be too late to do much about plans on the table at many town boards. Some projects deserve notice. The initiative by Joe Nedrow's Senior Housing Committee to put 50 units of senior housing behind the Stop and Shop meets all the requirements of excellent planning. Septic would not be a problem, seniors would have easy access to most parts of town and its services, and the housing is desperately needed. But elsewhere, there is precious little guidance or control in our Town ordinances over builders whose projects threaten much of our green space and groundwater.

Avalon Bay

And now, the Cohasset Action committee fighting Avalon Bay. The town is finally bringing to a conclusion, its battle to save our water supply from Cohasset Heights, a landfill, largely spearheaded by John McNabb. Now, on property even closer to the water supply, a similar threat is being mounted. This project is quite feasible from a developer's standpoint: Septic could be handled by obtaining a groundwater discharge permit, similar to that at Cohasset Knoll. The Board Of Health will have no opportunity to approve the plans. There's plenty of land for building; 60 acres or so. Why not 250 dwelling units? Just what rich old Cohasset needs to balance out its elite population. And it even gives us some low income housing for 5 years. Nothing could be better calculated to turn Cohasset upside down quicker than implementation of this plan. Neither our zoning nor the state's regulations would restrict the builder from creating an environmental disaster on that hill. In addition, the Cohasset Action mailer cites the effect on schools, traffic, and the effect of a 10 percent increase in population. The immediate reaction is how do we stop this horror?

But, if we think a bit, and look at the numbers justifying the project, we begin to see the shortcomings in our planning which put this problem on our doorstep. According to the state, 10 percent of our housing should be affordable. We desperately need elder housing. The 64 units we have behind the police station are not enough, and we probably need to double it. The town has about 7500 citizens, and 2500 homes. 10 percent affordable would be 250 homes and 750 people. Given that we now have about 50 (2 percent) homes considered affordable, 64 elder homes, and if the Senior Housing Committee units are built, 50 more elder homes we would have 164 homes. There is a number of apartments in town some of which represent low income dwellings; say 25. That leaves about 60 not 250 homes to meet the state's complete obligation. A development, properly planned, and under the town's control from an environmental and health standpoint (our environmental and health regulations are stricter than state requirements) built over five years, might comply with all the state's requirements.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

With my favorite holiday, Halloween (All Hallow's Eve) creeping up on us, I got to thinking about all the creatures, both real and unreal, that are associated with the ghoulish evening our pagan ancestors called Samhain (SOW-en or sah-win). Like many of our Christmas traditions, our Halloween traditions trace their origins to the ancient Celts, country-dwellers whose rituals affirmed the interconnectedness of all realms of existence and honored the rhythms of the earth, the cycle of the seasons.

Samhain, meaning "summer's end," traditionally fell or Nov. 1, between the fall equinox and the winter solstice, and marked the Celtic New Year, one of the four high festival days on the Celtic calendar, the others being Imbolg on Feb. 2, Beltane on May 1 and Lughnasad on Aug. 1. With the crops harvested and winter approaching, Samhain was a time of inspiration and renewal, a time to take stock - as is our New Year - and to affirm life. (As a challenge to paganism, during the 9th century the Catholic Church established Nov. 1, as All Saints Day to honor Christian saints.) But as promising a day as Samhain was, the evening before was believed to be a time of great danger, an occasion when the barrier between the human world and the spirit world was thinnest, when witches, demons and the spirits of departed ancestors walked among the living, stealing souls and seeking revenge. To frighten them away, fearful villagers dressed in costumes and masks and roamed the countryside until dawn. Offerings of food and drink were made to insure well-being and children went door to door asking for kindling for the sacred communal bonfire that was lit atop the hills to honor the Gods and repel the powers of evil. From that bonfire, townspeople carried home an ember in a hollowed out gourd or turnip to rekindle their own hearth fire which had been extinguished to make the dwelling cold and inhospitable to the spirits.

Though English colonists brought Samhain traditions to the New World in the 1700s, Halloween was popularized by Irish immigrants during the mid-19th century. In time, All Hallow's Eve ceased to be a night of dread and instead became an occasion for spooky, scary fun, a night of smiling jack-o-lanterns, tricks, treats and decorations that exploited the myths and superstitions surrounding various animals, for instance owls, feared as messengers of death, their wailings from deep in the wood said to be the voices of ghosts. And bats, the world's only flying mammal, thought to be the night-wandering souls of the dead. It was said that if a bat flew three times around a house death would soon visit.

Cats, though worshipped in ancient Egypt, later became associated with witchcraft and black magic. Felines, particularly black cats were, like crows, owls, bats and toads, believed to be "familiars," people who had taken the form of animals and served as evil companions to witches.

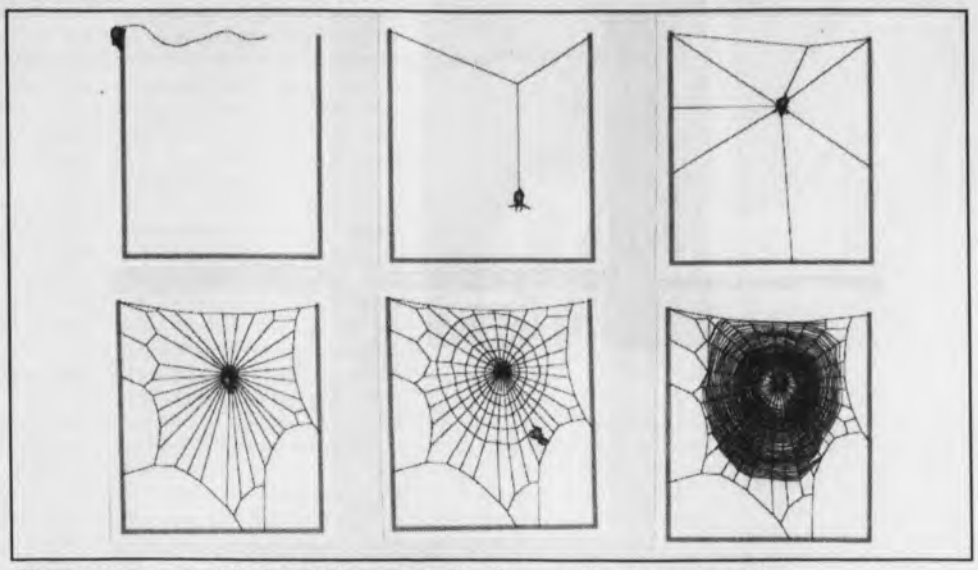
Though we are, today, less superstitious than our forebears, irrational fears still linger, perhaps none more so than our fear of spiders, a favorite ingredient in witches potions and "cures" and necessity for any respectable haunted Halloween house. Myths that perpetuate the "dangerous" reputation of spiders, as well as a popular culture that demonizes spiders have made them repulsive, Halloween or no Halloween.

Though all spiders are venomous only two, the black widow and the brown recluse are potentially toxic to humans. Most spiders are harmless and shy, though they can bite if threatened. European cultures associated spiders with the epidemics that plagued Europe from the Middle Ages, an association that perhaps accounts for the strong anxiety folks of European descent feel in the presence of spiders. Non-European cultures, however, considered spiders to be lucky. A spider in the house was said to be a sign of prosperity and happiness and should never be killed. "If you wish to live and thrive let the spider run alive," advises an old adage.

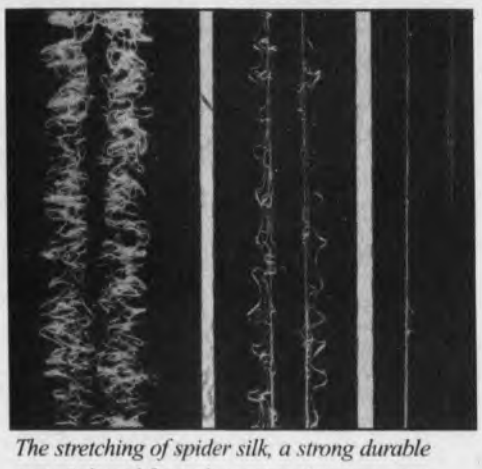
During these early weeks of fall when the slowing chirps of crickets remind us that summer really is over and fragrant swirls of wood smoke convince us that autumn really has arrived, spiders are their busiest, laying eggs wrapped in silken cocoons that will winter over and hatch in the spring. Most will live only one season.

Though we are not often aware of their presence, spiders are everywhere among us. By some accounts, several hundred thousand spiders can inhabit a backyard acre, controlling the insect population with their voracious appetite. If you sit some afternoon facing the low, late sun you'll see backlit wisps of spider silk, perhaps a magnificent woven spiral from the night before strung between garden stakes, flower stems or fence pickets. Or, rise early and step out into the dew-soaked backyard where glittering gossamer sheets spread across the lawn. What the backyard has lost in bloom and color it makes up for in shimmering weavings.

Often mistakenly grouped with insects, spiders, like mites, scorpions and ticks, are members of the Arachnid class which numbers more than 35,000 species worldwide, 3,000 of which are found in North America, 700 here in New England. Though both insects and spiders are arthropods - animals with hardened exteriors, segmented bodies and jointed appendages - spiders differ from insects in several important ways. Where insects have three body sections, spiders have two, a fused head and thorax called a cephalothorax and an abdomen. (To further muddy the picture, the Daddy long-legs, also known as a harvestman, though a member of the arachnid class, is not a true spider. It's head/thorax and abdomen are joined in a single body and it is non-venomous.) Eight legs (insects have six), no wings or antennae, and a pair of jaw-like structures called chelicerae (insects have mandibles) also distinguish spiders from insects. Special glands manufacture venom which the spider ejects through hollow, claw-like fangs in the chelicerae. After the poison paralyzes the insect prey, the spider injects a digestive enzyme. Because a spider can only ingest liquid, it must wait for its prey to dissolve. Wrapped in silk, the hapless victim is set aside until fully liquefied.



The spinning stages of the beautiful complex orb web, created by the garden spider.



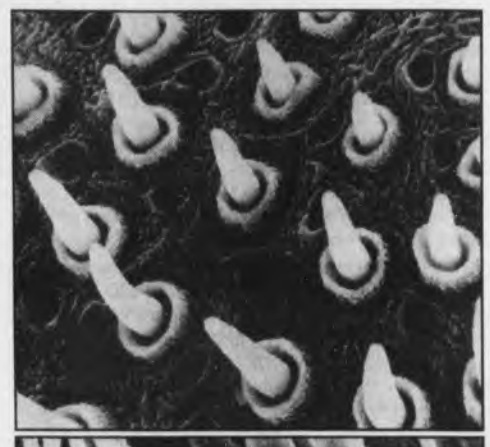
The stretching of spider silk, a strong durable material used for web construction, egg sacs, burrow lining, drag lines and wrapping prey.

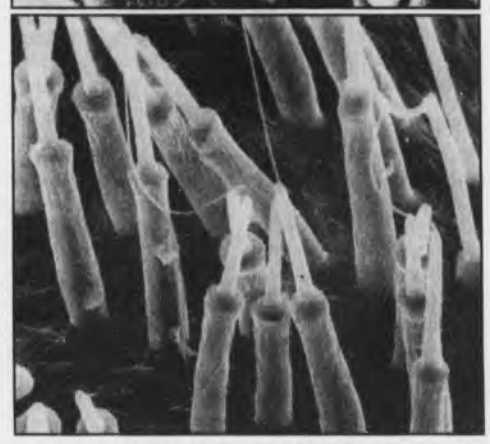
Despite our widespread arachnophobia, few can resist admiring the beauty and craftsmanship of a spider's silken web. Spider silk, dry and inelastic for a web's framework and spokes, and sticky and elastic for the capture threads, is an extremely strong material - relative to weight it is stronger than steel - and emerges from the spider body in liquid form from finger-like glands called spinnerets located near the tip of the abdomen. On contact with air, and when stretched (it can be stretched 30 to 40 percent before it breaks), the silk hardens. As many as seven different glands that produce silks for various purposes have been identified though no family of spiders seems to possess all seven. And though all spiders have silk glands, not all spiders spin webs to ensnare their prey. Wolf and jumping spiders, with their keen vision, pounce on their prey and use silk as draglines to escape danger and as lining for their living chambers. Most spiders use silk to encase their eggs and young spiders - spiderlings - spin lines of silk that catch the wind and parachute them through the air, a form of spider travel called ballooning.

Most of us, however, notice spider silk in the form of webs, either loose, untidy, dust-collecting cobwebs, glistening funnel webs or the intricate spiral creations known as orbs. And most web residents, patiently waiting in the web for unsuspecting passersby, are either female spiders or juveniles. Once the male molts into adulthood, it loses the silk glands that produce the all-important "sticky" capture threads.

The droopy cobwebs that cling to darkened, protected corners of ceilings and window frames are fashioned by the house spider, often called the "accidental invader." Hanging upside down in the center of its irregular web, the pale brown spider with mottled black and gray sides is the bane of homeowners, its year-round sticky web collecting insects while the web is occupied and dust after the web has been abandoned.

Broad, sheet-like webs that stretch across the lawn on dew mornings are home to the grass spider. The slightest vibration of the irregular web sends the spider dashing from its tube-like horizontal "funnel" tunnel to seize its meal. Should the web be threatened, the spider can make a quick escape through the funnel's back door, disappearing into the grass.





The spider's silk-producing spinnerets, finger-like glands located near the tip of the spider's abdomen.

Unarguably, the masterpieces of web building are the intricate orb webs, the roughly spiral creations that belong to the garden spider. Usually placed vertically in the path of flying insects, orb webs capture prey with a sticky spiral. Many orb weavers replace their web daily, recycling the silk by,eating the previous day's web and spinning a new web at night, entirely by touch, in about an hour, though large webs can take up to eight hours to complete.

Wind, and a little bit of luck, get the spider started. A primary thread of sticky silk is spun out and carried (hopefully) by a breeze to a support - a branch or a wall - where it attaches. Pulled taut, the horizontal thread is strengthened with additional silk. Another thread is hung in a Y formation, forming the first of as many as 50 spokes. Additional spokes are spun out and anchored to the support and framework is added to which spokes can also be attached.

With the framework and spokes in place, the spider walks in spiral, beginning at the hub, attaching a non-adhesive silk that forms a temporary spiral that stabilizes the framework. Then, working from the web's outer edge and using the temporary spiral as a guide, the spider spins out the sticky capture spiral, often with many U-turns, in one continuous strand. Its snare complete, the garden spider hangs head down, motionless in the center of the web, waiting. The slightest vibration sends the spider into action, scurrying across the, spiral - its leg structure prevents it from being caught in its own web - to secure its prey.

Perhaps by appreciating the spiders' webs we can better understand the much-maligned critters which have been called nature's engineers and acrobats. And today, generations removed from our European ancestors who arrived in the New World with Old World anxieties, perhaps it is time to let go of superstitions and irrational fears. Which isn't to say that when a spider drops down in front of you on its drag line you won't still let out a little shriek. Happy Halloween!

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I get no respect, and I might have gotten credit for that observation if Rodney Dangerfield hadn't beaten me to it.

I say this because the 50th anniversary of my graduation from college has come and gone and no one seems to have noticed except the guy who collects money from well-heeled alumni and periodically reminds me that my classmate, Chris Barrecca, has contributed thousands, if not millions, to the coffers of Boston University.

Can you believe it? Fifty years! A half century!

John Silber, the current BU president, was still a student in Texas in 1952. The head of BU then was a Methodist minister named Danny Marsh, who spent most of his time trying to close down The Dugout, a student watering hole across Commonwealth Avenue. It's still there.

The school had a football team called the Terriers that played the likes of West Virginia, Syracuse, Maryland, and Iowa while I was a student there. Now there's no longer even a football team, and Nickerson Field, where boys and girls play soccer now, housed a baseball team known as the Boston Braves.

Bear with me now, kids, while I share a few memories of 1952 with the old folks.

That was the year when Elizabeth II became queen of England at the death of her father, King George VI. Only the Scots referred to her as Elizabeth I since the original Elizabeth I of England was not the queen of Scotland at the time.

It was the year that Ike Eisenhower was nominated by the Republicans for president and Dick Nixon was nominated for vice president, and when Nixon was accused of maintaining a gift "slush fund," he cleared himself in an emotional TV address in which he admitted receiving the gift of a dog called "Checkers" and added, "We're gonna keep it."

"The Green Hornet" ended a 16-year-run on the radio, still denying one of the airwaves' oldest myths: that Brit Reed's faithful houseboy Kato was Japanese until Dec. 7, 1941, when, without explanation, he became a Filipino houseboy.

Brockton's Rocky Marciano knocked out Jersey Joe Walcott in the 13th round to win the world's heavyweight boxing championship; Sam Snead won the Masters golf tournament; George Mikan led the Minneapolis Lakers to the NBA title; and Ed Lopat and Allie Reynolds pitched the New York Yankees to victory over the Brooklyn Dodgers in the World's Series.

"I've Got a Secret," hosted by Garry Moore; "The Jackie Gleason Show," featuring Art Carney, Audrey Meadows and Joyce Randolph; and "See It Now," a documentary hosted by Edward R. Murrow, made their debuts on television. The best variety show was "Your Show of Shows," starring Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca.

Humphrey Bogart won an Oscar as best actor for "The African Queen;" one of the hit songs was "High Noon (Do Not Forsake Me, Oh My Darling)" sung by Frankie Laine; Bill Haley & The Comets were the hottest new recording artists; and actor Ronald Reagan, star of "Bedtime for Bonzo," married actress Nancy Davis.

Having settled the most critical part of the negotiations, the shape of the table, the Korean truce talks entered their second year and the National Security Council recommended that the United States give financial aid to the French in their fight to maintain their control in Vietnam.

Booster breakfast was a big success

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Soccer Booster Club would like to thank all those who helped make our Oct. 6 Pancake Breakfast fundraiser such a success. Our thanks go to the Middle High School administration, in particular Jack DeLorenzo, and Chartwells Foods for arranging for our use of the wonderful new cafeteria facilities at the school.

We are very grateful for the generosity of the following businesses and individuals who donated food, gift certificates and other raffle prizes for the event: Ambrosia Restaurant, Atlantic Bagel, Atlantica, the Barker Tavern Bakery, Bernard's, Mike and Rosemary O'Connell for Celtics and Bruins tickets, the Clarion Hotel, Coastal Nissan, Cohasset Collision Center, Dunkin Donuts, Endless Summer Tanning Salon, Entercom Boston, French Memories, Good Sport, Hingham Car Wash, Jamie's Pub, Michael Libby, the 99 Restaurant, Par-Tee Indoor Miniature Golf, the South Shore Music Circus, RGP, Red Lion Inn, Riva Restaurant, Stop & Shop, Tedeschi's, T.K. O'Malley's Pub and WATD Radio. The support of these businesses contributed much to the success of this fundraiser.

We are grateful also for the support of the Boston Breakers, who arranged for forward Sarah Yohe to make an appearance at the breakfast. Finally, we would like to thank all those who bought tickets to the event and joined us for a great breakfast, and all the soccer players and parents who helped set up, cook, run the children's games and clean up. We hope to see you all again at next year's breakfast!

Wrong message from election signs

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset observes its public events in its own special, small town ways. We look forward to the excitement of the Little League Parade, the solemn ceremonies on Memorial Day, the fun that is part and parcel of Snapper Sneaker Day, the Strawberry Festival, the Hallowe'en Festival, and the Jingle Bell Walk. We love our special traditions that make up Cohasset's character and we mark the seasons' changes by them.

Election days in Cohasset follow traditions too. Colorful election signs are an important part of local elections and usually, two weeks before voting day, dozens of signs from all parties and proponents materialize on our lawns overnight. Traditionally, the signs just as quickly disappear the morning after Marion Douglas posts the results on the doors at Town Hall.

So, with our traditions in mind, it is disappointing to see so many political signs still up around Cohasset long after Primary Day. Several candidates continue to put up signs and another candidate has signs up on 3A even though he is running in another district!

We cherish our right to express our views and support our candidates, but we also appreciate a traditional start and finish to an election season. This protest is probably no big deal in larger towns; and yes, we surely have plenty of other local issues to resolve. But someone should point our to these candidates that they have nudged our Town a little further away from its small town ways and a little closer to becoming just another area to conquer come Election Day.

Hedlund, LeClair to debate on Oct. 24

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

The two contenders for the state Senate seat in the Plymouth-Norfolk District will joust on campaign issues next Thursday at a debate moderated by the Hingham League of Women Voters..

Incumbent state Sen. Robert Hedlund, a Weymouth Republican, and challenger Ted LeClair, a Marshfield Democrat, will take to the podium at 7 p.m. on Oct. 24 at Hingham Town Hall.

The event is sponsored by the Community Newspaper Company, publishers of the Weymouth News and the Hingham Journal.

"The debate provides a unique opportunity for voters to hear an airing on the issues in a very public forum," said CNC Executive Editor Mark Skala. "There is a certain amount of politeness and sparring mixed in with tradition and formality. We are privileged to help bring this to the voting public."

The moderator chosen by the Hingham LWV is Massasoit professor T.P. Eliott-Smith, former town moderator in Halifax. The League of Women Voters is a nonpartisan political organization dedicated to encouraging the informed and active participation of citizens in government.

"A debate is always a good way to expose candidates to the voters," said Hingham LWV President Helga Jorgensen.

Issues expected to be debated are education, the impact of Chapter 40B — the state's affordable housing law — on growth and development, health care, and the sorry condition of state government.

Hedlund said he always welcomed a debate.

"I am so thankful that Community Newspaper Company and the League of Women Voters teamed up to make this debate possible. I do believe it is important for the voters to see some substance in a campaign beyond campaign signs and slick brochures," Hedlund said.

Hedlund said that he has never turned down a debate, no matter what participating organization

Bob Hedlund

Ted LeClair

sponsored the event.

Both contenders for the state Senate seat see the upcoming debate as a means to clarify the differences in their platforms.

"I very much look forward to the opportunity to distinguish what I stand for from the record of my opponent," LeClair said. "This race is about values and priorities. I believe that Beacon Hill has lost its focus. Our elected officials care more about politics and have lost their focus on the people of the Commonwealth. My campaign is about working to fix what is broken and helping to make our state government once again serve the needs of the residents of Massachusetts. The upcoming debate will serve to highlight my differing priorities from my opponent."

The state's affordable housing law allows a developer to apply to the state for a comprehensive permit to build a project that has been turned down by town boards, as long as 25 percent of the project's units qualify as affordable housing.

"Chapter 40B is the latest symptom of unfettered growth on the South Shore," LeClair said. "In my opinion, results are what matter, and this is just another example of missed opportunities by my opponent. We need to do more than just reform 40B. We need to change our state laws so that local communities can control growth and provide housing to the teachers, elderly, and our children who now call the South Shore their home. Why aren't we moving toward sound solutions to these issues? We need to do these things now, not years after they become a problem."

Hedlund said that he has proposed a series of amendments aimed at returning local control to towns, including provisions allowing for a more accurate count of exiting affordable housing.

One of the main amendments, filed last fall, provided a 12 month cooling off period for submitting 40B applications when the developer's initial plan did not include a low income or affordable housing component.

An example of this occurred in Weymouth, where a developer filed with the state for 396 units of affordable housing at Arbor Hill after a proposal for 275 market-rate units for the same site had been turned down by town boards.

This spring, Hedlund introduced legislation that gave local boards of appeals the right to impose reasonable restrictions and conditions regarding open space issues, building size, density, setbacks, and structure heights.

The bill would also give local boards of appeals the right to turn down a comprehensive permit application on land it deemed unsuitable based on engineering or environmental constraints.

An earlier amendment filed by Hedlund included a provision that a decision by a local board of appeals consistent with the conditions of that amendment could not be overturned by the state Housing Appeals Committee.

"In addition, I cosponsored a bill allowing local housing boards of appeals to take the financial feasibility of the proposal into account when considering whether or not to grant a comprehensive permit," Hedlund said.

Hedlund and LeClair agreed that the "mess on Beacon Hill" needs to be addressed.

"We need to stop talking about the mess on Beacon Hill and do something about it," LeClair said. "If elected, I will propose legislation that if the budget is not passed and submitted by the legislature by June 30th, then the paychecks will stop for the legislators. You get paid only for work done on time. I will propose legislation that requires the budget conference committee to work in open session, not behind closed doors. We are the taxpayers. We deserve to know what is going on with our money. I will also propose doing away with all legislative bonuses."

The Legislature could very well be called back into session next month or in December to deal with the out-of-kilter state budget, Hedlund said.

In an attempt to balance the budget, acting GovJane Swift is making additional emergency cuts.

"It is the governor's responsibility under the law to balance the budget. The Legislature should go back into session to address these cuts. If we do not go back in session, we are ceding to her all our authority over these cuts when we should have a role in the decisions," Hedlund said.

Hedlund said that one of the steps that needed to be taken to straighten out the mess on Beacon Hill was to eliminate waste on the state level.

"There is a recognition at the State House that we need to eliminate waste, but there are too many sacred cows," Hedlund said.

According to Hedlund, an example in Weymouth of wasted state dollars is the overlapping maintenance of town parks by the MDC and the state Department of Environmental Management, while a statewide example is the overlapping of MassHighway and the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority.

"Separate maintenance of state highways does not make sense," Hedlund said.

Hedlund also questioned the financial sense of subsidizing two conference centers in Boston.

"We are subsidizing the Hynes Center at $20 million. We are now building a bigger white elephant in South Boston," he said.

Hedlund, LeClair spar on schools

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

A letter to the editor of the Weymouth News from current and former members of the Weymouth School Committee slamming incumbent state Sen. Robert Hedlund's record on education has sparked the first major controversy in the campaign for the Plymouth-Norfolk District Senate seat.

Hedlund said that the letter originated with supporters of his opponent in the Senate race.

Two of the signers of the letter, Weymouth School Committee Vice Chairman Susan Peters and former School Committee Member Carol Karlberg, are active supporters of Marshfield Democrat Ted LeClair, Hedlund's challenger in the Nov. 5 election.

Karlberg is listed on LeClair's campaign website as a staff member. Peters and Karlberg are listed on the website as school coordinators.

"This letter was self-serving. Karlberg is a full-time staffer for LeClair. The rest are members of the Democratic Town Committee," Hedlund said. "They are active, partisan Democrats. That they would do something to support LeClair is not the issue. It is when they deceive that I am troubled. LeClair is using surrogates to run a negative, deceitful campaign, rather than taking a stand on education issues."

Karlberg does not agree that campaign politics inspired the letter.

"I totally disagree," she said. "Each and every School Committee member decides who he or she will support. I don't think there was a partisan issue here."

Due to the short time until the election, it is editorial policy to deal with such letters in the body of the paper, rather than running it on the editorial page.

The letter, in response to an election story in the Oct. 2 News, stated, "We read with concern about our state senator's recent position on education. Sen. Hedlund clearly states that education is a priority, yet even in this difficult budget season, he adamantly opposes a tax increase. If the senator really values education, how can he support cutting $2 billion from the state budget? If, in fact, education is a priority, why has the funding for a comprehensive health education, a parent/home child literacy program, and a class size reduction grant already been eliminated? When is Sen. Hedlund going to admit that level funding the education budget is in actuality a decrease in funding? You just can't have it both ways."

Signing the letter, in addition to Peters and Karlberg, were Weymouth School Committee Chairman Michael Gallagher, current School Committee Member Karen Berry, and former School Committee Members James Keenan and Mary Akoury.

Hedlund said that the charges in the letter to the editor of the News were full of inaccuracies.

"The LeClair campaign gets an F in research," Hedlund said. "I make a pledge in my campaign that should my supporters say something incorrect about LeClair, I will call on my supporters to retract. I am calling on him to do the same."

In reference to the class size reduction grants, these grants have not been eliminated or even reduced, according to Hedlund.

"In fiscal year 2002, the funding was $18 million. In fiscal year 2003, the funding was $18 million. There has not been a penny cut from that program," he said.

The Comprehensive Health Education Grant was eliminated,

but the issue never came to the floor of the Senate for a vote. The $10 million grant, a line item in the joint conference committee report, was vetoed by acting Gov. Jane Swift. The House, where vetoes must originate, made no attempt at an override, according to Hedlund.

"The Democratic leadership chose not to bring it up for a veto override," he said.

The John Silber Early Childhood Literacy program, while not eliminated, did see a reduction from $20.6 million in fiscal year 2002 to $18.3 million in fiscal year 2003, but again, the Senate had no opportunity to debate the cut, Hedlund saaid.

"The cut came from the Democratic leadership in the House and the Senate," he said. "The reduction was part of the Senate Ways and Means budget and then part of the House Ways and Means Committee budget, finally emerging from the joint committee. The cut never came up for a debate or a vote on the Senate floor."

The Parent-Child Home Program, funded at $3.3 million in fiscal year 2002, was cut to $2.5 million in conference committee for fiscal year 2003. This program also fell to the governor's veto.

"They got their tax increase and the Democratic leadership still did not fund education," Hedlund said. "I have seen nothing about LeClair's position on education. Instead of negative attacks, I encourage Ted to put out some information on where he stands on education issues."

When asked to respond to the funding of these programs, LeClair affirmed his support for education funding.

"I cannot speak for the Legislature, but this question highlights one of the reasons I am running for the state Senate," LeClair said. "This race is about values and priorities. Our current senator has vastly different priorities from me. Our children's education is a top priority for me, and I am proud to have the public teachers' union standing in my corner. I cannot justify to the constituents of the Plymouth/Norfolk District any cuts in education. Our economy, our children, and our future depend on an educated population. If we do not make education a priority, then every other interest we believe in will suffer. Our prosperity is based on the foundation of education."

Neither candidate supported cutting $2 billion from the state budget.

"I do not support cutting $2 billion from the state budget, especially in light of its impact on our children's education," LeClair said. "Public education is a top priority of mine. I am proud to have the support of the Massachusetts Teachers Association. They believe that I am the best candidate to safeguard our children's education. The Legislature is faced with record decreases in revenue and has failed to adequately address the question of government waste. My vision of how to balance the budget is to first make significant cuts in expenditures. The engine of government must be streamlined while we also work to strengthen the Rainy Day Fund."

In addressing the issue of cutting $2 billion from the state budget, Hedlund said that the budget had actually been reduced by one-tenth billion. In fiscal year 2002, the state budget was $22.7 million; the current estimate for the fiscal year 2003 budget is $22.6 billion.

Hedlund did vote against the tax hike.

"The tax package raises approximately $1.8 billion in revenue. Apparently they are construing my vote against the tax hike as 'cutting the budget by $2 billion.' Ted supports the biggest tax increase in the state's history. I voted against it. There are other ways for the state to generate additional income," Hedlund said. "Voters want value for their tax dollars and want certain programs, like education, prioritized. That is what I have done."

Hedlund said that there were definitely wasted dollars in the state budget.

"In good conscience, I cannot support having the biggest tax hike in the state's history until I see waste eliminated. The I will support a tax hike," he said.

Hedlund challenged LeClair to find alternate ways to raising revenue other than the tax hike.

"I don't see where Ted LeClair has said where we can earn the money to make education a priority," Hedlund said.

Hedlund stressed that he was a leader in the Senate to strengthen the School Building Assistance program, which is vital to many towns in the district. He said that Chapter 70 money for Weymouth steadily increased until fiscal year 2003, when the line item was level funded at $19,551,520.

Level funding did not mean that education was not prioritized, according to Hedlund.

"We made education level funded when programs around the state have been drastically cut because of the economic downturn," he said.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Hedlund backs 40B changes

Addressing a forum held by Marshfield Selectmen recently Sen. Hedlund addressed the issues surrounding Chapter 40B reforms. Hedlund has addressed these concerns consistently since the Fall 2001 when he offered a series of amendments during a debate on the Omnibus Affordable Housing Bill. All the amendments were aimed at returning local control to our towns, including provisions allowing for a more accurate count of existing affordable housing.

The "Affordable Housing" law known as Chapter 40B is a continuing concern. Minor changes to the law have been made, but these changes do not go far enough to return some form of control and accountability to our local communities. In answer to these concerns, Hedlund has filed legislation to address the Chapter 40B crisis. The bill, much like the earlier budget amendment, titled "An Act Relative to Low and Moderate Income Housing," empowers local boards of appeals to review Chapter 40B "comprehensive permit" applications and impose reasonable restrictions and conditions with regard to open space issues, building size, density, setbacks and structure heights. The bill would also allow local boards of appeal to condition and/or deny a comprehensive permit application on land that it deems unsuitable based upon engineering or environmental constraints. The state's Housing Appeals Committee could not overrule a decision by a local board of appeals that relies upon the language of the bill in its determination of suitability.

Hedlund has also co-sponsored a bill allowing the local housing board of appeals to take the financial feasibility of the proposal into account when considering whether to grant a comprehensive permit.

LeClair says his experience counts

Ted LeClair, candidate for State Senate in the Plymouth/Norfolk district, will use his experience to represent the South Shore in the State Senate.

Born in Scituate in 1969, the South Shore's Ted LeClair's lifetime experiences have prepared him for the challenges of reforming Beacon Hill. After graduating from Scituate High, he went to Villanova where to pay for his education he enlisted in the ROTC program. Two days after graduating, LeClair left for San Diego to serve in the Navy. LeClair served on a destroyer in the Persian Gulf in the winter of 1994 and attained the Navy Commendation and Achievement Medals. LeClair left active service to return home and work with his father in the family cranberry business where production on the family bogs more than doubled. LeClair then moved to the health care industry concentrating on government affairs working on the complex issues of health care delivery.

"Next year will be a challenge for everyone in state government," said LeClair. "My experience in the navy, business and healthcare has prepared me to make tough decisions. Unlike the 90s, money will be tight, cuts will have to be made. Like any successful officer or businessman, I will protect our essential services, such as education and health care and work to cut waste wherever I can find it."

Hull firefighters endorse Bradley

Garrett Bradley announced this week that the Hull Firefighters Local #1657 and the Massachusetts Correction Officers Federated Union have joined the list of Public Safety Unions to endorse his bid for re-election to the House of Representatives. Recently Bradley was endorsed by the State Police Association of Massachusetts, the Hull Police Local #344 and the Cohasset Police Association Local #641. Also endorsing Bradley this week were the United Food and Commercial Workers Union.

Bradley has "stood tall and firm on many issues that have benefited the working people of his district and the state of Massachusetts" stated Russell Regan, President Local #791 UFCW. "There is no substitute for the dedication, care and knowledge that Garrett has demonstrated during his service as a State Representative."

"I am honored to receive the endorsements of these organizations," stated Bradley. "These men and women work tirelessly to improve the quality of life in our communities and I look forward to working with them in the future."

Bradley was elected to the House of Representatives in 2000. During that time, he has distinguished himself as a strong, independent voice for our district. Bradley fought for and passed the Hull Police Technology Fund Bill to help modernize police equipment and acquire new crime-fighting technology. Bradley has fought for critical local issues such as more local control over Chapter 40B developments, additional funding for the school building assistance program and improvements to our local infrastructure. He has also stood up to House leadership to support the will of the voters by voting against a freeze in the income tax reduction as well as against attempts to kill the voter approved Clean Elections Law.

Scituate event set for Palmer

In a strong show of support for his campaign, Scituate residents host a reception for Nathaniel Palmer, Republican candidate for State Representative for North Scituate, Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. The reception will be Wednesday Oct. 23, from 7-9 p.m., at the Scituate Knights of Columbus Hall at 234 Chief Justice Cushing Highway.

"I have been overwhelmed by the support we have received from Scituate throughout this campaign," explains Palmer. "This latest event is one of several rallies we have held in the past few months. The response has been tremendous!"

With Scituate being new to the district, Palmer has spent much of his time during the campaign meeting with the residents of North Scituate and Minot, which make up Scituate's Precinct 3. Currently represented by Frank Hynes, Precinct 3 joins Palmer's 3rd Plymouth district as of January 2003.

The event on the 23rd is expected to draw nearly 100 residents from throughout Scituate and the surrounding area. The event will feature cocktails, a light dinner and desert, the chance to meet with the candidate, as well as with a number of current elected officials and Republican office holders who represent Scituate. Bradley, Palmer debate over debates

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

To debate or not to debate, that is the question.

Or is it?

Last week, the Massachusetts Republican Party issued a press release accusing incumbent state Rep. Garrett Bradley, a Democrat, of being "afraid to debate" Republican challenger Nathaniel Palmer.

It termed Bradley as "desperate to avoid discussing the issues."

A letter to the editor authored by Cohasset Resident Martha Gjesteby, a Palmer supporter, echoed the complaint in last week's Mariner.

But, Bradley says he has not ducked any debates and is ready to participate in a debate "anytime, anywhere."

In the press release, Jean Inman, the chairman of the Massachusetts GOP called Bradley's refusal to debate "…irresponsible for an incumbent legislator." It goes on to add that the Hingham League of Women Voters had offered to hold the debate.

But according to Helga Jorgensen, of the HLWV, that isn't true. She said the League had approached Community Newspaper Company (parent of the Cohasset Mariner) about tacking time on at the end of a debate the two parties hosted last night (Oct. 16) for Plymouth County District Attorney. But when that could not be worked out, there was no further discussion about a debate with Palmer/Bradley.

"Basically, when we asked CNC to include the state representative race they said no," said Jorgensen. "By the time we learned that it wasn't going to happen, it was too late for us to come up with a League debate."

Mark Skala, editor in chief for CNC/South, said he didn't think the DA debate was the appropriate forum for the state rep. debate. He went on to explain that CNC was hosting two debates this political season, but none were for state rep. (The other debate is Thursday, Oct. 24, between state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth and his challenger, Democrat Ted LeClair. The debate is at Hingham Town Hall auditorium at 7 p.m., co-sponsored with the league.)

"We were clear with the League back in September that we could only host two debates," Skala said. "Given we have a number of contested state rep. races in our South Shore geography, we didn't feel we could pull off debates for all of them, so we opted to do none. It wouldn't have been fair to host a Bradley/Palmer debate and not others in our area."

As for Bradley's willingness to participate, Jorgensen again contradicted the message of the Republican party press release.

"When I talked to Garrett Bradley, he was very busy," said Jorgensen. "But he said that yes, of course, he would debate."

Bradley was upset at the report.

"Number one, it is very unfortunate that my opponent has chosen to go negative, because he has nothing positive to say on the issues," said Bradley. "He is trying to grab headlines in the last few weeks of the campaign. If you are going to go negative, it is important to get the facts right, and these allegations are outright lies."

Bradley cited three debates, first on the "Grand Old Party" show in the Town of Hull last month; again on Oct. 3 in a Cohasset debate that was televised on local cable; and the third, an upcoming debate on WATD on Oct. 28 at 7 p.m.

"When I was contacted by the Hingham League of Women Voters about doing a debate, I said I was happy to participate in a debate, just let me know the date," said Bradley. "I was told that they were unable to schedule a debate in conjunction with the Community Newspaper Company and that that they didn't have the manpower to put it on themselves. I indicated to them that if that changes, I would be happy to debate anytime, anyplace."

Palmer, though, says he talked with Jorgensen Sept. 29 and she indicated to him that the League wasn't pursuing the debate because Bradley didn't want to participate. He also said his campaign was willing to stage the debate.

"The chair of my campaign, Janet Fogarty, offered to provide all the resources," said Palmer. "If he is willing to debate at any time, I'll call Garrett and find out when he is available."

Palmer is upset that there has yet to be a one-on-one debate between the candidates.

"He and I were on a television show together," said Palmer. "And the other debate ended up being a multi-candidate roundtable, not a one-on-one debate."

Palmer accused Bradley of manipulating the Cohasset debate so that the press would not be involved and there would be more candidates participating.

Bradley remained incredulous.

"I don't see how they can say I am refusing to debate," said Bradley. "I appeared on the 'Grand Old Party' cable television show in Hull, which is a Republican show. Somebody made a mistake, whether it was Nathan Little or Nathaniel Palmer and whoever it was should stand up and take responsibility for it."

Bradley, Palmer battle on campaign finance issues

By Brian J. Scully

Nathaniel Palmer

When voters go to the polls on Nov. 5 to elect their state representative (among other positions), they will consider the issues.

For many in the Third Plymouth District, Chapter 40B which is the state's affordable housing law, state aid for services, and the culture of Beacon Hill will be preeminent in their minds.

But how exactly does a candidate's message reach a potential voter?

One important factor is money, and the race for the Third Plymouth District seat is no exception.

Bradley, owner of the most expensive state representative campaign in Massachusetts political history (more than $126,000 in 2000), has again displayed his fundraising prowess, reporting that he has collected approximately $55,000 in his election coffers.

"It is critical for a candidate to reach as many voters as possible so that on Election Day the voters are able to make an informed decision as to who is the best candidate," said Bradley. "I was in the unique position two years ago, in that I had a strong challenge in the primary and in the general election, which in effect means that I had two elections in one year. If you break it down, it averages $55-60,000 per election." Bradley called that figure "average" for a state representative campaign.

Palmer, who raised approximately $15,000 for his campaign by his own estimate (not in including more than $16,000 of Palmer's own funds), sees the fundraising in a different light.

"Mr. Bradley has taken what I would characterize as an absurd amount of special interest money," said Palmer. "Where I have taken no special interest money, Bradley has taken about 70 percent of his money from outside the district, over 20 percent alone from trial lawyers and lobbyists. This does not serve the district."

But what is special interest money?

Palmer says that anyone from outside of the district who contributes to a campaign and "stands to benefit from influencing the legislature" qualifies for the special interest label.

"All of my money comes from friends, family and supporters," said Palmer. "Seventy-seven percent come from within the district, compared to 30 percent for Bradley, and that received from outside of the district is exclusively from family or friends." Those Palmer totals do not include his own contributions.

There is obviously a fine line though, because every person who contributes money to a candidate is seeking to influence the legislature in a way beyond the power of their single vote.

The Mariner conducted an investigation of the candidates' fundraising from Jan. 1 to Aug. 30, 2002, based on the documents obtained from the State Office of Campaign and Political Finance. The Mariner tallied the total amount of contributions from those who listed an in-district address when giving money. The state does not require candidates to report the individuals who donate under $50, only the total amount donated. The Palmer campaign reported all donations, but the Bradley campaign, in accordance with state regulations, included specific names only on amounts above $50.

From Jan. 1 to Aug. 30., Bradley raised $37,361. Bradley also had $29,849 prior to Jan. 1. Of that total, $3,310 came from small donations (under $50), which are typically from in-district residents. Since that $3,310 cannot be immediately identified via public records, that figure has not been included in this investigation.

With Bradley's total reduced to $34,051, 33 percent came from in-district residents, or $11,225. Of the rest of the contributions, $21,901 (65 percent) came from within the state of Massachusetts, and $925 (two percent) came from outside the state.

Palmer raised $27,903 during that same period, $16,643 (60 percent) of which came from his own money, and $5,930 (21 percent) of which came from in-district contributions. Not counting his own money, 52 percent of the total of $11,260 raised during that period came from in-district. Forty-eight percent came from out of district sources, most of whom are family and friends according to Palmer, who is originally from California.

During that period, Bradley outspent Palmer $50,126 to $24,677, which is almost exactly a 2-to-1 ratio.

The difference, according to Palmer, is that he has not "asked for, nor accepted any money from business associated, or business interests," a practice Palmer called "lucrative," but against what he believes in.

"For a gubernatorial campaign or another statewide race, it is appropriate to solicit and receive money from business interests (within the state) and others directly connected the state," said Palmer. "But a State Representative race is very different. Effectively, the State Representative is the person elected by the district to represent the District's interests on Beacon Hill."

Bradley, however, says that the issue is a non-factor. He says his objectivity has not been tainted by the source of his campaign funding.

Bradley points out the fact that he has gone against party lines to support Clean Elections, the voter approved tax cut, and against the leadership's tax package. He has also sponsored a plan that would have generated more than $1 billion to help close the budget gap and protect local services, a plan he said he will continue to fight for.

"I am beholden to only one group of individuals and they are the residents of this district," said Bradley. "In the year 2000, they elected me to represent them and their needs at the Statehouse. I have done my best to do just that."

Fiddler, singer at coffeehouse

On Saturday Oct. 19 at 8 p.m. the Old Ship Church's Coffeehouse off the Square presents the fiddling of Seamus Connolly and the songs and stories of singer/songwriter Scott Alarik.

Conńolly, the onetime Irish fiddling champion, is a very engaging performer and teacher as well as head of the Irish Studies program and Gaelic Roots Festival at Boston College. His playing goes from slow airs to high cadence dance tunes bringing many an audience to its feet.

Minnesotan Alarik has been collecting, writing and singing songs, and writing folk music criticism for many years. His mellow voice, often likened to stronger Burl Ives, and adept guitar playing deliver humorous and insightful songs without preaching.

The coffeehouse is at the Old Ship Church's fully accessible Parish Hall, 107 Main. St., Hingham Square a few doors up from the Loring Hall Theater.

Tickets are $10 at the door and coffees, teas, cider and homemade desserts are 50 cents. Net proceeds benefit programs of the Unitarian / Universalist Service Committee.

HSO concert benefits South Shore Hospital

Supporters of the South Shore Hospital will be the first to hear the talented musicians of the 2002-2003 Hingham Symphony Orchestra, at a benefit concert performed Friday, Oct. 18 at 8 p.m., in Sanborn Auditorium, at the Hingham Town Hall.

The fully-professional orchestra of more than 50 musicians, under the direction of conductor Jin Kim, will perform Dvorak's Carnival Overture, Ginastera's Variaciones Concertantes, and Brahms' Symphony No. 3.

Jane Frank, Scituate resident and volunteer with the South Shore Hospital Health and Educational Foundation, expressed gratitude to the HSO for their support. "What a wonderful opportunity to bring together two great South Shore resources, that serve the community on two different levels," said Frank. All proceeds from the concert will support patient services, through the Foundation's Promise Campaign.

Tickets to the benefit are available by calling 781-340-4061. $50 per person, or $75 with a pre-concert reception at Casa del Rey on Hingham Harbor.

Hingham Symphony will open its2002-2003 season the following night, Oct. 19 at 8 p.m. in Sanborn Auditorium, with the same program. Jin Kim will give a pre-concert lecture at 7:15, and the audience is invited to a post-concert reception. Tickets at $20 adults, $18 seniors, $10 through age 18 are available at the door, or call 781-740-5694.

New Community is So Dynamic, Convenient and Affordable,

It's Making 30 year-olds Wish They Were of Retirement Age

Introducing Linden Ponds at Hingham

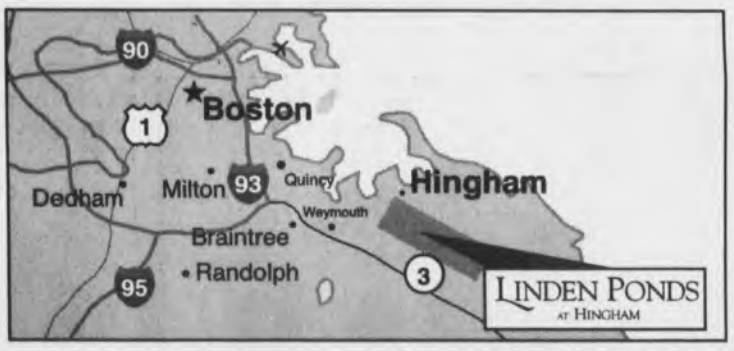
HINGHAM, MA — Erickson Communities, the gold standard for planned communities, is proud to announce its newest active lifestyle campus—Linden Ponds.

This beautifully planned, 100-acre community is currently being constructed in the historic, scenic town of Hingham—right in the heart of the South Shore.

Thousands of people travel from all over the country to experience the Erickson lifestyle. Fortunately for South Shore residents, now they have an Erickson campus right in their area, allowing them to take advantage of the unbeatable amenities, the bustling social life, and roomy, maintenance-free apartments. Linden Ponds promises to be your home and year-round vacation all rolled into one.

393,000 Retirees — But Only 100 Homes

There are 393,000 active retirees in a 25-mile radius of Linden Ponds. With so many in the South Shore area, there's a considerable shortage of quality options. Only 100 homes are currently being developed. That means, very soon, there will be a pressing demand among your friends and neighbors to reserve a home at Linden Ponds.



Apartments at Erickson Communities always sell out fast — and the reason is simple. Erickson knows how to combine the best of all worlds: elegance, excitement, convenience and affordability.

Your Multi-Million Dollar Clubhouse

Enjoy an endless list of conveniences and activities, including:

- A Fitness Complex with cardiovascular and strength training equipment
- An Aquatics Center with an indoor, all-season pool and hot tub
- A full-service restaurant and a casual café
- An on-site Medical Center with your personal physicians and specialists
- A bank
- A convenience store
- A hair salon and barbershop
- A billiards and games room
- On-campus classes
- Hobbies and crafts studio
- A computer room, with high speed Internet access

A 100% Refundable Deposit — A Solid Investment For Your Future

Erickson is the pioneer of the highly acclaimed 100% refundable deposit. It's a big reason why over 9,500 residents around the country have decided to call our campuses home.

The 100% refundable deposit is music to our residents' ears, because it offers a solid solution for careful, sensible retirement planning. How does it work? Your entrance deposit covers the cost of your apartment, plus it gives you access to all the unbeatable amenities. And because it is 100% refundable— to you or to your estate—your nest egg is fully protected.

Erickson's refundable entrance deposit is the creation of the company's founder, John Erickson, who made this innovative approach to securing retirees' hard-earned equity an ironclad feature of every Erickson community.

Now you can be fully confident that your retirement will also keep your estate safe and secure.

The Erickson Commitment to Excellence

Erickson has been building communities since 1983 and in the process, they've transformed the way Americans spend their retirement. Today, Erickson has built eight thriving communities—with three under development, including Linden Ponds.

In fact, Erickson recently received the prestigious Icons of the Industry Award from the National Association of Home Builders for "exemplary development of service-enriched senior housing." But as much as Erickson values this award, its greatest sense of pride comes from people like you, who choose to live on Erickson campuses and encourage their friends to do so, too.

Fortunately, now you have the opportunity to experience the Erickson difference. But remember, with all the demand, you'll need to act quickly. Call today for your FREE Information Kit:

Lady booters won't be satisfied to simply make tourney

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

For five years now, the current female senior soccer players have played under Deb Beal. They have paid their dues with five consecutive seasons of no more than four wins. This year, however, it appears the drought of playoff seasons is over.

"Last year, I said that if we could do it, then this would be the year," Beal noted. "Just look at the seniors I've got."

The Lady Skippers now stand at 6-6-1, with five games remaining. Although they need to win at least three more wins to officially clinch a berth, it has been made quite clear that nobody wants her team to squeak into the playoffs with a record just above sea-level.

Their next four games are against league opponents they have already beaten this year, and their final regular season game will pit them against local rival Scituate, a team to whom Cohasset lost a close 1-0 decision in the season opener. Beal reported if her team could "take care of business" — i.e. win out their final five — they may even land home-field advantage in the preliminary round.

"We don't want to be at the bottom," affirmed the coach. "We want to be up in the high .600's (winning percentage)."

Leading the way for the Lady Skippers has been junior Jen Buckley, who has emerged this year as a lethal scorer with the ability to shoot from a longer than normal range. She has accounted for nine of her team's 22 goals this year, while tallying three assists.

Yet, her numbers, as impressive as they are, can be attributed somewhat to the players surrounding her. Not one of Buckley's goals this year has been unassisted, and 11 players have recorded assists on this much more pass oriented team. Cohasset has four players who have scored multiple goals this year: Buckley, senior captain Molly Flanagan, and juniors Gillian Weber and Sarah McMorris. Even the defenders are helping with the scoring, with senior captain Julie Lordan recording three assists.

"There is huge camaraderie on this team," Beal noted. "There are no real superstars on this team. We communicate well, and we play well as a group. It's their time."

Although it may seem like a paradox, Beal connected the existence of a superstar on past teams to some of its shortcomings. In 1998 and 1999, Eileen Ridge shouldered the scoring load. In 2000 and 2001, Maggie O'Neill took control of the field. Yet the lack of someone as

Gridders stay perfect with 7-6 escape in Carver

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Skippers closed out the first half of their season with a hard fought 7-6 victory on the road over Carver, Friday night, a second quarter TD run by Braun Goodson and extra point boot by Tom Anderson proving just enough to keep the Skippers' record on the season perfect.

This was the South Shore League opener for both teams, so Cohasset is now 1-0 in league play and 5-0 overall.

A steady rain made for sloppy conditions down in "bog land," so it was hardly surprising that both teams relied heavily on the run.

Cohasset got on the board first midway through the second quarter. After an 18-yard punt return by senior John Durkin, a 7-yard pass reception by sophomore D.J. Silvia had 15-yards tacked on thanks to a roughing the passer penalty against Carver.

Halfback Braun Goodson (25 caries for 166 yards) then followed the right side of the offensive line — Matt Casey, Steve Davis, Cosimo Cambi — and the lead block of fullback Ted Straughn for a 21-yard touchdown romp. This was Braun's 10th touchdown of the season. Anderson added the extra point to give Cohasset a 7-0 lead early in the second quarter.

The host Crusaders responded immediately with a nine play scoring drive, a 5-yard touchdown pass from Keith Hooley to Mark Dowling capping it off with 36 seconds left in the half. However, the 2-point conversion pass failed, leaving the Skippers clinging to the 7-6 advantage.

Carver's offense never really threatened for the remainder of the game, whereas Cohasset had three additional opportunities to score. Unfortunately, the rainy

Field hockey team weathers rough stretch

By Jim Logan
CORRESPONDENT

The last five matches for the Cohasset field hockey team have been tough ones, as the Skippers have gone 0-5 during the stretch—bringing their record to 2-9-1 on the year.

But, the hometowners aren't hanging it up quite yet.

"We still believe we can make some good things happen," head Coach Deb Bostwick said. "We might be out of the tournament now (officially), but we can still be the spoilers for this year and, figure out some of the things we need to improve on for next season."

October 2nd vs. Norwell

Trying to jump back on a winning track in 2002, the Skippers took the field against the Clippers at Norwell, but wound up falling to the nearby town rivals, 1-0.

The loss marked the first time in several years that Cohasset was beaten was the Lady Clippers.

"We were just very flat," Coach Bostwick said of her team's play. "We were very passive."

October 4th vs. Harwich

Looking to bounce back from a rough Norwell match two days' earlier: the lady Skippers returned to Cohasset High for a meeting with the Rough Riders.

Though the locals were ultimately defeated, 6-0, by Harwich, Coach Bostwick stated she was very happy with the efforts given by the Skippers.

"My girls definitely held their own against an awesome Harwich team," Bostwick said. "The score didn't really [indicate] how tough we played them."

Starting in net for the Skippers: senior captain Sera Genovese did an admirable job despite an all-out Harwich offensive assault, stopping 21-of-26 Rough Ryders shots-on-goal. Sophomore netminder

Boys hit rock bottom

Soccer team needs to shake off shocking loss to Abington

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

They say that sometimes you have to hit rock bottom before meaningful change can take place.

Whether or not that's true and regardless of who "they" are, Cohasset boys soccer coach Dave Nigro certainly hopes his boys don't fall any lower than they did last Thursday with a 4-1 loss to Abington, and he clearly believes they should learn from it.

"Hopefully, that's a big wake up call," said the third year coach following this loss. "We just went out and tanked that one. We were making mistakes you thought we'd be done with in the preseason. It was just ugly."

This one was never close. The host Green Wave scored all three first half goals, two coming as a direct result of glaring defensive errors.

Chris Clark got the Skippers on the board early in the second half, but any thoughts of a dramatic comeback were extinguished when the hosts regained their three goal cushion not long thereafter.

The loss dropped the Skippers to 5-3-4 overall and 4-3-3 in South Shore League play. The win was just the second on the season for Abington, who the Skippers shutout in the first go-round three weeks ago.

weather played havoc with their execution of plays, including what would have been a touchdown pass slipping out of the receiver's hands in the end zone on the opening series of the game, a short pass sailing over the head of a wide open receiver in the end zone in the first series of the second half, and a fumble on Carver's 5-yard line with under two minutes to play to give the hosts one last shot at a winning drive.

Carver moved the ball over their own 30 yard line, but that was as far as they would advance, as junior tackle Steve Davis sacked Carver's quarterback for a loss on second down, and then junior d-back Mike Dooley intercepted the Crusaders third down pass at midfield to secure the victory.

An outstanding game was turned in by sophomore Matt Casey. Matt played offensively at center, opening up holes for Cohasset's running backs, who totaled over 200 yards rushing. Defensively, Matt played middle linebacker. He recorded six tackles, 1includign the first quarterback sack of the game.

Sophomore fullback Ted Straughn had his best offensive game of the season, contributing 40 yards rushing on seven carries, with several key first downs.

Senior Tom Anderson pinned the Crusaders deep in their own territory with his kickoffs and punts, while racking up eight tackles from his cornerback slot on defense.

Senior John Durkin handled the kick returns for the Skippers, and had a key 38-yard reception from senior QB Mike Snowdale for a first down late in the fourth quarter. He added five tackles from his safety position, including a touchdown saving takedown on Carver's first drive of the second half.

Junior defensive back Mike Dooley had five tackles to go along with his interception to ice the game.

Defensive linemen Ben Lynner, Nick Spirito, Sean Connolly and linebackers Cosimo Cambi, Tony Truglia, and defensive back Matt Davis also helped shut down the Crusaders.

Cohasset's defense forced an interception and five punts to end six of Carver's seven possessions.

Offensive left tackle Dan Tarpey and left guard Nick Arment teamed up with Casey, S. Davis, and Cambi to open the holes for both Goodson and Straughn. This duo combined to average over six yards a carry.

Defensive stats:

Tackles: Tom Anderson- 8, Matt Casey- 6, John Durkin and Mike Dooley- 5 each, Cosimo Cambi and Ben Lynner- 3 each, Steve Davis, Matt Davis, and Tony Truglia- 2 each, Nick Spirito, Sean Connolly and Ted Straughn- 1 each.

Quarterback sacks: Steve Davis, Matt Casey, and Sean Connolly.

Interceptions: Mike Dooley

Carver was 4-for-9 passing.

Offensive stats:

Passing: Mike Snowdale 3-for-8, 52 yards.

Receiving: John Durkin 2 for 45 yards, D J Silvia 1 for 7 yards.

Rushing: Goodson 25 carries for 166 yards, Straughn 7 for 40 yards.

Fumbles Recovered: Goodson 2, Snowdale 1

Miscellaneous:

Carver had seven offensive possessions, five ending with a punt, one with an interception, and one touchdown pass.

Cohasset had eight offensive opportunities, two ending with a punt, two on failed fourth down conversions, two by the clock, one by fumble, and one rushing touchdown.

The next game is tomorrow, Friday, Oct. 18, at Mashpee High School.

MAXLAX REPORT

Game of the Week: U14 Bulldogs edge Blades, 11-10

By Curt Mills
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Usually, the late game is somewhat laid back, but this contest refused to provide the crowd with a restful backdrop as the non-stop action showcased "full-season" form on both sides of play.

Jake Cuneo, one of the more physically "imposing" defenseman from the Blades, started off the scoring with a well executed middie-back play that put the home team on the board with a fast break goal. The Bulldogs quickly responded when Bennett Boucher tied it up when he finished off his own an end-to-end rush and then the 'Dogs went ahead on some great ball movement that resulted in a tally from Colin Dwyer on an assist from Andrew Johnson.

After some nice defensive play on both sides, Mark Flibotte notched the first of his six points on the night (5G/1A) with a "scoop and shoot" that found the back of the net after a scramble in front of the Bulldog's cage. The league's top scorer, Jake Minwitz, then took his cue and netted the first of his 6 points (4G/2A) to keep the Blades in check.

After a hard-hitting exchange at center field that resulted in a frenzied ground ball drill, Johnson found Patrick Day alone on the crease for another Bulldog score. This tandem then reversed the combination when Day found Johnson coming up on the back side of the cage for to close out the first half with the Bulldogs up by three, 5 – 2.

Flibotte was obviously getting anxious to get "on with it" as he opened the second half with a gorgeous quick stick off of well executed face-off possession.

The Minwitz show then went into high gear with three unanswered goals that left the Blades a little dazed and confused and had some of the fans thinking that the lateness of the hour had finally settled in. But, as in the past, this Blades team only gets better when they get down "a few" and with Flibotte throwing in another goal and an assist, they went on a tear of their own with scores from 4 different players: Alex Shipp, Justin Connors, Chris Rose, and Ryan Mitchell with assists from Chris Mills and Evan Deutsch.

During this barrage, the Bulldogs managed to stem the tide for a moment with Mark Cheney getting his first of the season on a pass through traffic by (guess who ?) Minwitz. With the score now even at 9 – 9 and the clock winding down, the intensity picked up a notch as both sides knew this one was coming down to the wire. With 2 minutes remaining, Minwitz finished off a fabulous night by feeding his scoring partner Johnson to take the lead, but this sense of victory was short-lived as "Big Jake" Cuneo found Flibotte wide open on the left side for the tying banger as time ran out.

The first sudden death period was punctuated with near misses and some very physical and aggressive defense that stymied both teams, but clearly showed that neither one was ready to go into the night peacefully. As the second OT wore on, the pace continued at both ends until this thriller was decided with a pro-level offensive move from behind the net by Johnson, that drew the double team and left Dwyer open on the crease for the one-timer and the victory. It just doesn't get any better than this . . .

SPORTS NOTES

Trendowicz named TopGun laxer of the week

Cohasset 8th grader Dan Trendowicz scored six goals and added three assists this week to earn "Player of the Week" honors from TopGun Lacrosse in Plymouth.

While Dan was a solid player last year, he has truly emerged as a force this season. He leads the league in goals (26) and assists (7), and has nearly three times as many points as the second leading scorer.

As most in town know, Dan is playing with special inspiration this season. It almost seems fitting that week in and week out, Dan's stat line looks like it should be for two players. Because, in a sense, it is.

Wakeman earns pair of honors

Cohasset's Neely Wakeman, a senior at William Smith College (and graduate of Holderness School), earned a pair of weekly honors this past week. On the strength of an 11-point week, the field hockey defender was named the Upstate Collegiate Athletic Association (UCAA) Player of the Week and the Rochester Area College Athletics (RACA) Female Athlete of the Week.

Wrestling clinic offered

The Cohasset Recreation Department announces that Torin Sweeney, head CHS wrestling coach will offer a 12-session, fall wrestling clinic for area students in grades seven to 12. Classes will meet each Monday and Thursday from 6-8 p.m.

The first class and registration was held Monday, Oct. 7 at Cohasset High School's new, all-purpose Sports Room at 6 p.m.. The fee for the 12 sessions is $50 per participant.

Questions regarding this unique wrestling opportunity may be directed to the recreation office at 781-383-4109.

This program is open to Cohasset as well as area students from surrounding towns. The program will end on Thursday, Nov. 21.

Registration For Max Lax 2nd Session

MaxLax, is now accepting team and individual player registrations for the second session of indoor lacrosse at the South Shore Sports Center. Play begins on November 8th and is open to all boys youth players in grades 3 thru 8. Based on the popularity of this new local program, space will definitely be limited, so please call us directly at 781/383-0413 or visit our Website at www.maxlax.net for more information on our program and to reserve your spot on the field for the next session.

Change in CHS admission prices

There has been a change in the game admission prices for South Shore League games this season. Admission for adults will be $4 and students and seniors will be admitted for $3.

Discount tickets

Student Pass: Students can purchase a year-long athletic event pass. The passes are only good for on-campus home events. The cost is $25.

Adult Pass: Parents and fans can purchase 10 event tickets. The passes are only good for on-campus, home events. The cost is $25.

The discounts tickets may be purchased from Mr. Ford's in the Athletic Director's office or from Mr. Leary at the gate on game days.

Changes to Alumni Field

Due to the ongoing construction project there will be some changes to Alumni Field.

Parking: Please park in the main parking lot in front of the school. Additional parking will be available along the entrance driveway by the main office and at Milliken Field, handicap parking will be available in the main parking lot on the right as you enter the lot.

Please do not park on Bancroft Extension (the road which leads to the visitors side gate) and along the driveway that leads from the lower lot to the main entrance of the school.

Entrance: There will be two entrances available. One entrance will be on the visitor's sideline behind the visitor's sideline. There will also be a temporary access entrance this will allow spectators to enter Alumni Field from the main parking onto the track.

Restrooms: There will be two portable restrooms on the visitors sideline adjacent to the bleachers. Indoor restrooms will also be open in the front entrance of the High School.

Concessions: A temporary concession stand will be set up on Alumni Field in the scoreboard end of the field for night games and home football games.

both of their senior captains for the game, but Nigro did not feel this was an adequate excuse for the performance of the players who were in attendance.

"I think we have more talent than that on this team than to fall apart because we don't have a couple of players," said Nigro earlier this week. "Some of our guys might have been using that as an excuse. We should have everyone back for (yesterday's scheduled game at Carver), though, so hopefully that will help. There's no more excuses now."

Through the first eight games of this season, the Skippers were unbeaten, 3-0-3 in South Shore League play and 4-0-4 overall. They've now lost three of their last four, including two league games. Subsequently, the state tourney berth that was once looking all but a formality is now on shaky ground.

In order to qualify for a third straight post-season berth, the Skippers need to compile four points in their final six games — a win counting two points, a tie one.

If his Skippers were playing the way they were earlier in the season, Nigro would have felt pretty good about their chances against Chatham and Hull, teams they beat by a combined score of 12-1 earlier in the season, as well as against winless Scituate (0-8-4), but confidence is understandably not real high for the coach at the moment.

"The kids have got to want to start playing good soccer again," said Nigro. "They've shown they can do it, but they're the ones who have to get back to it.

"They've got to concentrate on what they're supposed to be doing. It's fundamental errors they've been making. This is late in the season. They should be physically fit now. They should all know the game plan. Each player just has to go out and do his job."

Haranguing aside, there were a couple of players whose recent play the coach made a point of lauding, most notably defenders Coner Buick, Craig Laugelle and Andrew Busk.

"Overall, the defense has been pretty sound," he said. "Coner has been doing a real solid job, and Andrew Busk's last few games have been really strong, his best of the year. Craig is a player who has been so steady I haven't said his name a lot. But he's done a real nice job."

Yesterday's scheduled game at home versus first place Carver (5-1-1, 7-3-1), who the Skippers tied 1-1 back on Sept. 24 in Carver, was postponed by rain. That game could be made up today or early next week.

The next game on the schedule is tomorrow's tilt with Harwich on the road. The fourth place Skippers tied the third place Rough Ryders (3-1-4, 7-1-4) at home on Sept. 26 after surrendering a 3-1 second half lead.

Either one of these opponents would be good for shaking the Skippers out of the current doldrums, according to Nigro.

"We need to get back on the field in a good competitive situation," concluded the coach, "and the sooner the better. The kids don't need to think about what they have to do; they just have to do it."

'Autumn Season'at Widow's Walk began Oct. 15

Widow's Walk's Autumn Season begins Tuesday, October 15, and this means additional savings on weekends* for both Scituate residents and non-resident golfers at the popular South Shore course.

The cost for 18 holes on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays during this period for residents drops from $35 to $27 and for non-residents from $42 to $32.

The 9-hole green fees on weekends drops from $18 to $16 for residents and from $22 to $19 for non-residents.

Current weekday rates, Monday thru Friday, remain in effect for the rest of the season: $22 and $14 for Scituate residents and $27 and $17 for non-residents.

*Note: Fridays are regarded as weekdays during Shoulder & Autum Seasons.

Caitlin Condon then stepped in for the second-half and responded nicely, shying away 2-of-3 Harwich SOG during her stint.

Defensively, Cohasset's endeavor was led by the play of Sarah Dennis, Rachel Doyle, Frannie Noble, and Kimmy Ulmner.

October 7th vs. Hull

Anxious to put up another 'W' for the 2002 campaign, the Skippers traveled to Hull hoping to accomplish that very feat.

Up 2-0 at the break, Cohasset came within a second-half "breath" of making their ambition become reality, but broke down in the latter frame and had to settle for the 2-2 tie with the Pirates.

"We lost [momentum] in the second half for some reason," Coach Bostwick stated. "In the first (period), everything was going right for us, everything was clicking. Then, for some reason we started getting passive again and Hull was able to capitalize on it and tie us up."

Deanna Brown and Courtney Caron scored the goals for Cohasset in the equalizing effort, with Brown and Danielle Pinkus picking up assists in the match.

October 8th vs. Mashpee

After seeming as though the 'win drought' could be over following the strong contest against Hull, the Lady Skippers instead fell back a step versus Mashpee, losing to the Falcons by a heartbreaking 1-0 final.

"We were very evenly matched the rest of the way, but our passiveness again in the first half killed us," Coach Bostwick said. "It was too bad because, if we could have had the same intensity we showed in the second half in the beginning, we probably had a good chance to win this one."

Sarah Dennis and Rachel Doyle were again solid on the 'D' side of things for Cohasset; the culprit for the Skippers on this day was a quiet offense, as the locals managed only 10 shots-on-goal (compared to Mashpee's 21 SOG).

October 11th vs. Carver

Things can be bad enough when you're in a slump; they can be even worse when you're in a rut—heading into a matchup with a very solid team.

That was the case last Friday, as Cohasset took on the Crusaders of Carver at home. The Crusaders were eventual 2-0 winners on the afternoon.

"I'll tell you, it's not like these kids can work any harder, because right now they're playing their hearts out," Coach Bostwick commended of her team's recent play. "We're making the right moves and we're playing very solidly for the most part all around. We just could really use some of that Lady Luck that seems to be going against us to come our way."

Junior Caitlin Condon started between the pipes for Cohasset, and held things close as she swept away 7-of-8 shots in the first half. Sera Genovese then stepped in to take over the goaltending duties in the second frame, almost mirroring her counterparts' performance (11 saves on 12 shots-on-goal).

Up and down the 'D' side of play, the Skippers received yeoman-like performances from its roster. Along with the usual assistance of names like Sarah Dennis, Rachel Doyle and Frannie Noble, Cohasset was helped by the works of people such as Kelly Hurley, Holly Dinsmore and Heather Peraino.

The problem for Cohasset—as it has been for the balance of this 2002 season—offense.

"We're just unable to find the net," Bostwick stated. "On the other side of the field, we're playing very well. We just need to get a few (scoring) bounces to get us rolling there."

The Lady Skippers will search for those "bounces" this week, as Cohasset takes on Norwell, Silver Lake and Harwich.

Field Hockey Notes

Head Coach Deb Bostwick wanted to thank Mr. Brown of Brown Imports on Rt. 3A for his help with the Cohasset Skippers car wash fundraiser on Monday afternoon. The fundraiser, which is used to purchase necessities for the team throughout the school year, raised almost $600 this year.

We really owe a tremendous thanks to Mr. Brown at Brown Imports," Bostwick said. "He was very generous and very helpful with our fundraiser, supplying us with pretty much all the things we needed to make the car wash a success."

dominating on the field as these two girls on the current squad has forced a greater number of players to step up.

On top of their selfless team concept, Cohasset's schedule also has helped the team stand poised for late season success. The squad actually started off the season a disappointing 0-3, with consecutive one-goal losses in Norwell, Mashpee and Scituate.

However, eight of their final 10 games will be played at Alumni Field, and Cohasset is now riding the momentum of a run of 10 games where their record has been 6-3-1.

Local coaches and doctor to form a new running club

Chuck Martin, cross country and track coach at Norwell High. George Rose, cross country and track coach at Sacred Heart in Kingston, and Dr. Thomas W. Vorderer, a podiatrist in Norwell, would like to announce the formation of a running club open to those of all abilities and age. The first meeting will be held on Tuesday, Oct. 7, at Norwell High Track, starting at 6 p.m.

"We have all seen the need for a club that provides quality coaching for those who desire some direction in their training," said Chuck Martin. "The three of us have individually wanted to do something like this for awhile. Collectively, we have pooled our ideas with the hopes of forming a really unique club."

"For years I have seen runners come in with injuries that could be prevented with just some sound coaching," said Dr. Vorderer. "It is our hope to have a club that provides this coaching, as well as information that will ultimately lead to less injuries and a more enjoyable running experience."

"We are not going to be a club just for the elite runners," added George Rose. "On the contrary, we want any runner, either competitive or not, to be able to gain from being a member of this club. The club will also bring in individuals to speak on topics of interest such as nutrition and cross country training, to name a few. This will provide the club members a link to the sports medicine community and help them reach their desired goals."

It was a wonderful opportunity for the three of us to use our collective experience for the betterment of others." said Dr. Vorderer.

"Each of us has had the opportunity not only to run at a very high level of competition, but also to be coached by some of the best people the sport has to offer."

Chuck Martin is track and cross country coach at Norwell High. He resides in Norwell. His teams have won several state titles and accumulated several Globe and Herald All-Scholastic achievements.

In 1994 he was named the Boston Globe Coach of the Year. At Medford High, he was the state mile champ and a Boston Globe All-Scholastic. At the University of Massachusetts at Boston he was a national caliber cross country runner and excelled at the 10,000 meters on the track. He has also been the race director for Evan's Run in Norwell for the past two years.

Thomas W. Vorderer, D.P.M. is a podiatrist who practices at Children's Hospital, Boston, in the Division of Sports Medicine. He also has an office in Norwell. He resides in Norwell, with his wife and two children. His running began at Weymouth North High and continued at Westfield State College, Marquette University.

He held school records at each institution. While running for the University of Chicago Track Club, he was a member of their national cross country team that placed fifth at the TAC Nationals in the Meadowlands, N.J.

George Rose is the cross country and track coach at Sacred Heart in Kingston. He resides in Kingston. While in high school at Weymouth South High School, he was a Boston Globe All-Scholastic in the two mile. He continued his running at Bates College and then with clubs in the Boston area. He has also coached at Notre Dame in Hingham, where he was also a globe All-Scholastic cross country coach.

For more information, call Chuck Martin at 781-659-4033, Dr. Vorderer at 781-659-3443, or George Rose at 781-659-3443.

Partnership takes healthy approach to suicide prevention

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Clinical psychologist Barbara Green of Cohasset saw a disturbing trend among South Shore teenagers several years ago and knew she had to do something about it.

"I did four consults in one week at South Shore Hospital with youngsters who had made suicide attempts, the last two of which were 12-year-old girls," Green said.

That was 1994.

"I had one of those professional moments," she said. "I just got grabbed. It really started raising questions in my head like, 'What are we not doing in terms of prevention?'"

Green's effort to work with these troubled teens grew into a program called the Adolescent Suicide Prevention Project. The program grew even bigger and is now part of a larger initiative called the South Shore School Partnership for Health.

The Partnership is two-pronged. One of its elements is suicide prevention. The other aspect of the program deals with health for school-age children. Green, a clinical psychologist at Whiting Place in Hingham and a member of the staff at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth, runs the suicide program. Kim Noble, an RN at the South Shore VNA, takes care of the school health part, which she founded. Both programs are made possible with the support of South Shore Hospital.

Noble said the school health aspect of the program entails school nurses meeting about five times a year to talk about health issues in schools around the South Shore. The group also hosts four educational seminars per year.

"We talk about the issue of the moment," Noble said, adding some of the topics include things like peanut allergies, inhalant abuse and nutrition.

Many school officials and others in the community have realized the value of the Partnership. Norwell was one of the school systems that got involved with the program early on.

Missy Gerety, the Director of Social Health for the Norwell school system, helped create "Suicide Prevention Day," a program now heavily utilized within the suicide prevention project.

"It's basically a peer training program," Green said of Suicide Prevention Day. She said the program entails taking 7-10 students from four different schools around the South Shore and bringing them to a location to hear experts talk about suicide.

After the students have heard the presentation, they are asked to take the information they have just absorbed and turn it into a skit on suicide. After that, they're asked to present the skits for the other groups and they are also asked to take those skits back to their own schools to perform them to spread the important message that suicide is just not worth it. Suicide Prevention Day is held on a semi-annual basis.

"That program has been incredibly wonderful to watch," Green said. "If we can get the message out to students that it's OK to get help, that will de-stigmatize that whole process. And the kids seem to love it."

The school health piece of the puzzle came to be in 1996. Green and Noble eventually decided to merge both of their programs into one.

"It made sense in terms of utilization of resources," Green said.

When asked about the program's effectiveness since its inception, Noble said, "We get good feedback from those people who come to the meetings. If they didn't feel they were getting useful information, they wouldn't keep coming."

"It's hard to measure the level of success," Green added. "For lack of funding, we have not been able to do hardcore research and collect data."

But Green is satisfied with how the program has grown since she first founded the suicide prevention project, and she is glad some school systems are utilizing the program.

"It has continued to evolve and strengthen," Green said. "If money were not an issue, I would try to do more consulting within schools. But the health care community is under so much financial pressure and these kinds of programs are not where the health care dollar is spent."

board.. He decided to step aside once the North Cohasset sewer project was underway and the Central district and plant expansion were approved.

"We're here!" Guild said in an April 1999 interview, with the energy and enthusiasm of someone half his age. "We're over the problems with the state and we're over the problems with the town, too."

But what many Cohasseters may not recall is the town spent 20 years in a legal wrangle with the state while the Sewer Commission, in particular Guild, spent countless hours working out an agreement and explaining the projects to a sometimes hostile citizenry.

Board of Health Chairman Steve Bobo said few realize the magnitude of Guild's accomplishments.

"Ted gave of himself in a unique way," Bobo said. "His grasp of modern filtration technology enabled the Sewer Commission to transform Cohasset's waste management problem into an elegant, efficient cost effective and clean solution to what is a nagging problem for most towns of our size.

"This may not seem to be much but few in our town have done better things for Cohasset," Bobo said.

Sewer Commissioner Gary Vanderweil worked closely with Guild for more than 20 years on the sewer projects. They were also friends and often played tennis together.

"Ted was always looking out for the town's best interest," Vanderweil said. "He was indefatigable in his pursuit of any goal he set for himself.

"He was a great guy who was always upbeat and saw the glass as half full, not half empty. I'll miss him."

Guild, who grew up in Hingham, "officially" retired in 1987 from Ionics, Inc. in Watertown where he was vice president of the company that manufactured desalination equipment. He continued to serve as a consultant for four years, but then gave it up because it took too much time away from Cohasset's sewer projects.

Over the years, Guild spent as much as 60-70 hours a week working on sewer plans. He even spent one Christmas as the sewer plant when there was a personnel problem. He also worried over-development would hurt the character of Cohasset because developers are often right behind a sewer line.

Guild felt good about what the Sewer Commission accomplished.

"We've handed the citizens something that is still a lovely New England town while at the same time protecting the environment," he said in the 1999 interview.

Guild also enjoyed collecting maritime paintings and being treasurer of the Society of Cincinnati, whose members are descended from officers who served in the American Revolution.

He was a Harvard College graduate and a big follower of Harvard football.

"Dad went to a lecture on Harvard football and he raised his hand to say, 'Excuse me but you have the score wrong,'" recalls Juliette Reid, Guild's daughter.

"He also loved marine art and loved looking out at Minot Light from home," she says.

Julie Guild says her husband felt very fortunate to have lived a long life and said he had a lot to be thankful for.

"He was so courageous," she said about his battle with terminal cancer. "He said, 'All I want is a comfortable landing."

"I'm a very lucky person," Mrs. Guild said. "We had a wonderful time together. Ted was great fun and had a great zest for life."

Ted Guild, shown here in an April 1999 photograph at his Jerusalem Road home after he stepped down from the Sewer Commission, loved the ocean and collecting maritime paintings. He passed away last week at the age of 80.

OBITUARIES

Edward M. Guild

Edward M. (Ted) Guild, 80, of Cohasset, formerly of Hingham died at his home in Cohasset on Oct. 10, after a brief illness.

Born, in Boston, Mr. Guild attended Derby Academy in Hingham and was a graduate of Exeter Academy and Harvard College, Class of 1944. He was captain of the Harvard Wrestling Team and a member of the Fly Club.

During World War II, he served in the U.S. Navy in the Pacific with the Third Fleet as navigator of a destroyer participating in the Philippines, Iwo Jima and Okinawa Campaigns.

In 1955 he joined Ionics, Inc. of Watertown, a firm specializing in water desalination where he served as a vice president in charge of International Sales until his retirement. A major portion of his time was spent in the Middle East.

He was a member of the Society of the Cincinnati in New Hampshire and served as their long time treasurer. Mr. Guild was in elected member of the Cohasset Sewer Commission for 17 years serving as chairman for 10 years.

Husband of Juliette (Day) Guild of Cohasset, he leaves three sons; Edward M. "Ned" Guild of Hingham, Thomas S. Guild of Belmont, Warner D. Guild of Hopkinton and a daughter, Juliette G. Reid of Brookline; seven grandchildren.

A memorial service will be conducted on Thursday, Oct. 17, at 3 p.m. at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, 172 Main St., Hingham.

Visiting hours and flowers omitted by request. In lieu of flowers, donations may be made in his memory to the Church of St. John the Evangelist or to Hospice of the South Shore, P.O. Box 859060, Braintree, MA 02185-9060.

The interment was private.

Arrangements were handled the Downing Cottage Funeral Chapel, Hingham.

Susan S. DeMichele

Susan S. DeMichele, a prominent artist and South Shore resident, died on Friday, Oct. 11, 2002, in her home in Cohasset. She was 56.

Mrs. DeMichele was born in Utica, N.Y. in 1946. After attending Cortland State College for a degree in education, she pursued her true passion for art. She attended the Fine Arts program at Boston University. She continued to learn even after she had received her Fine Arts degree, taking additional courses at the Museum School and Kansas City Art Institute.

Following the receipt of her Fine Arts degree, Susan devoted most of her time early in her career to raising her three children, Daniel, Marnie and James. Although it limited her time with her pallet and easel, it did not stop her growth and accomplishment as a landscape/seascape artist.

Her paintings and pastel drawings are included in many private collections; she also has won many awards and prizes in juried shows throughout New England. Her work is included as part of the permanent collection in the Ogunquit Museum in Maine. Susan's love for the outdoors, along with her eye for the earth's natural colors, allowed her to capture beautiful landscapes and seascapes of the New England coastline. Her loose, almost impressionistic style, broad/bold brush strokes, and bright and vivid colors became easily recognizable throughout the region. Her love for the South Shore scenery was only rivaled by her love for Maine, where she and her husband planned to move for the summers.

A 23 year resident of Cohasset, Ms. DeMichele was active in school art programs, served on the board of the sailing club, and devoted many hours to community activities.

Along with her husband of 32 years, Donald, she leaves a daughter, Marnie, and two sons, Daniel and James. She also leaves her mother, Ethel Smith of Utica, N.Y., a sister, Margaret Parry of Tallahassee, Fla., and two brothers, Roger Smith of Lake George, N.Y., and Carl Smith of Fayetteville, N.Y.

A memorial service will be held on Friday, Oct. 18 at 11 a.m. at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., on the Cohasset Common. Donations may b given to the American Cancer Society.

Lyle E. Branagan

A funeral Mass for Lyle Edward Branagan was celebrated at St. Anthony Church in Cohasset who died Oct. 7, 2002 at home at age 77.

Mr. Branagan, a retired civil engineer for Metcalf & Eddy in Boston. He was previously a professor at Northeastern University and worked for Charles T. Main Co. in Boston.

Born in Rochester, N.Y., he received a bachelor's degree from Brown University in Rhode Island in 1950 and a master's degree from Harvard in 1954. He had lived in Cohasset 34 years and served on the town's drainage committee.

Mr. Branagan was an Army veteran of World War II serving in the 750th Field Artillery Battalion.

He leaves his wife of 45 years, Elizabeth J. Buddlington) Branagan; his three sons, Lyle of Gastonia, N.C., Peter of Hingham and James of New York; his daughter, Katherine Branagan of Natick; two stepbrothers, John and William Branagan, bot of New York; and his 10 grandchildren.

Following the funeral Mass at St. Anthony's, interment was held in Beechwood Cemetery, Cohasset.

Funeral arrangements were made by the McNamara Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Donations may be made to the St. Joseph's Indian School, North Main St., Chamberlain, S.D. 57326.

James R. Paterson

James R. Paterson, 85, of Cohasset, a former bartender at the Red Lion in Cohasset and a World War II veteran, died Oct. 10, 2002 following a brief illness.

Mr. Paterson had also tended bar at the Veterans of Foreign War Satuit Post in Scituate.

He was born in Rumford, Maine.

He served in the Bismark Archipelago, East Indies and in New Guinea in the 2585th Army Air Force base unit. He was awarded the American Defense Service Medal, the Asiatic Pacific Service Medal and the Distinguished Unit Badge. He was a member of both the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion.

He leaves his wife of 50 years, Elsie C. (Lutz) Paterson; his daughter, Patricia J. Vincent of Roxbury, Vt.; a stepdaughter, Barbara A. (DelSasso) Carlson of Marshfield; a brother, Edward Paterson of Rumford, Maine; a sister, Jean Bogins of Heartland, Maine and Florida; his three grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

A graveside service was held in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Funeral arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Donations may be made in Mr. Paterson's memory to Coffee Kids, 1305 Luisa St., Santa Fe, N.M 87505; or to the National Kidney Foundation, 129 Morgan Drive, Norwood 02062.

Historical Society lectures series

• Thursday Oct. 17: Betsy Friedberg, National Register Director of the Massachusetts Historical Commission, will speak about what the National Register program is (and what it is not), why it is a useful program, and what sorts of resources. qualify for listing. She will present examples (with slides) of the kinds of stories that historic resources can tell about our past. Lightkeepers' residence 7:30 p.m.

• Wednesday Oct. 30: Jerusalem Road Revisited "The most prominent feature of the town, that by which we are most widely known in the world, as Jerusalem Road, along which so many delightful summer homes have been built overlooking the sea." So E. Victor Bigelow wrote over a century ago in his "Narrative History of Cohasset, Massachusetts."

This remains as true today as it was when written in the 1890s. The Victorian mansions of Jerusalem Road will be featured in a slide presentation by David Wadsworth, the Society's Historian. Lightkeepers' residence, 7:30 p.m. Both events are free, light refreshments will be served.

Fall barn sale at fire museum

A fall barn sale will take place at Bare Cove Fire Museum on Saturday, Oct. 26 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at 19 Fort Hill St., rain or shine. Donations are gratefully accepted; please call 781-749-0028.

The Bare Cove Fire Museum has a history of supporting the cost of the non-profit museum by holding a bi-annual barn sale in a storage building in Bare Cove Park. Items for sale include skis and poles, books, records (78s and other sizes), tapes, speakers, dishes, furniture, toys, puzzles, clothes, computer games, tools, art, holiday decorations, sports equipment and household appliances. Aside from raising money on the day of the barn sale, museum members will be on hand to answer questions you may have about the history of firefighting in Hingham.

The museum's neighbor, the South Shore Model Railroad Club is having an open house the same day. Everyone is welcome to both venues!

Halloween fair

Pumpkins and cornstalks are appearing at local farm stands. Orange and black decorations are showing up in stores and plans are being conjured up for the South Shore Community Center Nursery School's annual Halloween Fair.

This year's fair will take place on Cohasset Common on Oct. 27, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. a South Shore tradition for more than 30 years, the fair offers Halloween fun for the entire family. Spooks and cartoon characters of all shapes, sizes and ages are encouraged to begin preparing to join in the howlish fun.

For more information about the fair or the programs of the South Shore Nursery School, contact the Nursery School at 781-383-0036.

Series for children of older parents

Cohasset Elder Affairs presents the final session in an educational series for children of aging parents titled "A Seminar for Elders and Caregivers" Wednesday evening at 3 North Main St. From 6-6:30 p.m. a light supper will be served, 6:30 8:30 p.m., program. Donation of $10 is requested. Call 781-383-9112.

• Oct. 23: "Confronting a Tough Issue!" (Preventing elder fraud, dishonest caregivers). Speakers: Dorothy Anne Vitale, Norfolk County Director of Senior Initiatives; David Raftery, Assistant District Attorney, Norfolk County.

Speaker series

On Friday, Oct. 18, Bob Whitney of Hingham, a senior vice president at Trigen Boston Energy and a member of The National Speakers' Association speaks nationally to a variety of groups on motivational, leadership and spiritual topics. Bob has his own news column in the Mariners, Good Vibes, and will be addressing the topic of one of his latest columns; "Hurry, Hurry, Hurry." Why have we become too preoccupied and have settled for less as a society? Come listen and learn from noon to 1 p.m. at the South Shore Art Center. For more information call 781-383-0771.

Books Cook program

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for first-and-second-graders' "Books Cook" program by calling 781-383-4109.

Books Cook for grades one and two will be held from 3:15 -4:45 p.m. on Wednesdays starting Oct. 23. It will be held at the Joseph P. Osgood School. Children will enjoy making bread boas after reading "The Day Jimmy's Boa Ate the Wash" or making candy houses after reading "Hansel and Gretel," as example.

The program will be five weeks in duration and costs $55 per child. Programs start Oct. 23 and continue through Nov. 20. Each week will feature different books and cooking.

For information, details and registration, call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 781-383-4109.

Hingham Symphony announces season

The 2002-2003 symphony season begins in October, and Hingham Symphony has announced an eighth-month program that brings classical music to audiences on the South Shore. With the continuing leadership of Music Director Jin Kim, the HSO has developed an orchestra composed of more than 50 of graduate student and professional musicians from the conservatories in Boston, as well as a number of local professionals.

The opening concert of the season will take place on Saturday, Oct. 19 at 8 p.m. at Sanborn Auditorium in the Hingham Town Hall. On the program are Dvorak's festive Carnival Overture, Ginastera's Variaciones Concertantes, and Brahm's passionate Symphony No. 3. Jin Kim will give a pre-concert explanation of the program at 7:15 p.m. All are invited to meet the musicians at a reception after the concert. On Oct. 18, HSO will perform the same program as a benefit concert for South Shore Hospital.

For more information, to receive a brochure, or to buy tickets, please call the HSO at 781-740-5694.

GLORIOUS MUSIC

The glorious music of Candide is being rehearsed by the Unicorn Singers with Ed Bartholomew and Diane Mullen (Hingham) in front, surrounded by Cohasset singers Jane Forrer, Jo-An Heileman, Amy Martin, Leah Kisiel and other talent from around the South Shore. Variety and vitality abound in a dazzling mix of Broadway, classical, folk, barbershop and vocal jazz at this weekend's big FALL GALA CONCERT by the Unicorn Singers and Broad Cove Chorale. Performances are at 8 pm Oct 19 and 20 at House of Prayer in So.Hingham. Tickets (which include a gourmet reception) are $25 at Nobles in Hingham Square or Cards & Shards in Cohasset, or call 781-749-6561 for reservation.

Marc Brown at Buttonwood Books

Marc Brown will sign his latest book, "Arthur, It's Only Rock 'n' Roll" (Little Brown, $15.95) at Buttonwood For Kids in Hingham on Sat., Nov. 2 from 2 – 3:30 p.m. Arthur wants to be in on the action when Francine decides to form a rock band that will be "a million times better than the Backstreet Boys." But Arthur doesn't make it through auditions, and Francine chooses Molly, Binky, Fern and Mrs. MacGrady instead. Then the Backstreet Boys come to Elwood City and change everything! Brown is the author and illustrator of 26 titles in the best-selling Arthur Adventure book series, and of a second book series, featuring D.W., Arthur's little sister, as well as numerous other books for children. This is a free event and the public is most welcome. Please call 781-749-2665 to order your signed copy if unable to attend. To give everyone a chance to meet Mr. Brown, Buttonwood must request that no books be brought from home.

Illustrator at Buttonwood

Giles Laroche, illustrator, presents his latest work, "Who Sees The Lighthouse" (G.P. Putnam's Sons, $15.99) by Ann Fearrington on Sat. Oct. 26 at Buttonwood For Kids in Hingham from 10 to noon. "Who Sees The Lighthouse", a counting book, is a cumulative rhyme featuring lighthouses from around the United States as observed from one sailor, two pilots, three gulls, and more.

Laroche incorporates a technique that he calls "paper relief". The result is an illustration with a three-dimensional effect. This method requires many stages of drawing, cutting, painting and gluing. The outcome is a beautifully textured picture with incredible depth. Giles will be bringing a piece of original artwork from each of his books to display during his visit to Buttonwood For Kids. This is a free event and the public is most welcome. Please call 781-749-2665 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

Kids' craft programs

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for grades K—three Arts and Crafts Program by calling 781-383-4109.

Arts and Crafts for grades K—three will be held from 3-4 p.m. on Mondays at the Joseph P. Osgood School.

The program will be five weeks in duration, costing $42 per child. Programs are scheduled to begin Monday, Oct. 21 and continue through Nov. 25. The class will not meet on Monday, Nov. 11 — Veterans Day.

For information, details and registration, call the rec office at 781-383-4109.

New England charm in watercolor

Veteran artist has one-man show at SAA gallery

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Artist T. Nicholas Phakos describes himself essentially as a New England Watercolorist.

His paintings are firmly rooted in the traditions of idyllic New England subject matter and scenery, with the emphasis on clarity and simplicity.

At 82, Phakos has imaginably experienced a lot of the native New England tradition he paints. Originally from Holyoke and a longtime resident of Milton, the artist is a graduate of Boston's Vesper George Art School and has had a lifelong career as a greeting card artist as well as a teacher of watercolor painting.

Much of this experience is reflected in Phakos's current one-man show on exhibit in the Scituate Art Gallery at 132 Front Street through the end of October.

The artist's evergreen New England scenes on display are rendered with such fittingly self-descriptive titles as "Autumn Walk," "Winter Beauty," "Out In the Country," "Pastoral Scene" and "First Snow."

"I like to take photos first of the subjects I want to paint," said Phakos. "Then sketch in the buildings or any other landmarks in the scene, then add fall colors or whatever is appropriate to the season when I'm painting. I often like to exaggerate the shadows and colors in the foreground."

Phakos's lengthy artistic career has also included past memberships with Boston's Copley Society as well as others with art leagues and associations in Springfield, Massachusetts and New York City and State along with current memberships with the New England Watercolor Society and the Scituate Art Association. In addition, Phakos has had one-and-two-man shows in Boston, Holyoke and other areas of western Massachusetts.

The National Wildlife Federation has printed animal and bird paintings by Phakos and the artist's paintings are in many private and corporate collections throughout the country.

While conventional in subject subject matter, Phakos's watercolors carry a certain familiar charm particularly for those with similar New England roots. Featured subjects including "Old Mill," "Red Barn," "Farm House" and others are rendered from photographs by the artists in various spots around New England over the last 12 years.

"I feel that you can create more as a studio painter, rather than painting on-site," hhe said.

For more information, call the Scituate Art Gallery at 781 545-6150.

Unicorn Singers and Broad Cove Choral gearing up for Fall Gala concert

By Nathan Collins-Jensen
CORRESPONDENT

It seems, in our era of factory produced teen idols and eye-popping videos, a musician is anyone who dares jump, jiggle, and gyrate to a synthesized bass. Forgotten are the days where music was revered as a "concord of sweet sounds", the offender of which "is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils".

Music review

Too often today, money is the driving force, not beauty, and the signals that once transmitted powerful emotion are lost in the static of commercialism. Yet, some among us struggle to wade against the beating surf of fad, whim, and craze—anchored by a passion for the music itself. Two groups counted in this happy few are the South Shore's own Unicorn Singers and Broad Cove Chorale.

The Broad Cove Chorale, a group of highly accomplished female musicians, was created in 1975 by choral director Margo Euler. In 1978, Euler wanted to do a staged piece titled "The Unicorn, the Gorgon, and the Manticore" by Menotti. One necessary component for the performance was missing —men.

As she was new to the area, Euler enlisted the help of her performers in the recruitment of male singers. Musician contacted musician to take part in the collaboration, and they were successful in acquiring enough men to perform the piece. A new group, The Unicorn Singers, was born. Today, the Unicorn Singers and the Broad Cove Chorale both combine and perform separately to create distinctive programs throughout the year.

The glorious music of CANDIDE is being rehearsed by the Unicorn Singers.

It quickly became apparent to Euler, and to her audience, that the diverse talents of her choral members could be utilized in a very distinctive, unique fashion. She was working not only with exceptional voices, but also with actors, songwriters, arrangers, lyricists, and instrumentalists. She correctly chose to expand her performances to include all of the diverse talents at her disposal and bound them together with music.

The result is the eclectic versatility seen at each group's six annual concerts. Aside from straight choral singing, which is common to any choral society, these groups offer staged numbers — often in full costume. Euler conducts, choreographs, blocks, and directs these quasi-theatrical sequences.

Both the Broad Cove Chorale and the Unicorn singers perform an amazing variety of choral, opera, Broadway, instrumental, classical, madrigal, spiritual, pop, barbershop, and original parody works, among others. These seemingly disparate genres combine (many times in one driven, tightly woven concert) to form an exciting, energetic, and wonderfully entertaining spectacle. To stay that way, Euler, a member of the American Choral Directors Association, is always searching for fresh, enticing material for upcoming programs. With such a wide array of music and talent at her disposal, the possibilities seem truly infinite.

Both groups have pooled talent from across the South Shore, and bring to their performance many (many) years of experience in music creation, direction, production, and scholarship. They pride themselves not only on their ability to reach across all genres of music, but also their desire to imprint their musicality onto those who see them perform. Whether it be a standard which leaves you humming its familiar motifs, or something more obscure which beckons you to open your ears and explore its challenges, the singer's relationship with the audience is immediately palpable. Music is the means of forg-

HSO preview concert benefits South Shore Hospital

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

Fans of the Hingham Symphony Orchestra will have a unique opportunity for a sneak preview of the 2002-3 season this Friday when the orchestra holds a benefit concert for South Shore Hospital.

All proceeds from the event held in the Hingham Town Hall's Sanborn Auditorium will go to the hospital's "Promise Campaign" which has already raised $15 million to equip the new emergency, maternity and surgical wings built as part of the recent $68 million expansion.

South Shore Hospital's Philanthropy Officer Michael Rogers said the fundraiser with the HSO — the first partnership with the orchestra— is part of the campaign's final push toward its goal of raising $16 million.

"We wanted to do something different within the community and this concert with the HSO was a good match," Rogers said.

This will be the first chance to hear our orchestra this season, said HSO managing director Nina Wellford. And the program promises to be a memorable one featuring Dvorak's Carnival Overture, Ginastera's Variaciones Concertantes, and Brahms' Symphony No. 3.

Wellford is especially looking forward to Ginastera's Variaciones Concertantes which she said features " a lot of wonderful brass."

The HSO's regular season opens Saturday, Oct. 19 with a repeat performance of Friday's benefit concert.

Benefit performances are not new to the HSO which hosted a performance in April in support of Habitat for Humanity and has another benefit event planned in February in support of Derby Academy's music program.

Prior to Friday's benefit performance there will be a pre-concert reception at Casa Del Rey restaurant in Hingham Harbor beginning at 6 p.m. There will also be a post-concert reception at Sanborn Auditorium, Wellford said.

Tickets for the South Shore Hospital benefit concert and reception are $75 per person, $50 for the concert only. To reserve tickets call (781) 340-4061 or (781) 340-8847. There will also be some tickets available at the door. For information or tickets for the HSO's opening concert Saturday, Oct. 19 781-740-5694.

The souffléd omelet

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The concept is simple. Take three or four eggs, separate them, whisk the yolks together with seasonings, fold in the whites, place the mixture in a skillet and finish cooking in the oven. The result is a quick and easy breakfast pan-soufflé for two. The problem with many of these recipes is that the mixture is too light both in texture and taste. I wanted more substance, more flavor, and a few variations on this simple theme.

I started with three eggs, an amount I considered just right for an 8-inch skillet and two servings. I tried separating all three eggs but the resulting omelet was too airy—leaving one egg whole was a better approach.

It is important not to whip the whites until they are stiff — you want soft 2-inch peaks so that they fold easily into the yolk mixture. Some recipes suggest beating the yolks until they are very light but this method reduces their character - the recipe starts to taste more like a soufflé than an omelet. Simply whisk them until blended.

As far as the butter goes, a mere two teaspoons in a non-stick skillet was fine. Any more and the omelet became greasy and the bottom browned a bit too much, making it tough. Some recipes suggest adding water to the eggs but I preferred a tablespoon of heavy cream (I also tested light cream and half-and-half) which provided a bit of richness and moisture. As mentioned above, non-stick skillets are essential - they are perfect for eggs since they release easily and therefore require less oil or butter.

Some recipes suggest cooking the omelet for two to three minutes on the stovetop and then transferring it to an oven. My tests indicated that just one minute on the stovetop followed by five minutes in a 400-degree oven eliminated the tough bottom crust that was often a problem.

My last thought was to develop variations. Since this is a relatively light dish, substantial additions such as ham or bacon seemed out of place.

Cheese, however, is a natural and I came up with two recipes: one with grated Gruyere or Swiss and the other using a combination of Parmesan and goat cheese. Finely chopped herbs are a classic (best for lunch or supper, perhaps) and finally, I liked a tablespoon of maple syrup added to the yolk mixture as a variation unto itself.

SOUFFLED OMELET WITH VARIATIONS

If you want to serve four instead of two, double the recipe and use a 10- or 12-inch skillet.
3 large eggs
1 tablespoon heavy cream
1/4 teaspoon salt
Freshly ground pepper
2 teaspoons butter

1. Preheat the oven to 400 degrees. Place one whole egg and two egg yolks in a medium bowl. Add the cream, salt and pepper and whisk to combine.

Place the remaining two egg whites in a medium bowl and beat into soft peaks. (Do not overbeat, as it will make them difficult to incorporate into the yolk mixture.) Fold the whites into the yolk mixture.

2. Heat an 8- or 9-inch heavy-duty non-stick or cast iron skillet over medium heat. When hot add the butter. Once the butter has stopped foaming swirl to evenly coat the bottom of the pan. Add the egg mixture, spread evenly and smooth the top. Cook for one minute. Place in the hot oven and cook for four to five minutes more or until the omelet is puffy and just set and may have started to brown ever so slightly on the top. Slide onto a warm plate and serve immediately.

Serves two.

Maple Syrup Variation

Add one-tablespoon maple syrup to the yolk mixture, the more flavorful lower grade dark amber preferred.

Cheese Variations

Add one half cup grated Gruyere, Swiss, cheddar or jack cheese to the yolk mixture along with the whites.

Goat Cheese Variation

Add one tablespoon grated Parmesan two ounces softened goat cheese to the yolk mixture and whisk until the goat cheese is well incorporated.

Herb Variation

Add two teaspoons finely chopped chives or flat Italian parsley or one tablespoon chopped tarragon or thyme along with the whites. The herbs may be added along with the cheese or by themselves to suit your taste. The thyme is particularly good with the goat cheese variation.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 16

The Aquarius moon aligns with Saturn at 5:15 a.m. and becomes inactive. At 7:07 a.m. a Pisces moon takes over, beginning a 2 1/2 day period that is ideal for creativity and developing intuitive skills. However, organization and efficiency may take a back seat. Postpone business negotiations, transactions, major purchases. Get extra rest; pay attention to your dreams.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 17

A 90-degree alignment of Venus and Jupiter warns against overdoing on any level. Use common sense. Don't make impulsive or extravagant plans, promises or purchases. On the other hand, this planetary alignment evokes an easygoing, social mood. Take extra time out for rest and relaxation; enjoy favorite pastimes. An applying alignment of Mercury and Neptune continues to highlight all creative endeavors. You can find new inspiration and achieve breakthroughs.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 18

This is a great morning to change your routine; be more relaxed, playful. Enjoy the moment. Mercury aligns with Neptune at 6:50 a.m., and the sun forms a harmonious contact to Uranus at 10:07 a.m. In addition, the moon continues to travel in laidback Pisces, active until 5:16 p.m. An Aries moon begins at 7:13 p.m., bringing an energy boost. However, a lunar opposition to Mars is in effect this evening and warns against taking chances or doing anything risky.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 19

A full moon buildup promises an exciting weekend. Do something different. Visit or entertain friends, travel or embark on a new adventure. Put business or practical decisions on hold for a few days. The Aries moon aligns with Neptune at 11:48 a.m. and opposes Mercury at 3:55 p.m. A harmonious contact to Jupiter sets the stage for late-night partying. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 20

Energy and enthusiasm run high, as the full moon continues to build. In addition, the planet Neptune plays an important role in today's planetary picture. At 9:51 a.m. Neptune, standing at 8-degrees Aquarius, begins direct travel. Seek a creative or romantic outlet for your energies. Let fun and games top your agenda.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 21

The full moon culminates at 3:20 a.m., 28-degrees Aries/Libra. At 5:55 a.m. the Aries moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. A Taurus moon takes over at 7:57 a.m., and an applying sun/Saturn alignment makes for a day to get things done. Zero in on business or financial issues that have been swept under the rug. You can explore options and make realistic choices.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 22

This day holds high potential for productivity. The sun forms a harmonious contact to Saturn at 9:31 a.m. Mercury forms flowing 60-degree contacts to Jupiter and Pluto. All communications are highlighted. This is an excellent time for brainstorming and troubleshooting ideas and options. Influences also rate high for making long-range plans and setting new goals. There is one pitfall, however, when the Taurus moon aligns with Jupiter this afternoon. Don't take on more than you can handle. Know your limits.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 23

The Taurus moon aligns with Uranus at 10:14 a.m. and becomes inactive until 8:17 p.m. There may be unexpected distractions, delays, reversals. Allow extra time. The sun enters Scorpio at 10:18 a.m., remaining there until November 22. Plan to catch up on unfinished business, handle routine chores and errands. Get your life in order. The moon enters talkative Gemini at 8:17 p.m.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24

A Gemini moon sets a fast pace today and tomorrow. You must carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan, if you want to be productive. The moon forms harmonious 120-degree contacts to Mars at 7:23 a.m. and Neptune at 12:35 p.m. Write emails, letters, send packages, make phone calls. Communicate, network, collaborate.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 25

Get an early start to this day. Initiate new projects before 10:43 a.m., when the Gemini moon aligns with Mercury. Sales and promotion campaigns get the green light. Overall, people will be upbeat and outgoing. Be sure to have a clear plan of action in order to avoid spinning your wheels and wasting time. A lunar alignment to Uranus makes this evening prime for socializing, partying.
.through obstacles and make objective decisions. This influence is also favorable for making personal changes, taking control of your life and transforming bad habits or attitudes.

Add color to the early autumn garden

Green thumbs up

Part 3

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As I pass through the pewter gray arbor that leads to my backyard sanctuary, I delight in the delicate perfume of the sweet autumn clematis (C. paniculata) that cascades over the arched passageway. Only planted a season ago, this vine quickly climbed the latticework this spring and with a little guidance, its vigorous stems have twined their way over the top erupting with a myriad of glistening white starry blossoms in recent weeks. Tolerant of partial shade, this is perhaps the easiest and most rewarding of the clematis to grow. An established plant, severely pruned in early spring, will rapidly recover to reach 15 feet in length in a single season smothered with a profusion of fragrant blooms each autumn. Silky, feathery seed heads shimmer in the setting sun weeks after the blooms have faded.

There are many wonderful late season treasures to brighten the autumn landscape. The expansion of our home several years ago afforded an opportunity to create a variety of new gardens to highlight many of these fall-blooming beauties. I strive for continuous color in all my plantings but particularly in those gardens that are in close proximity to walkways and window views. Adjacent to our new front entry, the living room addition boasts a handsome fieldstone gable that provides an elegant backdrop for a sunny cottage garden complete with roses, hollyhocks, peonies and iris. Daylilies, globe thistle, butterfly bush, purple cone flowers and hibiscus flourish during the summer months. In early autumn, among the lingering blossoms of pink Bonica roses, delicate lavender spires of Russian sage and the tall, bright yellow blooms of Rudbeckia nitida 'Herbstsonne', billowing clouds of tiny white daisies belonging to Boltonia 'Snowbank' glow against the backdrop of the rustic stonework. Held on upright 4-foot tall blue-green stems, the blossoms resemble our native fall-blooming asters but this hardy perennial readily adapts to drier soil conditions, producing an erect, dense bushy plant given full sun. There is a pink-flowering form, B. 'Pink Beauty', but this variety tends to have a more open, sprawling habit that requires support to look its best.

Nearby, the statuesque Aster Tataricus is just beginning to display its lovely clusters of lavender-blue daisies highlighted by yellow centers on 6-foot tall stems. As Allan Armitage comments in his fine reference Garden Perennials, "The good thing about this species is that plants multiply rapidly; the bad thing is that plants multiply rapidly." This Siberian native is a vigorous grower but I find it easy to eradicate when it wanders and consider its exuberance a small price to pay for its fabulous architectural presence and blooms through the month of October.

On the opposite side of our living room addition, a small, protected atrium garden receives only bright light during the spring and fall and a minimal amount of direct sunlight during the height of summer. Along the fieldstone path that leads to the entryway, several late-blooming gems provide a colorful splash as the growing season draws to a close. Pink anemones, white cyclamen, deep blue leadwort and the speckled purple and white blossoms of toad lilies intermingle with the rich evergreen fronds of Christmas fern, the finely textured foliage of dwarf goatsbeard and the silvery leaves of Japanese painted ferns.

The fall-blooming Japanese anemones deserve more popularity; commonly known as windflowers, their charming single, semi-double and double flowers in shades of pink, rose or white dance in the breeze on tall slender stems above handsome, divided foliage that is attractive in all seasons. When grown in partial shade and moist soils, clumps gradually expand producing a multitude of branched 3-foot tall stems with dozens of blooms during September and October.

Few perennials offer the intense, cobalt blue flowers of the fall-blooming leadwort (Ceratostigma plumbaginoides). Its brilliant blue flowers appear above mats of deep green foliage which gradually turns to a deep bronze as the season progresses. An excellent ground cover for sun or light shade in well-drained soils, it is an ideal choice for the front of a mixed perennial border.

Among the declining leaves of hosta and early-blooming perennials, the dainty flowers of hardy cyclamens, in shades of pink and white, emerge each fall from the surrounding leaf litter. Fleshy bronze flower stalks suddenly produce distinctive, nodding flowers like clusters of little butterflies atop stunning, toothed, deep green foliage mottled with bold silver streaks. These marginally hardy tubers should be planted in humus-enriched, well-drained but moist soils in protected areas beneath trees and shrubs where they will gradually spread to form colonies.

The unusual flowers of the toad lily (Tricyrtis spp.) never fail to bring a smile. Despite its unpleasant common name, this late-blooming perennial is a must for the shady border. The gracefully arching foliage produces numerous white or pale lavender-pink blossoms generously dotted with purple speckles. The overall appearance is much like an orchid. This fascinating shade-loving perennial should be grown where its unique flowers can be easily observed to appreciate its intricate mottling. Several toad lily cultivars are available which include slight variations in flower color and foliage that may be tinted gold or lightly variegated. All toad lilies prefer moist, well-drained soils in filtered shade. Locating a source for these odd-looking perennials may require a little wandering, but several South Shore nurseries stock them and they are well worth the search.

ing this connection, and that the interplay between performer and listener is paramount.

There are six concert programs offered annually. The Fall Gala in October and the Winter Encore! in February feature both ensembles in the same performance. The Christmas Concerts in December (performed at five different churches, with the proceeds going to a different charity of the church's choosing) and the Spring Concerts in late April/early May feature the two choruses separately. The upcoming Fall Gala, which was first performed in Euler's living room but has now grown to the much larger and acoustically superior House of Prayer in South Hingham, features an eclectic mixture of Broadway, lyric opera, spiritual, madrigal, folk, and pop arrangements, including sequences from Candide and Camelot. Both the Unicorn Singers and Broad Cove Chorale will perform. Each individual talent has been highlighted and ultimately conflated to form a richly textured, controlled sound. The pieces are tight, intricate, and entertaining. Hallmarks of both groups have been variety and versatility, and this show is in no danger of becoming monotonous. The Fall Gala will be held at House of Prayer in South Hingham on Oct. 19 and 20, both performances at 8 p.m. with reception to follow. When purchasing tickets for the concert you may also subscribe for the season and receive tickets for the Christmas and spring concerts as well. Individual tickets become available shortly before the show dates, for a price of $25 each. For ticket information, and to be placed on their mailing list, please call the business office at 781-749-6561. You can also reach them via email through their website at www.bcc-us.com.

No student is exempt from MCAS

And some will fail, no matter what

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Developmentally delayed students at the Cardinal Cushing Center in Hanover and those high achievers at Cohasset High School, who are on the fast track for Harvard, have something in common: both groups are busy preparing for MCAS.

No student in public or publicly funded schools in Massachusetts is exempt from MCAS — the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System — which is a series of tests to measure student competency in a range of subject areas.

This year the high-stakes tests take on added significance because members of the Class of 2003 will have had to pass the 10th-grade math and language arts portions in order to receive a diploma this spring.

For Cardinal Cushing, whose students' principal diagnosis is mental retardation, diplomas are not an issue. The training center traditionally conducts a graduation each

One-way trial is trashed

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

It took a little over a week for the planned one-way trial on Elm Street to be scrapped.

In the end, it was the public reaction – it too, one-way in its nature – that ended what was scheduled to be a one-month long trial.

The trial made the portion of Elm Street from the Hingham Institution for Savings to Cohasset Hardware one-way heading towards South Main Street and St. Stephen's Church. Since there are no left turns allowed when traveling from the Common through the Village, the issues of safety and access to parking on the Tedeschi's side of the South Main Street presented problems.

Despite receiving an overwhelming amount of negative feedback, Town Manager Mark Haddad was glad that the town tried the experiment.

"It did what it had to do," said Haddad. "We needed to find out what the reaction would be. I thank everybody for their comments and now the selectmen have addressed the issue."

Harbor issue thrown lifeline

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

With the vote tied at 2-2 on the harbor improvements article and only Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan left to voice his opinion, Selectman Tom Callahan (who was for the inclusion of the article) challenged selectman Ronnie McMorris (who was against it) to a tug-of-war.

"You grab one arm and I'll grab the other, and we'll pull," said Callahan, who was sitting immediately to Sullivan's right, to McMorris, who was on the chairman's left.

It would nearly come to that.

Sullivan cast his vote first against the article, only to amend his vote moments later, paving the way for Article 17 to be included on the Nov. 18 Special Town Meeting warrant.

"Now we'll get a diversified debate and get a lot of input on it. "
— Dean Rizzo, CRC

The vote represented the end of a year-and-a-half long discussion, largely fueled by the opposition of neighbors on Border Street, who objected to the involvement of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's involvement as the proponent of the plan, as to the merits of the project. This discussion – merely whether to recommend the article – had stretch across nearly a month, three meetings, and at least four hours of discussion.

"It's a tough issue, I totally understand where the folks out there who are against it are coming from," said Sullivan, who by the end of the evening had cast a vote for each side. "But we know that we need to do some work down there. If you have an organization that wants to pay for it and we can pick the engineer and we can control it, why reject it?"

The meeting was again packed with partisan sentiment, many from the Border Street area, but this time at least three residents expressed a desire to see the article go before town meeting. Still, the large majority of those present expressed opinions that were against the issue, mostly because of the involvement of the CRC.

"The CRC has never clearly established that there is a prob-

Editors-in-chief David Ingber and Gia Petrakis will be spending long hours in front of the computer to produce the Spinnaker, Cohasset High's new student newspaper.

There's a new paper in town

Spinnaker arrives at Cohasset High

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The converted broom closet on the second floor of the Cohasset Middle-Senior High School is mostly bare, save some shelving, a few desks, and a couple of chairs. Aside from the fresh paint job, a wallpaper border near the top of the wall featuring sailboats, and an older model PC with a screensaver running the word "Spinnaker" across the monitor, there is little sign that this room is the scene of future greatness.

The room is home to the Spinnaker, the new student newspaper at the middle-senior high school.

It would seem bold to declare victory before their computers have even arrived – never mind before their first issue is printed – but the staff of the new paper is more than confident that their paper will be an award winner.

And why not?

Named after the sail used on sailboats when running before the wind and built more like a professional sports team than a normal school newspaper, there is no reason for the Spinnaker not to succeed.

Last year, a survey identified journalism as the popular choice for a new elective in the English Department and the student body displayed strong support for the creation of a school newspaper.

So the School Department (to their credit) did what had to be done – they brought in a ringer.

Rush named CNC's associate publisher

Patrick J. Purcell, president and publisher of Herald Media Inc., has appointed Gregory R. Rush as associate publisher and chief operating officer for Community Newspaper Co., the parent company of the Cohasset Mariner. In this role, Rush will oversee day-to-day operations at CNC and act as liaison between the newspapers and the cities and towns CNC covers.

"Greg's hard work, determination and his grasp of the fundamentals of the business will be a very positive influence on the company," said Purcell.

"I am excited about the opportunity to work with the management and staff at CNC more closely on a day-to-day basis, and to continue to build on the opportunities we have," said Rush.

Rush joined CNC earlier this year from Sun Trust Robinson Humphrey, where he was a vice president and founding member of the firm's Boston office. While at Sun Trust Robinson Humphrey, he was instrumental in the acquisition of Community Newspaper Co. by Herald Media.

His experiences at Sun Trust Robinson Humphrey included managing a variety of capital markets transactions, among them mergers and acquisitions, public equity and debt offerings, private placements and financial

Barn move is meeting topic

The Conservation Commission is scheduled to hear a request for a special permit for proposed work at 139 and 145 Border St.

The permit requests permission to relocate a barn and drive on the property of 139 Border St. and to relocate a shed and construct an attached garage at 145 Border St.

According to Heidi A. H. Condon, principal of HC Design, a Site Plan and Notice of Intent are on file at the Conservation Commission office in town hall.

Foreign objects clogging pumps

There are still many cases of foreign objects clogging sewer pumps, and this is to remind customers that only normal toilet and garbage disposer waste should be discharged. As the sewer department previously advised its users, it is necessary to charge for the Town's $85 ($100 on weekends) cost for service calls to remove foreign objects.

The following objects have caused repeated service calls: tampons, dental floss, baby wipes, Q-Tips. In addition, the following objects will also clog the pumps: bones, diapers, cloth, glass, metal, nuts, plastic, rags, rope, rubber, sand, sanitary, napkins, shells, towels.

Clarification on bus purchase

An article in last week's Mariner (Oct. 17) relative to the need for an additional school bus may have given the impression that the Cohasset Advisory Committee had met and voted on actions which would be taken in the event that the Cohasset Public Schools needed to purchase a bus at some point in time between this year's Fall Town Meeting and next year's Spring Town Meeting.

As clarification, the school department has not met with the Advisory Committee on this matter. School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn, Supt. Edward Malvey, Town Manager Mark Haddad, and Advisory Committee Chairman Maureen Jerz have all agreed that the purchase of a school bus should be put off until the spring, given financial constraints this fall. If the need for an additional bus were to arise before the Spring Town Meeting, Jerz has agreed to support the school department in bringing forward an emergency funding request to the Advisory Committee. The Advisory Committee would then meet with the school department, discuss the request, and vote on the request.

Members Sought for Advisory Committee

The Cohasset Advisory Committee anticipates several vacancies over the next few months and is looking for citizens interested in town governance to fill those vacancies. The Advisory Committee is a nine-member committee appointed by the Troika (the Town Moderator, Chairman of the Board of Selectmen, and Chairman of the Advisory Committee). The Advisory Committee reviews and makes recommendations on all articles on the Town Warrant for Town Meeting (including the Town Budget Article), as well as approving any transfer of funds from the town's reserve fund. Advisory Committee members work with various town departments, town committees, citizen groups, and the Town Manager and Board of Selectmen in developing the town budget. If you are interested in becoming a member of the Cohasset Advisory Committee, please fill out a Town Government Resource Bank form, available in the Town Clerk's office, or call Advisory Committee Chairman Maureen Jerz (383-6592) for additional information.

Hurley appointed to Common panel

The Board of Selectmen have appointed William A. Hurley of 17 Highland Ave. to the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission.

Hurley had confirmed his interest in the position in a letter to Town Manager Mark Haddad dated Oct. 17.

Headline correction

The headline "Storm-water plan gets OK from DEP" that appeared on a story in last week's Mariner is erroneous; it was not a storm-water plan that was approved by DEP, it was a surface water supply protection plan, which is not the same thing. The Mariner regrets the error.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Monday, Oct. 21:

Water Commission, Oct. 24 at 8 p.m. at the Water Treatment Plant on King Street.

Board of Selectmen, Oct. 29 at 7:30 p.m.

Zoning Board of Appeals, Oct. 28, Nov. 4, Nov. 14 (Avalon), Dec. 9, Dec. 16 (Avalon), all at 7:30 p.m. All Avalon meetings will be held in the selectmen's office and will be televised.

Conservation Commission, Oct. 24 and Nov. 14 at 7:30 p. m.

Senior Housing Committee, Nov. 6 at 9:00 a.m.

Police/Fire Study Committee, Nov. 7 at 2:30 p.m.

Committee on Town History, Nov. 11 at 7:30 p.m., Lothrop House.

Library Trustees, Nov. 20, at 7:30 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise indicated.

Thermometer swap

Cohasset residents who bring a mercury thermometer to the hazardous waste collection event to be held Saturday, Oct. 26, from 9 a.m. until 1 p.m. at the Recycling Transfer Station, will receive a free digital thermometer in return.

The Cohasset Board of Health is joining in a statewide effort to eliminate toxic mercury from the environment by providing this opportunity, which is sponsored by American Referred to fire department.-Fuel Company of SEMASS and supported by the South Shore Recycling Cooperative. Saturday's collection event will also accept other common household products that contain mercury, including fluorescent and HID lamps, non-electric thermostats, many types of button batteries, blood pressure gauges and various switches found in appliances, The Board of Health will continue to offer the thermometer swap on an ongoing basis after Saturday's collection.

Improper disposal of mercury thermometers is a major source of mercury contamination in fish. A mercury thermometer contains about a gram of the toxic element - an amount sufficient to trigger a fish advisory in a 20-acre body of water. One grain of mercury can render a ton of fish unfit for consumption.

It is estimated that 17 tons of mercury from thermometers is released into the environment annually. The Massachusetts Dept. of Public Health has issued advisories against fish consumption or 80 bodies of water due to high levels of mercury. Several adverse health effects are related to mercury exposure. Saturday's event is designed to encourage safer product choices and to promote the proper hazardous material disposal.

Senior housing request nixed

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The Senior Housing Committee felt that its proposed senior development behind Stop and Shop off 3A represented the perfect opportunity for the application of money from the Community Preservation Fund.

It addressed the need for affordable housing, guaranteeing at least 25 percent of the housing to be affordable and would cater to the need to provide senior residents with housing.

But concerns over whether the receipt of Community Preservation funds would handcuff the project, and later the town, led to a 4-4 vote by the committee, which translated into a denial of the $10,000 request for funding to further study the project.

The town adopted the Community Preservation Act at last year's annual Town Meeting. It derives it money from a 1.5 percent surcharge on real estate tax and some level of state match (This year 100 percent: see related story). Allocations are recommended by the committee and then voted on by Town Meeting. The committee's funds must be spent on three areas: open space, historical preservation, and affordable housing.

The meeting lasted about two hours and involved public comment from several residents from Old Pasture Road and Red Fox Lane. Most of the residents were concerned about their neighborhood being used as an access point for the development, but some touched on the theme of whether it was foolhardy for the town to be spearheading a senior housing development at this time.

According to Chairman Stuart Ivimey, if money from the Community Preservation Fund is contributed to a project, the town must maintain control over the property, which could limit the potential for further influxes of money, be it from grants or private investment.

"There is apparently some question if we use CPC money on a project like this and whether that will negatively impact the project's ability to attract federal and state grants," said Ivimey. "The question is still open and wasn't resolved last night. It wouldn't be wise for us to allocated a certain amount of money without know if that will force the town to have to fund the project themselves."

Senior Housing Committee chairman Joe Nedrow was disappointed at the decision, but vowed that the group will be back.

"We didn't really lose it, it didn't pass," said Nedrow. "We just have to do some more homework. It's clear that they have a mandate to provide funds for some low-cost housing."

Nedrow says that providing space for the senior population to move later in life fits well into his understanding of community preservation.

"We'll be back with another proposal," said Nedrow. "It's unfortunate. I would argue that seniors are the best thing that you could conserve within a community."

Town Planner Elizabeth Harrington said she understood the concerns the board expressed given the lack of precedence regarding the act itself.

"I think was is difficult for everybody is that we are one of the first communities to adopt the act," said Harrington. "In trying to do the research, we can't give a very clear consensus about towns that have already gone down the road of trying to develop a mixed income development with CPA funds."

The decision will not halt the project, as the Senior Housing Committee is considering several options to continue. Harrington cited several members of the community already on board from different aspects of the community, who will attempt to make the project a reality.

"We are just going to keep moving forward," said Harrington. "We still have the opportunity to get additional funds for technical assistance from the Massachusetts Housing Partnership fund. We are just going to try and do as much as we can pro-bono for the time being to keep the project moving."

Preservation fund gets 100 percent state match

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

As expected, the Department of Revenue has announced that the state will match 100 percent of a town's contribution to the Community Preservation Fund.

"I am pleased to announce the matching funds under the Community Preservation Act reflecting surcharges on property taxes during fiscal year 2002," stated Commissioner of Revenue Alan LeBovidge in a letter to the Board of Selectmen. "The state matching funds this year are calculated at 100 percent of the amounts committed by the assessors based on the surcharge rate adopted (by the individual town).

For Cohasset, the award will be $215,525, matching the town contribution that was derived from a 1.5 percent surcharge on real estate taxes, for total budget of $431,050.

The 100 percent match was in line with what Chairman of the CPC Stuart Ivimey expected.

"It is tremendous that the program is working out as we hoped it would," said Ivimey. "The town volunteered to have the 1.5 percent surcharge with the understanding that there would be a significant contribution from the state, and they got it."

Cohasset is one of 32 towns that opted into the legislation in its first year. Money from the CPF can be spent in three specific areas: open space, affordable housing, and historic preservation. Each year, the CPC must spend or bank 10 percent of its annual revenue on each of those areas. All CPF expenditures in Cohasset must be approved by a municipality's legislative branch, which in Cohasset's case is Town Meeting.

Board is cool to overlay district

Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The plan to create a senior housing overlay district in Cohasset did not seem to generate support from selectmen at their meeting Tuesday, though the idea of a town-led effort to create senior housing in town gained tacit support.

There was a bit of confusion as to which town board had sponsored Article 8 on the Special Town Meeting warrant. Joe Nedrow of the Senior Housing Committee and Town Planner Elizabeth Harrington arrived at the meeting to discuss the article, but it was later determined that it was actually sponsored by the Planning Board.

The article, drafted by Harrington, seeks to create a senior housing overlay district (covering areas zoned Residential B and C). The change would require a project to have 25 percent affordability and to be age restrictive, while stopping development under the law when 20 percent of the town's housing is multi-family. Currently, according to the Board of Assessors, the town sits at 13 percent. If the proposed 200-unit AvalonBay development at 155 King St. (Route 3A) were to go through, the town would probably only have room for one senior housing development.

The selectmen withheld a decision on recommending the article until the Planning Board, which will hold a public hearing on the issue Nov. 6, had the opportunity to present its case.

Despite the lack of an official decision towards the overlay district, the Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan told Nedrow that the board would support – in concept – the idea of targeted zoning relief for a town-based senior housing project.

"I thought it was very encouraging," said Harrington. "We were there to focus on the zoning change, but it was a very productive discussion, and it was nice to see that he support might be there to move it forward."

The SHC is in the beginning stages of developing a proposal for a 60-unit development behind Stop and Shop on Route 3A. Earlier this week, the Community Preservation Committee voted 4-4 (which translates into a denial) on a request by the SHC for $10,000 for further study of the plan.

Harrington said that as long as the support is there for the project, it doesn't matter if it comes to fruition via an overlay district or by targeted zoning changes.

"I'm comfortable with it as a planner as long as the outcome meets the town goal which is to get this particular development to go forward," said Harrington. "But, I personally believe that another project on top of this would make sense for the town, which the overlay district would help accomplish."

State Representative
Garrett Bradley

State Representative Garrett Bradley has been a strong, independent voice for our district since his election in 2000. He stood up for us and took on the House leadership on Clean Elections, rallied support for the speedy passage of local legislation, and fought against repealing the voter-approved tax cut.

Now more than ever, we need an experienced, independent representative who has a proven track record of advocating for our communities in the State Legislature.

Strong Independent Leadership

- ✓ Garrett Bradley fought for money to improve the infrastructure at the commuter boat facility in Hingham.
- ✓ Garrett Bradley successfully passed the Hingham Shipyard legislation to provide the town with more control over the project and a $1 million net tax gain.
- ✓ Garrett Bradley worked with his communities to oppose the additional runway at Logan International Airport and personally lobbied former FAA Director Jane Garvey regarding the importance of a true "over the water" flight path.
- ✓ Garrett Bradley filed legislation to give communities more control over Chapter 40B projects and legislation to provide towns with a secure funding mechanism for school building projects.
- ✓ Garrett Bradley assisted in the awarding of a $1.5 million grant to Cohasset for implementation of needed infrastructure improvements to the village area.

The gloves come off in campaign for state senate

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

Incumbent state Sen. Robert Hedlund has charged Democratic challenger Ted LeClair with running a negative campaign.

Hedlund, a Weymouth Republican, claimed that a series of recent mailings sent out by LeClair staffers show that his campaign is taking a negative turn.

"Ted LeClair told the voters that he would run a positive campaign," Hedlund said. "It seems he said one thing and does another."

The mailings are oversized postcards done in Hedlund campaign colors.

One stated, "Next time you see Bob Hedlund, please ask him why he skipped the meeting on the Runway," referring to an April 19 meeting with FAA Director Jane Garvey about the Logan runway expansion.

"I think the mailings were quite tasteful, and I stand by them," LeClair said. "Both of these mailings are very specific. One is talking about his missing a specific meeting. A meeting was set up with the chief of the FAA, and Hedlund chose not to be there. Why is this negative? He chose not to go."

The second stated, "Next time you see Bob Hedlund, ask him why the South Shore Hospital doesn't have a cardiac surgery unit."

The mailing criticized Hedlund for being "unable to break through the politics of the Senate and secure a license for a cardiac surgery unit at our hospital."

"LeClair's negative campaign is purposely misleading at worst or ignorant of the facts at best because they do not come close to telling the whole story," Hedlund said. "The facts are that the State Department of Public Health issues cardiac surgery licenses, not the Sstate Senate. Ted LeClair is either purposely deceiving voters or has no concept as to the licensing procedures for hospitals."

LeClair continued to focus on the length of time Hedlund has had to get an amendment through the Senate.

"He has had four years now," LeClair said. "The House has passed legislation. I am asking voters why South Shore Hospital has no cardiac surgery license. People all over the South Shore have applauded me for making South Shore Hospital such an important issue in my campaign. The proof is in the pudding. We still don't have a cardiac surgery unit for South Shore Hospital. My campaign is about getting results. Effort is one thing, getting results is another."

A bill previously signed into law allows up to six community hospitals to be granted a license by the state Department of Public Health in a phased-in period over time.

"LeClair's negative campaign is purposely misleading at worst or ignorant of the facts at best because they do not come close to telling the whole story."
— State Sen. Bob Hedlund

During phase one, licenses were granted to Cape Cod Hospital, South Coastal Hospital, and North Shore Hospital. The next round of DPH licensing that could lead to a cardiac surgery license for South Shore Hospital will not be until 2004, according to Rick Pozniak, South Shore Hospital's director of public affairs.

"We hoped to expedite the process by attaching an outside amendment to the state budget allowing the DPH to grant licenses now to South Shore Hospital, Brockton Hospital, and MetroWest Hospital," Pozniak said. "All three hospitals are well-qualified to perform cardiac surgery and meet all DPH criteria."

Bob Hedlund

Ted LeClair

Both Hedlund and state Rep. James Murphy, D-Weymouth, filed amendments in the Senate and the House, respectively. Murphy's amendment won House approval, but never made it out of the joint Senate and House Conference Committee.

Two key members of the Senate "put on the brakes," according to Pozniak.

"The chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, Mark Montigny, and Senate President Thomas Birmingham did not want the outside amendment to go through. Montigny is also the chief Senate budget negotiator. If the chief Senate budget negotiator says he doesn't want an amendment and the Senate president goes against it, the amendment will predictably fail on the Senate floor as well," Pozniak said.

"We don't want this issue politicized during a campaign. We do appreciate the advocacy both of Sen. Hedlund and senate candidate LeClair," Pozniak said.

Referring to the meeting on the MASSPORT proposed Logan Runway expansion, Hedlund said that he was represented at this one meeting in question by his chief of staff, Kate Putney.

"Ms. Putney is an attorney, admitted to the bar in New Hampshire and Massachusetts. She is a great chief of staff who is fully qualified to represent me," Hedlund said. "The fact of the matter is that I have been particularly active on the runway issue, helping to organize a regional work group comprised of impacted South Shore communities, organizing the Legislative Air Transportation Caucus."

Hedlund said he has attended dozens of meetings and publicly testified before the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA).

"Ted LeClair's campaign has proven to be an empty campaign," Hedlund said. "He has offered no policy positions or statements. LeClair just sends out fluffy flyers with big pictures and empty sound bites and clichés. His misleading pieces misrepresent my proven efforts on behalf of the South Shore."

Hedlund said his activities were posted on his web site, adding that he was out to public meetings almost every night of the week.

"I find it incredible that I am being called on by the press to explain missing one meeting when a $2 million lawsuit against my challenger is being ignored. It's a matter of public record," Hedlund said.

Hedlund was referring to a civil action filed in Plymouth County Superior Court on May 7, 2002, claiming breach of contract and fraud in the sale of cranberry bogs and farm equipment to the plaintiffs, Webster Cranberry, LLC, and John Kopacz, as trustee for the Kopacz Family Real Estate Trust.

Copies of the suit were mailed anonymously to the media at the end of last week.

Defendants named in the suit are LeClair's father, Donald R. LeClair, Jr., individually and as trustee of LeClair Family Trust and LeClair Brothers Cranberry Trust, Webster Cranberry Co., Inc., Theodore P. LeClair, individually, and DBA LeClair Brothers Cranberry Co. and Martha E. LeClair.

"I think the mailings were quite tasteful, and I stand by them."
— Ted LeClair, challenger

LeClair (Theodore P. LeClair) is included as a defendant as doing business as LeClair Brothers Cranberry Co. and as a director of Webster Cranberry Co.

The action claims that the defendants "coerced plaintiffs into purchasing the defendants' bog and farm lands by threatening residential subdivision development... the plaintiffs have uncovered one problem after another... that the sellers affirmatively misrepresented or failed to disclose and which may have influenced the plaintiffs not to proceed with the transaction or to seek a price adjustment."

LeClair said that the action was frivolous and without merit.

"They had an entire year to look at the property. For a full year, we have been in discussions and negotiation with them," LeClair said.

He said his father had asked him if he wanted to settle because of the Senate campaign.

"I told him I didn't want to settle, knowing that we were in the right. I would not be a very good businessman if I did, and I wouldn't make a very good Senator," LeClair said. "I think Sen. Hedlund is trying to distract people from the issues. I think this is a false charge that has no merit whatsoever. Anytime I have had an accusation against Sen. Hedlund, I have done it openly. I have not hidden behind anonymity or behind someone else. I stand behind what I say."

LeClair said that in the end, this was an issue of character and integrity.

"I think people should honor their commitments, just as the state should honor its commitment to its communities," he said. "It is unfortunate that my opponent has to resort to such tactics as to bring up frivolous lawsuits. I think most people who have come to know him have come to expect this kind of behavior from Sen. Hedlund. I am a decorated naval officer whose character and integrity has been viewed as being beyond reproach by several commanding officers and admirals. I cannot say the same for my opponent. In the following two weeks, I expect to stick to the issues and not personal attacks. The voters deserve no less."

League to sponsor forum for state representative race

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

After several stops and start, state Rep. Garrett Bradley (Democrat) and challenger Nathaniel Palmer (Republican) will participate in a candidate's forum on Oct. 30 at Hingham Town Hall in the race for the Third Plymouth District seat.

According to the Hingham League of Women Voters President Helga Jorgensen, the forum will be held on Oct. 30 at Hingham Town Hall. She said she expects the forum to take place from 7:30 to 9 p.m. that night, but the exact location in Town Hall has yet to be decided.

"With all the controversy surrounding this issue it was obvious that we needed to do something," said Jorgensen. "We picked a date and the candidates agreed and rearranged their schedules. We're still working on the details."

Jorgensen said that a "tentative format" had been sent to the candidates, and that it will most likely rely heavily on questions from the audience. The event will be held in one of the Town Hall's conference rooms if the HLWV is unable to come up with money to pay for renting Sanborn Auditorium, as well as podiums and microphones.

As late as Wednesday of last week, the issue appeared dead, as the HLWV said it did not have the manpower to run the debates alone. Community Newspaper Company sponsored debates in the State senate and District Attorney races, but not the state representative races because of a fairness issue.

"We were clear with the League back in September that we could only host two debates," said CNC/South Editor-in-Chief Mark Skala last week. "Given that we have a number of contested state rep. races in our South Shore geography, we didn't feel that we could pull of debates for all of them, so we opted for none. It wouldn't have been fair to host a Bradley/Palmer debate and not others in our area."

Garrett Bradley

Nathaniel Palmer

The issue came to a head last week, when the Massachusetts Republican Party issued a press release accusing Bradley of being "afraid to debate." Palmer echoed the charge in an interview.

"We picked a date and the candidates agreed and rearranged their schedules. We're still working on the details."

— Helga Jorgensen, League of Women Voters

Bradley denied the charge as an "outright lie," and offered to debate "any time, any place." Jorgensen backed Bradley's claim that he was always open to debating.

"It is critical that we have an open debate that is a traditional debate, rather than the formats that we've had," said Palmer, after the announcement. "We really haven't had the opportunity to go one-on-one yet."

Bradley said his agreement to debate proves that he is unafraid.

"The Hingham League of Women Voters called me and said they were upset about the controversy," said Bradley. "They said, 'We never asked you to participate in a debate to this point, but we are asking you know,' and I said 'Absolutely, as I said before, just give me a date and I'll be there.'"

Palmer said a debate will finally allow a true comparison of the two candidates. His main concern will be demonstrating what he believes to be a gap between Bradley's reputation as an independent voice and his voting record.

"It is an issue that is difficult to get out through other forums, such as press interviews or our own materials," said Palmer. "It really only comes out in a one-on-one situation where you can offer immediate contrast."

Bradley feels his reputation and experience are his strong points, and will concentrate on them throughout the debate.

"What I'm going to be talking about is how I have been a strong, independent voice for the district during the last two years," said Bradley. "That experience makes me the better candidate."

Hedlund, LeClair thrash out the issues tonight

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

Points will be pondered, issues will be addressed, and stands will be clarified when the two contenders for the Plymouth-Norfolk District state Senate seat take to the podium tonight (Oct. 24).

Incumbent state Sen. Robert Hedlund, a Weymouth Republican, and challenger Ted LeClair, a Marshfield Democrat, will face off at the CNC-sponsored debate at 7 p.m. at Hingham Town Hall on 210 Central St.

The debate will be moderated by the Hingham League of Women Voters, a nonpartisan political organization dedicated to encouraging the informed and active participation of citizens in government. The League chooses a qualified, impartial moderator from recommendations made by a search committee. The moderator for tomorrow night's debate will be Massasoit professor T.P. Eliott-Smith, former town moderator in Halifax.

"The debate provides a unique opportunity for voters to hear an airing on the issues in a very public forum," said CNC Executive Editor Mark Skala. "There is a certain amount of politeness and sparring mixed in with tradition and formality. We are privileged to help bring this to the voting public."

Voters have few opportunities to see candidates in action which are as revealing and dynamic as a live debate, and this one is expected to be lively.

"A debate is always a good way to expose candidates to the voters," Hingham LWV President Helga Jorgensen said.

Issues expected to be debated are education, the impact of Chapter 40B — the state's affordable housing law — on growth and development, health care, the redevelopment of the former South Weymouth Naval Air Station, and the overall sorry condition of state government.

Both candidates are looking forward to the rhetorical tussle.

"I am so thankful that Community Newspaper Company and the League of Women Voters teamed up to make this debate possible," Hedlund said. "I do believe it is important for the voters to see some substance in a campaign beyond campaign signs and slick brochures."

The contenders see the upcoming debate as a way to clarify the differences in their platforms.

"I very much look forward to the opportunity to distinguish what I stand for from the record of my opponent," LeClair said. "This race is about values and priorities. I believe that Beacon Hill has lost its focus. The upcoming debate will serve to highlight my differing priorities from my opponent."

Absentee ballots for state election

Absentee ballots for the state election Nov. 5, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noon Monday, Nov. 4, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

- Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open.
- Physical disability.
- Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Nov. 5 to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the oval to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check-in tables. The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your Town Clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the Town Clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

The Green Company sends our most sincere thanks to the Selectmen of the Town of Cohasset, to the fire and police stations, the downtown business community, and to Pete Flaherty - for their assistance and warm hospitality during our recent company meeting on Thursday, October 10.

The entire day was one to remember, from the morning meeting and lunch at The Red Lion Inn to the sunny afternoon spent combing the village for answers to the riddles of our 'Cohasset Quandaries' treasure hunt.

Your enthusiastic support and good will helped make the day unforgettable and enormously successful.

Many thanks from all of us to all of you!

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

GET WELL SOON

I want to start this week by sending out a huge "hope you are feeling better soon" message to Fred "Bud" Piepenbrink! Bud is hopefully coming home from the hospital as I am writing this column and I want him to know that his family and friends are all thinking about you and want you to feel better real soon. You are a very special guy to us all Papa!

SUPPORT HOCKEY PLAYERS

It's that time again! The third annual holiday calendar raffle is underway! On Sunday, Nov. 3, the Cohasset High School Varsity and Junior Varsity hockey players will begin selling raffle tickets to their family, friends and neighbors. Raffle tickets cost $5 each. Tickets can also be purchased on Nov. 9 and 10 at Cohasset Stop & Shop. Every day during the month of December, prizes donated by local merchants will be delivered to a lucky daily winner. Winning tickets will be re-entered into the pool so every ticket has 32 chances to win! This year's prizes are valued at more than $2,000 including a pair of $250 Maui Jim Sunglasses and a special New Year's Day bonus of $150 in cash! The players, parents and Hockey Boosters sincerely thank the local merchants who donated to this fundraiser. All monies raised are used to purchase team equipment, continue team development and fund the "Coach Dennis Walsh Hockey Scholarship" sponsored by the Hockey Boosters.

Please join the fun and support our Varsity and JV Hockey programs by purchasing a raffle ticket,-you have 32 chances to be a lucky winner.

AT SYRACUSE

James Bertovich, 17 Summer St., has enrolled in Syracuse University's College of Visual and Performing Arts and is majoring in industrial design. This is great news James and we all wish you all the best.

Jason McCaffrey, 619 Jerusalem Road, has enrolled in Syracuse University's School of Law. We all wish you the best of luck as you begin this new time in your life.

SPEAKER SERIES

Rep. Garrett Bradley will be the guest speaker at the Lunchtime Speaker series at the South Shore Art Center on Friday Oct. 25 from noon to 1p.m. Rep. Bradley will be in Cohasset to discuss the controversial Chapter 40B article which is now affecting much of the South Shore. Bradley will present his views on 40B and how they impact our community and offer his suggestions on what can be done to improve this state mandated article. There will be a Q&A after his presentation. If you have any interest in this topic bring your lunch and join us. This event is open to the public. For more info call The Cohasset Social Service League 781-383-0771.

HARVEST SUPPER

The Beechwood Congregational Church is holding its Harvest Supper on Thursday evening, Oct. 24 at 6:30. DAR LUNCHEON, TALK

The Colonel Thomas Lothrop/Old Colony and Chief Justice Cushing Daughters of the American Revolution Chapters of Massachusetts held its October meeting and luncheon at the Lightkeeper's Residence in Cohasset on Sunday, Oct. 20. Three state DAR officers were guests. They were State Regent, Marcelyn Karagosian, State Corresponding Secretary, Kathryn Kingsbury, and State Treasurer, Virginia Mucciaccio.

State Regent, Mrs. Karagosian told about the history of the DAR and about the many projects that the National DAR and the state DAR have done since they were first organized. She presented American and DAR flags to the regents of each chapter. Barbara Dillon of The Colonel Thomas Lothrop/Old Colony Chapter and Joan Powers of the Chief Justice Cushing Chapter.

BUS SAFETY

This week is National School Bus Safety Week and a reminder is being sent out to all vehicle drivers to be mindful and respectful of busses at all times. All people need to keep in mind that their is a law that prohibits the passing of a school bus when it is stopped with red lights flashing and the stop arm is out! Bus drivers have the right to report any violations to the Cohasset Police. It may delay you a few minutes in your day to wait but it will save an accident from happening!

HALF DAYS

Cohasset children in grades 1-6 will have half days on Tuesday, Oct. 29 and Wednesday, Oct. 30. The Deer Hill School will dismiss at 12:30 p.m. and the Osgood will dismiss at 1 p.m. There will be no morning and afternoon Kindergarten on these days due to parent/teacher conferences.

MAKE A DIFFERENCE!

This Saturday, Oct. 26 is National Make A Difference Day. This day is a National Day of Volunteerism and so many things can be done around your town to make a difference. If you and your family find something that you can do, either by helping someone in need, cleaning or sprucing up an area in town or volunteering to help out at one of the schools it all makes a huge difference! Make sure to send me some of the ways that you were able to help out along with any photos you may have.

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

DIGITAL ADVANTAGE

Speech covers a wide variety of frequencies (pitches), and hearing loss is usually not consistent across all frequencies. For example, many people have a high-frequency hearing loss, in which it is difficult to hear high-pitched sounds (i.e. female voices). This presents a problem because the person hears some loudness from the low pitches, but does not have clarity from the missing high pitches. When fitting this loss with a hearing instrument, the hearing specialist matches the exact amount of amplification for that exact hearing loss at that precise frequency. Digital hearing instruments divide the frequency/pitch range into channels and bands, allowing frequency-specific adjustments to be made. If hearing loss changes across the frequency spectrum, additional channels/bands may be needed.

Digital hearing aids feature the most advanced technology available today. They can be programmed precisely to the patient's individual hearing loss, even at each specific frequency and/or pitch, and digitals are easy to use because they adjust volume. Their circuits offer improved clarity of sound, less circuit noise, faster processing of sound, and improved listening in noise when compared to analog circuits. Better hearing has never been so attainable before the advent of today's hearing instruments. See these tiny wonders soon at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 80 North Avenue, Rt. 139, North Medical Building, Abington, or call us at 781-878-9723 to arrange a free comprehensive hearing test.

P.S. Digital hearing instruments present the greatest amount of technical sophistication available in a hearing instrument by virtue of their ability to process sound digitally.

Club learns about the fine art of flower arranging

By Amanda Gontarz
CORRESPONDENT

When her youngest child went off to college in 1981, Nancy Perkins took a sabbatical from her position as an art teacher and planned a cross-country bicycle trip with her late husband, who quit his job as a school principal for the trip.

The couple flew to San Diego and biked their way across the country. While they were gone, their son kept watch over the 12-acre Merrimac farm, on which the Perkins were growing Christmas trees to earn money for their retirement.

The couple called home weekly to check in with their son, who had some bad news to report one week. Gypsy moths had moved onto the farm and began eating away at the Christmas trees. By the time they returned home, more than 4,000 trees had been destroyed.

Because the trees take about eight years to grow, Perkins and her husband decided to do something different with the land. They began to grow herbs and flowers, holding herbal luncheons and garden tours.

"Because I was a teacher, it seemed like a natural transition to go into flower arranging," said Perkins to the Community Garden Club of Cohasset.

She spoke to the club Tuesday, giving the members advice about how to grow and preserve flowers as well as arrange them in wreaths or decorative containers. Perkins used her works as examples, showing the club how to start similar projects. In addition to leading workshops for garden clubs all over the area, Perkins also teaches her art at Northern Essex Community College.

"It's an art form. The workshop is practice for flower shows, but also for our enjoyment."

— Lee Drew, garden club member

Lee Drew, the club's workshop committee chairwoman, said this workshop exposed members to preserved flower arrangement.

"It's an art form," Drew said. "The workshop is practice for flower shows, but also for our enjoyment."

One of three garden clubs in Cohasset, the Community Garden Club boasts a membership of more than 200 and holds several workshops and events each month, according to club president, Sally Avery. Guests such as Perkins are often brought in to lead a workshop or members teach the club various techniques or ideas.

Formed in 1959, the organization is involved in the preservation and beautification of various areas around town, including the Lightkeeper's Cottage, the Lothrop House on Summer Street, and Constitution Park. Avery said that the club also contributes to the Trustees of Reservations as well as sponsoring annual scholarships for Cohasset High School seniors.

The Community Garden Club also holds mini flower shows, which give new members the chance to learn how an actual flower show is managed and judged.

Tish Grinnell, a charter member of the club and former president, is a master judge of the Garden Club Federation in Massachusetts and said the club aims to educate its members about horticulture and flower arranging.

"We have these mini-shows because members have to know what a judge is looking for," Grinnell said. "It also encourages them to grow interesting plants."

Horticulture chairwoman, Lelia Weinstein, said she saw the club as a way to learn and teach others, not simply as a social organization.

"The members have an opportunity to grow in terms of knowledge and understanding of the Earth and how to protect it," she said.

She said she also plans to teach the club members about plants from Europe or Asia that have found their way over to the United States, but are not necessarily good for the environment.

Weinstein said, "Everyone's been cutting down the bittersweet plant because it looks nice, when, in reality, its berries are poisonous and it's been hurting our plants and trees."

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Our 'Big Dig'

We've been writing about Greenbush for more than a decade, but one of the most interesting stories we've told is about the potential for colonial artifacts along the right-of-way in Hingham.

Thanks to the persistence of John P. Richardson, a historian and environmentalist, who lives on Fort Hill Street, the issue is coming to the forefront.

In our story last week in the Cohasset Mariner, we listed myriad items that might be unearthed during tunnel construction in Hingham Square, which is built largely on filled land. Those include beads, bottles, bricks and brickwork, buckles, buttons, candlesticks, ceramics, clock parts, coins, combs, cooking vessels, cutlery, glasses and decanters, firearms, furniture hardware, window glass, hinges, horseshoes and horse fittings, locks, porcelain, jewelry, silver, tiles, smoking pipes, toys, wig curlers and more. There's also the possibility of finding Native American artifacts and even the remains of an old canoe.

What makes Hingham unique among the other Greenbush towns that include Braintree, Weymouth, Cohasset and Scituate is the town's square, which is on filled land and the plans to dig the tunnel to protect the square that is on the National Register of Historic Places.

"Because the village developed along, and overlooking, a stream (Town Brook) terminated at Hingham Harbor, expanding residential and commercial activity over more than 300 years necessitated vast filling of wetlands," Mr. Richardson explains, adding the filling was accomplished by oxcart and wheelbarrow, so there are many strata containing artifacts.

The "Section 106" agreement hammered out among the Army Corps of Engineers, the Massachusetts Historical Commission, the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation in Washington and the five Greenbush towns should ensure historic resources along the Greenbush Line are protected. And Epsilon Associates of Maynard has been hired as conservator for the project to make sure the MBTA lives up to the Section 106 agreement.

Our towns are among the oldest in the country and as Mr. Richardson says, what is unearthed can tell a story – our story.

We look forward to sharing more about what may lie beneath when the shovels come to town.

Election overload

There's a lot about the upcoming state election in our pages. We've committed to covering the state senate and state representative races because they are close to home. While the coverage may be putting a squeeze on our news hole for other stories – we think giving our readers the fullest picture possible of our candidates is important. There is no doubt in our mind that the incumbents and their challengers care about the South Shore and the many challenges that we face. Our hope is that you will care as well and make an educated choice on Nov. 5.

Student council on CHS vandalism

TO THE EDITOR:

(This letter was sent to the Mariner last week, but was just signed 'Cohasset High School Student Council.' The Mariner only prints letters signed by individuals..)

On behalf of the Cohasset High School student body, we would like to acknowledge the event that occurred during Homecoming Weekend. A few irresponsible people performed a malicious act against the high school, disgracing the students, faculty and our town of Cohasset. The offenders vandalized the school by throwing rocks and breaking 13 windows. We do not condone such behavior and believe these actions to be a misrepresentation of the positive character of Cohasset High School. We hope that the police find the culprit or culprits who damaged the school property and deal with them accordingly.

Goodwin thanked

TO THE EDITOR:

The American Cancer Society held its annual Making Strides Against Breast Cancer Walk along the Charles River, in Boston, on Oct. 6. A group of friends from the South Shore organized a team that we called Cheryl and Company to participate in the event to raise funds to help find a cure for breast cancer.

The team is proud to have raised more than $1400 for this worthy cause. We would like to thank all those in the community who supported us with a contribution and who helped to make our efforts a success. We are especially grateful to Goodwin Graphics, of Cohasset, that very generously donated the printing on our team T-shirts.

Sewer rebate

TO THE EDITOR:

Those who have connected their principal residence to the town's sewer system should be aware that part of the cost can be recovered by filing Schedule SC "Septic Credit" as an amendment to the latest state income tax. The credit is 40 percent of the cost, up to $6,000, with a max credit each year of $1,500. One must obtain a letter from the sewer department confirming that the hook up was mandated, and enclose a receipted bill from the hook-up contractor. The form SC is filed with form "Application for Abatement/Amended Return", both obtainable by phoning the Mass Dept. of Revenue. One does not file an amended return, only these two forms.

Please don't call me for further info; that's all I think I know. The instructions that accompany Schedule SC provide all needed information.

HEALTH NOTES

Walking and rails to trails effort

Most days, I walk; not through any great love of walking, although many of us who spent much time on boats or ships know that it's a great release to get out on land after being cooped up for a while and walk, walk, walk….. It was only later, that we learned that it was one of natures best defenses against getting physically rusty. Statistics say that about 25 percent of us walk or engage in other forms of exercise. The rest are, well, getting rusty. At the Cohasset Office of Elder Affairs at the Community Center, Kathy Bryanton and the Board of Health have decided to restart a program which was once very popular in Cohasset which we will now call the Senior Men's Activity Restoration Team — acronym: SMART. Now, Kathy has a number of programs designed to be a great benefit to seniors in Town, but she reports that few men respond with enthusiasm to calls for more exercise.

To this end, the Board of Health for which increased physical activity has become a crusade, is helping to sponsor with the Counsel on Elder Affairs, an event which honors senior men and women who walk the NIH prescribed 3 miles a day for at least four days a week. We will be announcing a convocation of these stalwarts each of whom will receive a breakfast at the Community Center, a citation, and an offer to get involved in a program to induce other colleagues, friends, cronies, etc., to become involved in walking to a different location in town four times a week.

We also hope to introduce you to Matthew O'Brien who can translate elder to teen, and much more, who will be helping us in this effort. His brother already works for the Board of Health on other issues. On the other hand, this member of the Board of Health is good with ideas, but awful on details, so please contact the Cohasset Office of Elder Affairs for particulars. When we know the size of the group of those wishing to participate we will publish more comprehensive plans. So please sign up by calling Elder Affairs or the Board of Health at 781 383-9112 or 781 383-4116, respectively.

Incidentally, Elder Affairs has a diversity of programs designed to support those of us who are getting on. They are always updating the listing of Senior Vista, the newsletter sent to all in Town over 50. They have a senior breakfast on Fridays, a nutrition program, and all sorts of fitness programs Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, as well as a fit beginners program for those of us who don't understand dumbbells, pliés, or Tae Chi. And drop by the Community Center for free information on a large number of topics dealing with your personal life; many health related.

And, this just in: Cohasset Knoll on 3-A has a new fitness center, recently opened, which is free for everyone. They also have a physical therapist with whom you can discuss your exercise program. For Information, call 781 383-9060.

The PATH to better health

Also, the Joint Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate Rails with Trails initiative is developing nicely. Now called PATH the acronym for People for Active Transportation and Health has had a joint meeting which you may have read about. Last week, our Health Officer, Joe Godzik met with his counterparts in Hingham and Scituate together with Mark and Lisa Fenton, the walking advocates from Scituate and walked over a part of the proposed trail which may link the right of way between the three towns. In their subsequent discussion, they enlisted the support of James Scanlan, Secretary & MBTA Chairman, Executive Office of Transportation and Construction, who is having his staff revisit the feasibility of a trail in the Town Right of way. The trail would run along the west side of the tracks from Greenbush all the way to Hingham center.

There are compelling reasons for having a trail along this corridor. It will improve transportation quality and public health, will reduce negative impacts of the train, and will be a valued amenity for the towns.

a) Transportation — The trail will reduce traffic and parking requirements in Cohasset, Greenbush and North Scituate, as more users will be able to walk and bicycle to those stations.

b) Economic benefits — A trail will be used for non-train related transportation (trips to school, for errands) and will increase local commerce in Cohasset, Hingham, Greenbush and North Scituate.

c) Housing values —The trail will reduce negative impacts for abutters. Research shows trails often increase surrounding housing values; they are often advertised by realtors.

d) Safety — Rails with trails are safe; probably safer than without trails. Surveillance and legal access are improved, and unlawful activity and trespassing can be reduced.

e) Recreation — Many people already use the corridor for mountain biking, walking, and running; it will be usable by many more residents of wider ability when improved.

f) Health — A transportation and recreation trail will be good for the health of residents and will be a tool in the fight against a rising epidemic of inactivity and obesity in America.

Flu clinic

There will be a Flu Clinic at the Cohasset Town Hall Auditorium on Saturday Nov. 2 from 10 to 12 for those who are above 50 or are immune compromised. Wear a short sleeve shirt.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

A really mixed up state of affairs

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

A group is working hard to develop a senior housing project on a wooded parcel the Town already owns behind Stop & Shop. The preliminary plans show a typical "cookie-cutter" housing project.

Another group is working hard to oppose the proposed "cookie-cutter" 40B Avalon Bay rental apartment project on the former Norfolk Conveyor parcel. Does this begin to sound a bit crazy to you? Wait, there's more.

Cohasset is in the process of completing a $40 million Deer Hill and Middle/Senior High School addition/renovation. Before the beginning of the project, I phoned the project architect and asked if the project would result in a "green" building (one which would meet Energy Star or LEED standards.) He said, "No. No one asked us for that. We don't do that." So, long before this project is complete, it is energy-obsolete; in dire need of an energy retrofit. A bit crazy?

Even worse is the new parking lot at the high school. Apparently so many students drive to school that the parking lot had to be enlarged. I guess you could call it reverse ecology. How did we get to this mixed-up state of affairs?

In the scientific-technological stage of human development, from the early 18th century to the present day, Western man has treated the Earth as if only humans mattered. As if natural ecosystems could be destroyed at the whim of the human "owner". It is now painfully obvious that this attitude is leading to the total shutdown of Earth's living systems. We've polluted the air, poisoned the water and soil, brought tens of thousands of species to extinction, altered the global climate, and are contemplating a war to maintain our squandering of petroleum.

We can't keep building "developments" as if Earth's natural systems are irrelevant. It is time to learn how to build sustainable developments, and begin to restore natural ecosystems. If we build like nature does, our habitats will be sustainable. And lovely to behold.

Some of the basics are kindergarten stuff. Trees and other green plants absorb carbon dioxide and give off oxygen. The Earth needs this process desperately, because of the massive over-production of carbon dioxide by humans. This excess carbon dioxide is now causing global climate change. Humans need oxygen to live. So, don't destroy any more trees and other green life forms. Instead, plant them and nurture them.

Forests absorb rainfall and slowly filter it into the aquifer. The trees and plants are nourished, and water is available for other life forms. We can live a week at most without water. So, don't interfere with this process. Begin removing impervious surfaces, like asphalt and sprawl developments, from the Earth.

Nature self-organizes living systems according to the principles of complexity and miniaturization. Computer design has benefited from this approach. Early computers filled buildings. Now they fit in the palm of your hand. Natural systems tend toward rich mixtures. Therefore, build places for people to live that are miniaturized and complex.

Zoning seems to have benefited from one of those perverse laws of the universe, such as, "No good deed goes unpunished." How zoning has captured the mind of our culture defies common sense. Maybe it's because zoning allows building to proceed with little or no thought. It's like one of those sorting games kids play, putting all the red beads in one dish, all the blues in another, and so on. "We'll put all the elders over here, and all the school kids over there, and all the family houses somewhere else, etc." And this gets called planning? Drives me crazy.

Zoning results in the most boring arrangement of human habitation ever invented. Not only boring, but also people are segregated and isolated. Zoning encourages sprawl development, with its inordinately high costs for asphalt streets, driveways, parking lots, miles of wires, water pipes, sewer pipes, etc. Energy costs escalate exponentially. Nature doesn't zone. Therefore, find ways to build a sustainable community in spite of zoning. Overlay districts can be created that promote Smart Growth.

An article in last week's Mariner said, "The initiative by Joe Nedrow's Senior Housing Committee to put 50 units of senior housing behind the Stop & Shop meets all the requirements of excellent planning." With all due respect to Joe and his committee, all folks with the best of intentions, this proposal would cut down trees and other green plants, evict the life forms now residing there, add asphalt and other impervious surfaces, and create a zoned sprawl project.

Is there a way not senior housing but singles-single parent-couples-family-elder homes can be built in Cohasset that will be harmonious with what is here now? That will not add to the eco-destruction of the last three centuries? That will be sustainable and follow nature's laws? That can make Cohasset a lovelier town than it is now? Yes, of course. People have been building lovely, sustainable towns for millennia. We merely need to break out of the zoning-sprawl-suburban trance we're in, and follow Mother Nature's lead.

Saving Barnes Sanctuary for posterity

COMMENTARY

RICH SILVIA

Wheelwright Park, as most of you know it, is in serious trouble. In 1935, during the Great Depression, the Wheelwright Park "area" was held in such high regard by President Roosevelt's WPA that its landscape rehabilitation for enhanced public enjoyment was the ninth project funded in all of Massachusetts.

Those enhancements included: the building of a public skating pond with indigenous stone, much like we have on our common; fireplaces, benches, 4,000 feet of improvements to Native American trails, camping & pick nick areas and more.

Today the park is cherished by thousands who find its serene beauty a refreshing escape. Whether hiking in the holly groves, jogging by the squirrelly oaks, climbing glacial rocks, walking your dog under the cathedral of old pines, horseback riding, birding or just plain relaxing it is truly food for the soul. A public treasure, it is a special and relatively untouched piece of ancient "Quonahassit".

Enjoying the area as the Native Americans did 1,000 years ago may not be possible in the near future.

The Wheelwright Park area is not all public land. The northeast edge which stretches from North Main Street to Forest Avenue is town-owned. A narrow strip in the center, the Arthur Leah Boy Scout Retreat, is owned by our local Troup 28 Boy Scouts. The large 32 acre southern portion is the "private" Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary.

The Barnes family has recently been in the process of selling their 32-acre section to a developer for a housing development. As a member of your Community Preservation Committee (CPC), I was made aware of the pending sale. After visiting with the Barnes family, listening to their concerns and explaining the role of Cohasset's new CPC, it became obvious that we both had the same interest at heart. The Barnes wanted the land to be kept as a wildlife sanctuary but had serious reservations about the Town's willingness to raise $1,000,000.

After being given assurance that the CPC would make every effort to raise sufficient funds to rescue the Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary, the family gave their word that they would give the Town until the Nov. 18 special town meeting to buy the land.

If the town failed to raise the funds, then the sanctuary would be sold to developers. In the ensuing months, while the CPC studied the land, developed funding partners and courted the town fathers, the Barnes family, under pressure from developers, remained true to their word. We now have a signed purchase and sales agreement between our Selectmen and the Barnes Family. We owe the Barnes family a very sincere debt of gratitude for this opportunity!

But! We only have until the Nov. 18 special town meeting to both raise the funds and win a two-thirds vote at that meeting.

Thus far over $600,000 has been raised that will not impact on the tax rate. Hooray for that! We have worked hard in the past months to both apply for and be in competition for large grants. (no guarantees of receiving a nickel)

The Cohasset Conservation Trust has come to the rescue with a very generous motivational challenge to all private contributors in the community. They will match your tax free contributions to a maximum of $150,000. That's a potential for an additional $300,000 raising the total to $900,000.

Your contributions and town meeting attendance are critical.

Your contributions, of any size, need to be made out to: Cohasset Conservation Trust Note: Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary

Mail to: Cohasset Conservation Trust PO Box 314 Cohasset, MA 02025

Please help by writing a check now We only have until Nov. 18!

The Cohasset Board of Water Commissioner's "2002 Water Quality Report" graphically illustrates the importance of this property, which is located in the James Brook Water Shed, as an integral part of the Sohier Street Well Field Zone of contribution to our drinking water. It also sits on part of our precious underground aquifer.

Here is why it is so important that we preserve the land:

"The Protection of the Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary is critical in maintaining the ecological integrity of this area."

— J. Andrew Walsh, Ecologist, The Trustees of Reservations

"The Massachusetts Natural Heritage and Endangered Species Program supports the efforts of the Cohasset's Conservation Trust and it's Community Preservation Committee to protect the Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary."

— Joanne Singfield, Massachusetts Division of Fish and Wildlife

"Wheelwright park would lose significant value as a place of quietude were the adjacent and embraced Barnes parcel to be developed for other than open space habitat."

— Richard Avery, Cohasset Conservation Trust

"The Barnes Sanctuary and Wheelwright Park have played a vital role in the education, leadership, and character development of scouts for generations. Its loss to development would deal a crushing blow to our scouting program."

— Arthur Lehr, Scoutmaster, Eagle Scout 1937.

Downy Woodpeckers — our local drummers

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Circe is the Greek Goddess who is most famous for turning Odysseus' sailors into swine. She also, in a strange way, is responsible for the fact that woodpeckers belong to the Picadae family. Picus, the son of Saturn, was handsome and possessed the powers of prophecy. Circe fell in love with Picus and became angry when he did not return her love. So angry that she turned him into a woodpecker. The Downy Woodpecker (Picoides pubescens) is the smallest woodpecker in North America. Picoides is from the Latin word, picus, which means woodpecker. The second part of its name refers to the downy or pubescent-looking feathers around its face.

Like other woodpeckers, the downy is black and white. Adult males have red on the back of the head. Juveniles have red on the top of the head. Adult females have no red feathers. Their chisel-shaped bill is good for drilling holes in hardwood trees and prying under bark for insects. To prevent headaches while hammering, the skull is extra thick and the frontal bones are more folded at the base of the bill to help absorb the shock of pounding. The prominent tuft of bristles around the nostrils helps prevent wood chips and sawdust from being inhaled. Its tongue is long; so long that it coils up between the skull and the skin, somewhat the way a roller shade works. The ability to extend the tongue beyond the end of the bill is useful for extracting insects from cavities, especially since the tip is usually barbed and sticky.

Most birds have four toes, although the way the toes point varies among species. All but two species of woodpeckers have four toes. These are positioned with two facing forward and two backward, an arrangement known as zygodactyl. The outer back toe is longer than the inner one in order to provide the bird more stability as it hitches its way up and down tree trunks. They descend tail first, unlike nuthatches that come headfirst. Even more stability is achieved from the tail. The two central tail feathers are slightly curved and unusually stiff to act as a prop. If you look closely at Downy Woodpeckers at your feeder, or on nearby trees, you will probably see this phenomenon at work.

The Downy Woodpecker looks almost exactly like the Hairy Woodpecker. The only difference is that the Hairy Woodpecker is bigger, has a much bigger bill, and has no black bars on its outer tail feathers. Both these birds have white backs, the only North American woodpeckers that do. The downy is happy in suburban yards and small woodlots or in urban parks. The hairy needs larger wooded or forested areas with more and bigger trees.

Downy Woodpeckers do not sing in the usual sense, although they sometimes make a sound resembling a descending whinny. Drumming is what they do to attract a mate, to show off a potential nest site, or to defend a territory. They may use a telephone pole, the side of a house, or a hollow branch for their tapping. Anything that makes a loud noise will do. Metallic surfaces work very well.

In the spring, Downy Woodpeckers, like other woodpeckers, excavate nesting holes in trees, usually dead snags. Both males and females help with this project. Some of the wood chips get left in the hole to cushion the eggs. The female lays three to eight white eggs. Both sexes incubate, but the male tends to take the night duty while the female sleeps in a nearby hole. In the fall, they dig out new holes for roosting in the winter. Males and females usually use separate holes for roosting. Other cavity nesters, such as chickadees, titmice or nuthatches, take advantage of the work done by woodpeckers and use their abandoned holes in subsequent years.

Although Downy Woodpeckers eat insects, larvae and insect eggs, they will also eat berries, including poison ivy. They locate insects under the bark by listening for movement after they hammer on the tree with their beak. Since they also enjoy sunflower seeds, suet and peanuts, they are attracted to feeders in the winter. In fact, more than 92 percent of Cornell's Project FeederWatch participants in Massachusetts reported Downy Woodpeckers at their feeders last winter. Downies are the most common woodpecker in North America. They are year-round residents in all parts of the United States except above treeline and in the southwestern desert.

Female Downy Woodpecker.

Since the Downy Woodpecker is a relatively tame bird, it is worth putting up feeders to try to attract them. They are fun to have around to watch in winter. The only trick is to figure out a way to keep the squirrels from stealing the special treats meant for the woodpeckers.

Our new state slogan?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Something tells me our new state slogan isn't going to make it into the finals.

Here it is barely a week out of the chute and already it's on the verge of retirement, maybe even sooner than acting Gov. Jane Swift.

"Massachusetts — Make It Yours."

Catchy, huh? Kinda makes you want to drive straight through to New Hampshire — or into the Atlantic Ocean, whichever comes first.

Personally, I'd drive straight through to Maine, where the slogan is "Ski Me." (The abbreviation for Maine is Me., get it?) I don't ski, but just reading that slogan makes me want to go to Maine and watch.

"Massachusetts — Make It Yours."

I'm not sure what that means. A number of people have tried to make it theirs, but the only ones I know who have been successful are the Kennedys, and even they are starting to thin out and spread out across the country.

I'd like to be able to tell you that the slogan was chosen after a nationwide search, but actually our Department of Travel and Tourism got only as far as 2 Park Plaza, home of CGN Marketing and Creative Services, where the slogan was born.

Since the department retains CGN for $300,000 a year, I hope they have more to do for us than just sit around and think up slogans.

Why couldn't they come up with something like "Virginia is for lovers," although after studying Virginia's blue laws, anyone with love on his or her mind had best stop at a motel on the other side of the Potomac.

Our state's old slogan — "The spirit of Massachusetts is the spirit of America" — never caught on, especially among the folk who had to fit it on a T-shirt.

Before turning to CGN, the Department of Travel and Tourism held a widely advertised contest with a free vacation weekend as a prize and even opened a web site so that contestants could reach them easily, to choose a new slogan.

There were more than 400 entries, and some of them were good ones, like "Massachusetts: Where Freedom Begins," but they were rejected.

I wonder who at CGN got the free weekend? But I digress . . .

Some states have had slogans or catch words designed to attract tourists' dollars for years.

Can't you just see the trout and bass leaping for your hook when Minnesota calls itself "The Land of 10,000 Lakes?"

That's why the Minneapolis basketball team called itself "the Lakers," and they liked it so well that Lakers they remained even after they moved to Los Angeles, where there isn't a lake for miles around.

Fortunately, acting Gov. Swift says she is not ready to sign on and confirm "Massachusetts — Make It Yours" as the state slogan.

That may become the first official duty of the Shannon O'Brien or Mitt Romney administration.

Support purchase of Barnes property

TO THE EDITOR:

We have a unique opportunity to preserve some valuable open space by purchasing a parcel of land next to Wheelwright Park off of Main Street.

Why is it unique?

Because of the efforts of the Friend's of the Barnes Wildlife sanctuary the town can finalize purchase of the land for by raising the last 15 percent of the money needed to purchase the land.

What do you need to do?

First make a contribution to the Cohasset Conservation Trust
Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary
PO Box 314
Cohasset, MA 02025

Second attend Town meeting in November and vote to have the town purchase this precious piece of land.

Why:

This will save 32 pristine acres adjacent to Wheelwright Park for the Town of Cohasset. These 32 acres are also adjacent to White Holly Hill Farm-forest, The Arthur Lehr Boy Scout retreat, Witch Hazel Swamp, and the Bancroft Bird Sanctuary.

It has played a vital role in the development of generations of Boy Scouts. For decades adults and children alike have enjoyed its skating pond in the winter. In addition, its paths have become a well-used favorite for hikers and dog walkers.

The Board of Selectman, the Cohasset Conservation Trust, the Natural Heritage & Endangered Species Program, the Trustees of Reservations and many others support the Barnes family's wish to sell their 32 acres to the Town of Cohasset rather than to developers. However, we must act quickly. To date, the Selectmen have committed $500,000 in MBTA mitigation funds, and $100,000 has been committed by the Cohasset Conservation Trust. Additionally, the Trust has challenged the community to raise $150,000 in funds that it will match dollar for dollar. With a $100,000 contribution from the CPC (pending approval at the Town Meeting), we will reach the purchase price goal of $1,000,000.

For more information, or to find out how you can volunteer contact the Friends at jeanhajjar56@hotmail.com or call Jean Hajjar at 383-9917. A map of this property showing the trails and skating pond is also available.

Election 2002

Five questions were posed this week to incumbent Republican state Sen. Bob Hedlund and his Democratic challenger, Ted LeClair. The Plymouth-Norfolk District encompasses eight towns: Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset, Hull, Scituate, Marshfield, Norwell, and Duxbury.

Hedlund shares his views

1. How should the mess on Beacon Hill be addressed?

State government is currently in disaster. One reason is the one-party system. It is the rank and file members who have ceded their authority to the leadership. There are very few people like myself who will vote for their districts' best interests, rather than follow the leadership. What I am focusing on is my independence and my effectiveness for the district. I have stood by my district, rather than follow the leadership.

Respect for the process of government and for the taxpayer is worse than at any time since I've been here. We need to change the way the government is operating. I am unconvinced that the leadership has made any strides to go after waste. There has been no reform and no cost savings on projects we could have saved money on, just a knee-jerk reaction to raise taxes. One potentially cost-saving area that should be investigated is the duplication of state agencies. There are duplicative agencies and duplicative staffing.

2. What is your stand on education?

Education is a priority. I am a leader in the Senate to strengthen the School Building Assistance program, which is vital to many towns in the district. Each year, I have fought to ensure that adequate funding is included in the state budget so that local school construction projects move forward. Major reforms were enacted in the program in 2000 designed to streamline the process and eliminate the financial disincentive for communities to undertake new construction, rather than renovation. This year, I offered an amendment during the budget debate to restore adequate funding levels to the program. Level funding does not mean that education was not prioritized. We made education level funded when programs around the state have been drastically cut because of the economic downturn.

3. Please give your stand on health care.

I have been a staunch advocate for numerous health care reforms and initiatives, which include playing a major role in the passage of the Senior Pharmacy Program and supporting reforms to the Prescription Advantage Program that have increased accessibility; advocating for HMO reform by supporting measures aimed at reining in rates and improving access; working closely with South Shore Hospital officials on the Determination of Need process with the Department of Public Health to secure a cardiac surgery license for South Shore Hospital; and acting as an intermediary between South Shore elders and Tufts Secure Horizons HMO to improve the flow of information on important coverage changes by arranging an informational meeting for seniors with Secure Horizons officials.

4. You can't turn back the clock, but in hindsight, and in light of subsequent developments, would the Mills Mall plan have been a good thing for the former Naval Air Station?

No. Regardless of current factors, it does not change what the negative impacts to the quality of life in the region would have been from what was to be the largest mall in New England. Tri Town Development is now implementing the initial phases for a more reasonable development plan. These plans will hopefully soon lead to benefits for the host communities. I am proud to have been the first elected official to stand with residents in opposition to the Mills Mega Mall, despite pressure from some interest groups like the South Shore Chamber of Commerce.

5. What was wrong (or right) with Chapter 40B changes in the Omnibus Housing Bill passed last summer?

The legislation would do nothing to provide affordable housing or return any control to local communities. This is why all legislators in southeastern, Massachusetts are opposed to this bill. My opponent is ill-informed with his announced support of this legislation.

The lone positive element of the bill has been implemented administratively by the governor. This provision would allow communities that create state-certified affordable housing plans and produce new subsidized or affordable housing at an annual rate of at least 75 percent of its total housing units to deny comprehensive permits for one year. If a community produces new affordable units equal to 1.5 percent of its housing stock, it could deny comprehensive permits for two years.

I have led efforts in the Senate to reform 40B. My legislation, "Our Act Relative to Affordable Housing," is what is needed for local communities to have input into this critical issue and return reasonable controls to our towns.

Endorsements

Unions and associations endorsing Hedlund are the Police Association of Massachusetts; the Massachusetts Nurses Association; Weymouth Firefighters; NAGE (the National Association of Government Employees); the Mass. Correction Officer Association; Hingham/Hull/Duxbery/Cohasset Police Unions; the Boston Carmens Union (MBTA employees); the UFCW, all union supermarket employees in eastern Massachusetts.; Local 4 operating engineers (heavy equipment), Local 133 Laborers Union; Local 103 Electricians; Citizens for Limited Taxation; and the National Federation of Independent Businesses.

Prominent local Democrats supporting Hedlund include two former rivals, former state Sen. Brian McDonald of Weymouth and Ted Wheeler, who was a longtime campaign manager for former state Rep. Bob Ambler; former longtime Weymouth Town Moderator John Reilly, a Massachusetts Teachers Association organizer and mediator.

Current and former Hull officials supporting Hedlund include Tom Chirillo, former member of the Hull Board of Assessors and current business agent of Laborers' Local 223, who also serves as vice president of the Mass. AFL-CIO; two current members of the Hull Democratic Town Committee who also hold elected positions in Hull, Bartley Kelly of the Hull Re-development Authority and Bob Caisey of the Hull Housing Authority. Also, Brian McCarthy, a former member of the Hull Democratic Town Committee and current chairman of the Hull Council of Aging.

From Marshfield, Hedlund is endorsed by Democrats Jay and Jim Creed. Jay is a member of the Marshfield Planning Board. Jim is a longtime Marshfield selectman and former member of the Marshfield Board of Assessors.

Longtime former Weymouth Selectman and Town Councilor Bill Barry, Jr. is also among the prominent South Shore Democrats supporting Hedlund. Peg Goudy and Democrat John Bewick, former Secretary of Environmental Affairs in the King administration, also support Hedlund.

LeClair shares his views

1. How should the mess on Beacon Hill be addressed?

I am running for the state Senate because I believe that we can do more if our elected officials once again focus on people, rather that politics. I believe Beacon Hill has lost its focus. My campaign is about fixing what is broken and helping to make our state government once again serve the needs of our citizens. There is a great deal of talk that comes from Beacon Hill. Our elected officials talk about our children's education, about health care, and about our economy. I believe we need to do more than just talk about these issues. We need to work together so we can find solutions to our problems. If elected, I will propose legislation that if the budget is not passed and submitted by the legislature by June 30, then the paychecks will stop for the legislators. Results are what matter, and this is why I am running for the state Senate.

2. What is your stand on education?

Our children's education is a top priority for me. I cannot justify to the constituents of the Plymouth/Norfolk District any cuts in education. Our economy, our children, and our future depend on an educated population. If we do not make education a priority, then every other interest we believe in will suffer. Our prosperity is based on the foundation of education. The Legislature is faced with record decreases in revenue and has failed to adequately address the question of government waste.

Public education cannot be compromised. I am proud to have the support of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, the public teacher's union. If elected, I will push for the state to keep its promise and help fund school construction, smaller class sizes, and after school programs. I will focus on our public education system so that our children can have excellent and safe schools. I will not accept level funding of education as an acceptable political compromise.

3. Please give your stand on health care.

As our population grows older, health care will be our most significant social problem. Everyone wants top flight health care; most everyone wants to be able to choose where and what health care they receive; but we cannot afford to pay the entire bill. We need to muster the courage to face this challenge and come up with solutions.

First we must solve the prescription drug challenge—that will be through bulk purchasing power of the state. Next we need to address the need to make health care available to everyone. At the very least, we should open up the state employee system so that everyone who decides to can make the choice to purchase affordable health insurance. Locally we need to do what has not been done for the past four years, and that is obtain a license for South Shore Hospital to perform cardiac surgery.

4. You can't turn back the clock, but in hindsight, and in light of subsequent developments, would the Mills Mall plan have been a good thing for the former Naval Air Station?

The development of the Weymouth Naval Air Station, or lack thereof, is yet another example of a missed opportunity. The Mills Mall plan was not a good plan because it was one project that was driving the entire development.

It is a shame that the Weymouth Naval Air Station, unlike other base closing projects across the nation, has taken five years to discover that the way to go is through a master developer. The redevelopment of the air base is an obviously complex project that involves transportation, environmental, public access, and economic development issues. For the project to have been driven by a single engine (the Mills Mall) was misguided and, as proven by experience, a mistake

I applaud the present course of hiring a master developer who will present a plan where each and every one of the pieces successfully complement each other. An example of just such a plan is the closure of the Glenview Naval Air Station in Illinois. That base closed in 1995 (Weymouth closed in 1997), and today it has an elementary school, a senior center, a recreation center, two golf courses, multi-faceted housing, retail shops, office space, and a train station, all on 1,360 acres (Weymouth is 1,442 acres).

It is unfortunate that our state senator was too busy with the politics of the base, flip flopping on whether or not to build a mall, and did not concentrate on getting the job done through a master developer.

5. What was wrong (or right) with Chapter 40B changes in the Omnibus Housing Bill passed last summer?

The Omnibus Housing Bill made some positive changes to 40B, but did not go far enough. The bill allowed communities to reject a comprehensive permit if they created an acceptable housing plan and produced 0.5 percent affordable housing. instead of 2 percent. That means a town like Marshfield could stop comprehensive permits altogether if it had a plan and 50 affordable units per year were built.

The bill failed, however, to make changes that would allow communities to count housing that is already affordable, like mobile homes and single-family homes. The regulatory changes in August addressed some of these concerns by including accessory apartments and units created through locally subsidized projects and the Community Preservation Act.

A new regulatory change proposed on Oct. 7 will reduce the exemption threshold from 2 percent to .75 percent, and if a town produces 1.5 percent affordable housing, it will be entitled to a two-year exemption.

40B, as it presently is constituted, clearly does not work. The 33-year-old statute has failed in its intended purpose to create affordable housing throughout the state and overburdened our towns with projects that just don't make sense. The omnibus housing bill was a move in the right direction, as evidenced by the recent regulatory changes. Further changes are needed that give towns further control to protect their infrastructure, yet at the same time create effective incentives that will generate housing and allow our elderly, children, and municipal employees to live in our communities.

Ted LeClair

Endorsing LeClair are the Massachusetts Teachers Association, the AFL-CIO, and the New England Regional Carpenters Union.

Prominent Democrats supporting LeClair are Congressmen William Delahunt and Stephen F. Lynch; state Reps. James Murphy and Ronald Mariano; former state Reps. Paul Haley and Robert Ambler; newly elected Norfolk County Treasurer Joseph Connolly, also a councilor at large on the Weymouth Town Council; former state Sens. Allan McKinnon and William Golden; former state Senate candidate James Cantwell; and former Selectman Scott Curry.

LOGAN HONORED

The Scituate Republican Town Committee honored Polly Logan, vice chairman of the state Republican Party, last week with an honorary membership to the SRTC. At the meeting the SRTC also endorsed and made contributions to the campaigns for Mitt Romney (governor), Bob Hedlund (state senate), Tim Cruz (Plymouth County District Attorney), Nathaniel Palmer (state representative for the Third Plymouth District), Dan Grabauskas (state treasurer) and Luiz Gonzaga (U.S. Congress). In the photo, from left, are: SRTC officers Dick Lunn (vice chairman), Dave Nellis (membership), Beryl Denker (secretary-treasurer), Conley Ford (chairman), Logan, and Michael Bleakie (sergeant at arms).

Herb Chambers donates flag depository

The American Flag Code adopted by the United States Congress in 1942 says, "When a flag is in such condition that is no longer a fitting emblem for display, it should be destroyed in a dignified way, preferably by burning."

The American Legion, George H. Mealy Post 118 in Cohasset now has a way for the public to be able to bring them their tattered and worn flags so they may be properly and ceremoniously destroyed. Their new Flag Depository, located in front of the legion post at 98 Summer St., has the look and shape of an American flag. This solid metal Flag Depository protects the flags until they are removed for storage and kept until the time of the desecration ceremony. The Herb Chambers Automobile Dealerships made this new service possible through a donation to the post. Everyone is invited to bring his or her retired flags to the depository.

Jim Watson, owner of Cohasset Hardware, attended the meeting and presented a petition signed by area business owners to end the experiment.

"I don't think that is the solution," said Watson. "I appreciate the selectmen's attention to it, though. I think they are trying to do the right thing, but it had to end. It didn't make any sense."

George Roukounakis, who owns the Citgo station in the village was also at the meeting, complaining of an increase in vehicles using his gas station as a turnaround.

There was initially some discussion about keeping the one-way in place until next week so that the Waterfield Design group could view it in action, but in the end, the selectmen directed Haddad to contact the Department of Public Works and have the road changed back as soon as possible.

Haddad and the selectmen thanked the local area business for agreeing to go along with the experiment in the first place, saying that it provided them with valuable knowledge as they move forward with the Village Revitalization project.

We'll make you smile.

ANNUITY OWNERS READ THIS!
Some annuity owners lose 70% of the value of their annuity to taxes! Will this happen to you?
It's true. Annuities and IRAs can be double-taxed assets (subject to income taxes PLUS estate taxes). After estate taxes and income taxes, there can be as little as 30% of the value remaining. You can learn how to help avoid the loss in the FREE educational booklet "Annuity Owner Mistakes." The booklet is free and shows how to help avoid double taxation and get more benefits from your existing annuity value.

Thoughts on senior housing

TO THE EDITOR:

I'm having difficulty developing sympathy for Joe Nedrow's model "senior" with a home worth $800,000 and who needs a public lift in order to continue living in this wonderful town. The median value for homes if I recall is somewhere in the $630,000 range. That means half the homeowners in town own property less than $630,000 and half own property worth more than $630,000. Those who own property worth less than the median value or less than $800,000 and want their tax dollars supporting housing for those who own property of $800,000 raise their hands. I'm guessing this isn't the strongest argument for the Senior Overlay District.

In addition, as recent events have demonstrated there has been an outbreak of "irrational exuberance" in Cohasset over the past few years regarding new spending items in general. It is always predictable that those supporting a spending issue overestimate the benefits or revenues while underplaying the costs and difficulties that add unforeseen costs. We've seen this with school spending, ball park building, library selling and free cash estimating. Some will say, however, "who could have predicted the terrible economy?" Indeed, prior to last fall's Town Meeting the state had already given a warning about its reduced capability to distribute state taxes back to the towns at prior funding levels. Still, Town Meeting spent some funds I 'll bet they (we) wish they hadn't.

My reason for bringing up the economy and past decisions is not to dwell upon them but rather to observe that, as explained in the Mariner, the Senior Overlay District appears to be another kind of blank check. Nobody argues against affordable senior housing. We do need it. But I remain unconvinced that the Senior Overlay District approach will meet the underlying need for affordable senior housing. Instead of a vague mandate to do good (we all agree on the need), it may be there needs to be more definition of what specific kind of housing is proposed. It may be that a specific site with a specific building footprint is preferable. And by referencing a town-owned parcel it is clear the Senior Housing Committee has already focused on a site. Maybe more information on the ramifications of that focus should be provided. Maybe that should have been the article on the warrant.

40B talk meant to be informational

TO THE EDITOR:

If anyone has ever questioned what is Chapter 40B, then it is time you make it over the Art Center in the village and listen to Rep. Garrett Bradley discuss what Chapter 40B is, what its intended purpose and does it accomplish the goals it was designed for? The affordable housing statute is certainly a noble ideal but it has generated much controversy, not only in Cohasset but statewide.

There are many concerns about the viability of the law as it stands and who stands to profit from it. Many residents of Cohasset have concerns about development and this would be an ideal forum to learn how and why Chapter 40B was enacted and ask any specific questions they may have concerning this topic.

Rep. Bradley was invited several weeks ago to be part of the Social Service League's Lunchtime Speaker Series before any of the controversy surrounding his debates with his opponent Nathaniel Palmer. Our speaker series is meant to be a combination educational and entertaining topics. The choice to ask Rep. Bradley was made solely by the fact he is the sitting state representative and was asked to speak specifically about 40B for the purpose of informing the public. In no way does this appearance endorse one candidate over the other.

The Cohasset Social Service League is not a political organization and we make no endorsement or favor one candidate over the other.

Coastal Center thanks supporters

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the board members of the Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research, we would like to thank all of the residents of Cohasset (and neighboring towns) who joined us for Family Day on Saturday, Sept. 28 at Mariners' Park. We greatly appreciated the enthusiasm expressed in support of our plans to establish an educational center and research facility at the harbor.

We would also like to extend a sincere thank you to the following:

- to the sailing club for making their bathroom facilities accessible to our group
- to the historical society for leading a talk on the history of the building and site
- to Joseph's Hardware store for lending the use of a gas grill
- to Cohasset Lobster Pound for facilitating a dockside tour aboard a lobster boat
- to captain Lorren Gibbons for bringing her fishing vessel dockside for exciting hands-on exploration by the young and not-so-young
- and to the many volunteers who helped make the day possible.

We are now poised to prepare the building for occupancy, and look forward to establishing exciting programs to promote stewardship of our precious coastal resources. We thank all of you who attended our event as well as those who have supported us in previous forums. Your continued support is needed at this critical time.

One Way Street

MARK HADDAD, TOWN MANAGER
BOARD OF SELECTMEN

Just what is the purpose of the one way section on upper Elm Street?

Is it to soften our town center's businesses? Is it to put those businesses into bankruptcy? Is it because you do not like the businesses in downtown Cohasset? Is it to jeopardize our pedestrians?

Is it to increase the opportunity for car accidents as people try backing out of the News/Deli parking lot? Or out of the angled parking along South Main? Is it to create the chance for accidents as people try turning left, crossing traffic coming down over the rise, at South Main and Brook Street to get back to Elm street? Oh wait a minute, is it to increase the possibility of accidents at South Main and Summer as people try turning left? Or is it to cause accidents when people back out of parking places on the north side of South Main at such an angle so that they can make the left hand turn on to Brook since they can not come right around the hardware store to go East on Elm Street? Is it to increase the number of "u-ies" to park in front of the stores on South Main? Is it to increase the occasions for "road rage?"

Is it to increase the traffic flow through the center of town? Is it to exacerbate the tangle between delivery trucks and passenger cars/SUVs? Is it to increase the difficulty of the police and fire services to give assistance to our town?

If so, your purposes are succeeding all expectations.

Goodson leads way past Mashpee to keep gridders perfect

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Cohasset entered the bye week with a convincing 19-6 win over South Shore League rival Mashpee, Friday night, after making the long bus ride to the Cape.

The Skippers improved to a perfect 6-0 (2-0 in SSL play), as senior halfback Braun Goodson hit for the hat trick with three more rushing touchdowns, to bring his season total to 13 TDs for 78 points, good for second place among Div. 5 scorers.

The offensive line of Dan Tarpey, Nick Arment, Matt Casey, Steve Davis and Cosimo Cambi — with assistance from tight end Tom Anderson and fullback Ted Straughn, as we and the downfield blocking by wideouts D J Silvia and John Durkin — opened up huge holes all night for to help Goodson to a record setting performance of 274 yards rushing on 28 carries, nearly 10 yards a pop.

Huge holes were opened all night to help Goodson to a record setting performance of 274 yards rushing on 28 carries, nearly 10 yards a pop.

The first of the senior's three scores was a 49-yard romp around the right side, which capped a game opening four play drive. Sophomore fullback Straughn had the lead block with senior tight end Anderson and senior right tackle Cambi opening up the alley off tackle. Anderson's kick was down the middle, making it a 7-0 game.

Mashpee's opening drive was short lived. After junior DeWayne Morris upended Mashpee's kick returner at the 20-yard line, the Falcons moved the ball to the 30-yard line on several short rushes, then junior linebacker Tony Truglia picked off a pass in the flat and returned it to Mashpee's 21- yard line.

Girls soccer team holds off Holbrook comeback to sew up tourney berth

By William Wassersug
CORRESPONDENT

"We just needed one point in our last three. That scared me. It becomes almost terrifying. Today we came out a little flat. We scored, gave up a goal and then a 4-1 game turned into a 4-3 game. That was a little scary."

Cohasset girls soccer coach Debbie Beal

With time running down and a 4-1 lead, the Cohasset girls soccer team looked like it had an easy win wrapped up over host, Holbrook.

Not quite.

In a furious final effort, Holbrook rallied for two goals in the final six minutes to cut the lead to 4-3 and give favored Cohasset a scare in the third meeting between the two teams, all Cohasset victories.

Heading into the game, Cohasset needed a win or a tie to clinch a spot in the post-season, its first since 1995.

"We just needed one point in our last three," Cohasset coach Debbie Beal said. "That scared me. It becomes almost terrifying. Today we came out a little flat. We scored, gave up a goal and then a 4-1 game turned into a 4-3 game. That was a little scary."

Holbrook, which fell to 7-4 still needed a win to advance, but was looking for even more.

"We have to win one more game," Holbrook coach Sharon Farrell said. "Hopefully we'll get that Thursday. Then, if we win on Friday, we can claim second place in the league. If we get that, a win on Monday against Sacred Heart would make us co-champions again."

That may not be easy though.

"Sacred Heart is a very strong team," Farrell said. "The last time we got smoked by Sacred Heart. If we play

Field hockey team snaps out of it

Losing streak ends with 3-1 win over Hull

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

They can finally breathe again.

The seemingly endless losing streak of the field hockey team came to a close last Friday as the squad held off Hull for a 3-1 win.

"We just couldn't get out of it," noted senior captain Heather Peraino of the five game skid her team was mired in. "It's not like we didn't want the games. We just woke up too late."

After floating around the .500 mark in the opening weeks of the season, the field hockey team dropped five in a row to fall to a 2-9-2 record, ending all playoff hopes. This win was not only needed by the team to get back on the right track before the season ends, but because it was the final time this group of 10 seniors would face-off against their South Shore rivals.

This fact was brought to light in the pre-game huddle, which helped lead to a fired-up team taking the field. Early on, however, the Cohasset girls could not quite take any advantage of the tenacious Lady Pirate defenders.

Hull actually held a slight territorial advantage in the opening minutes. Several corner opportunities almost resulted in

Just one more

Boys soccer team needs one win in next four to sew up tourney berth

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Over the past few years, the Cohasset boys soccer team has set a high standard with finishes in the State semifinals and quarterfinals. Now, needing just a tie to qualify for postseason play again, coach Dave Nigro fully intends to live up to his previous season.

"I expect to be there," noted the fourth year soccer coach.""Not many people thought that about this team, but the team did. We talked before the season, and we thought it was an attainable goal."

The always fiercely-competitive South Shore League has been just as tough this year as it has in years past. The Skippers have more than held their own, with a league record of 5-2-3.

Yet Nigro dwells more on the three ties than he is the five wins. He noted that all three could have easily been wins, asserting his charges outplayed their counterparts in the draws versus Mashpee and Carver.

While their overall record may not be as gaudy as the 16 and 15 win season in 2000 and 2001, this year's team has been performing well with a very difficult schedule. With the exception of Chatham, every one of Cohasset's non-league opponents this year has been a Div. 2 opponent.

"We don't play any cupcakes," said Nigro. "The teams that do get knocked out in the first round, a lot of times it's because they aren't used to playing good teams."

Last Friday, the Skippers topped the SSL's first place team, Carver, 2-1, the contest which brought the team to the brink of a post season berth.

The Crusaders actually jumped out on top four minutes in, beating consistent senior goalie Curt Kahn. Nigro noted a miscommunication in the defense as the main responsibility for the tally.

Down 1-0, senior captain Robert Hickey tied the game just before the half with a rifle shot to the left post. While he

Mashpee tried to climb back in the game, as an 8-yard touchdown pass with less than a minute to go in the first half made the halftime score13-6 in favor of the Skippers. Cosimo Cambi broke through and blocked the extra point attempt.

The Falcons' opening drive of the second half featured a quarterback sack by linebacker Tony Truglia, which forced a punt. Earlier, Truglia had the hit of the game, stopping the Mashpee halfback in the backfield with a crushing hit.

After a key first down rush by quarterback Mike Snowdale, the Skippers left side of the offensive line created clear sailing for Goodson on a 2-yard blast to close out the scoring on Cohasset's opening series of the third quarter. The conversion rush was stopped short.

Mashpee moved the ball from its own 21-yard line to the Cohasset 7 with less than a minute to go. The defensive front of Nick Spirito, Steve Davis, Ben Lynner, and Sean Connolly, along with Truglia, Cambi and middle linebacker Matt Casey, limited the Falcons to short gains. While the backfield of Matt Davis, Anderson, John Durkin and Mike Dooley shut down the aerial attack.

Tom Anderson put the exclamation point on the victory as he picked off a Falcon pass at the goal line and returned it to the 42-yard line, and it was "warm-up the busses time," as the Skippers ran out the clock.

Along with Goodson and Truglia, strong games were turned in by leading tackler of the game, Cosimo Cambi (8), and the defensive front of S. Davis, Lynner, Spirito and Connolly, who had the Mashpee backfield continuously bottled up.

has arguably the hardest shot on the team, he has recently been moved back to the sweeper position, showing his versatility.

With the game heading towards what appeared to be the second straight tie between these two clubs, Cohasset was awarded a penalty kick when a Carver lapse in judgment resulted in the foul. Junior Chris Clark connected on the PK for the game-winner.

The Skippers have four games left, and need to win or tie any one of them in order to land a playoff seeding. They will play in Hull, a team they beat at Alumni Field. But anyone who has played at the Pirate's windy sand trap field will agree that previous results mean relatively little.

This Saturday, Cohasset will face-off against local rival Scituate, the only time the teams will meet this year. Last year's win over the Sailors was one of the season highlights, as the Skippers topped the playoff-bound visitors, 1-0, off a Matt Bilodeau penalty kick in front of the largest soccer crowd Alumni Field has seen.

The Skippers will go head-to-head with perennial Patriot League power Hingham (6-1-7) in Cohasset on Monday. While the Harbormen do not have as high a win total as they're accustomed to, they were the first team to score on the juggernaut Duxbury team as part of one of their two ties this season.

goals for the visitors, but senior goalie Sera Genovese had an impressive game thwarting the opposition.

"Danielle had an unbelievable game," affirmed Peraino. "She completely shined in that one. After (her first goal), we totally dominated the game."

Indeed, Cohasset commanded the rest of the game, territorially and with ball-control. Although the two teams had tied in Hull earlier this season, the speedy Skippers took advantage of the fast playing Alumni Field to wear down the Pirate defense.

Junior Courtney Caron continued her impressive campaign as a first-year starter, tallying Cohasset's second goal with a weak-side grounder 10 minutes into the second half.

A leader on defense all year, junior Rachel Doyle provided several crucial plays that, had she not made them, might well have resulted in Hull goals.

The team finishes the season this week, with games Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. The final home game of this team will be played Thursday at Alumni Field against Silver Lake.

MAXLAX REPORT

Games of the Week

Blades 16, Scorpions 15 (OT)

Everyone knew going in that this was going to be a slugfest as these top two Under-14 teams faced off against each other in a classic ESPN shootout.

The Scorpions Teddy Galligan set the pace early with two quick goals (his first two of the season), both on assists from Peter Oswald. From there, it was just one barrage after another with lightning quick fast breaks, physical defensive plays, and back and forth action that was punctuated by "highlight reel" play from both goaltenders - the up and coming Jack Murphy for the Scorpions and the "wily veteran" Chris Mills for the Blades.

When time expired in regulation and the teams took the field for OT, the frenzied pace continued until Mike Grimm finished off a spectacular evening (7G/2A) with a double-fake low – then high, that found the back of the net for the victory. The Scorpions Oswald had the game of the season with 10G/2A, with Sam DeGiacomo netting two and Chris Rose one.

Jackals 5, Cannons 4

In Under-12 play, this was just a fun one to watch as it was a great defensive contest that featured some outstanding offensive activity.

The league's leading scorer, John Fitzgerald (2G), opened the scoring for the Jackals with a nice "sneak attack" from behind that was assisted by Tom Kelly.

The Cannons quickly answered with two goals of their own from Chris Walsh and Will Wise (who had 2G on the night) and then the defense went to work shutting out the scoring on both sides until Ricky Boyle tied it up off of an assist by Joseph Mulieri (his first points of the season).

The Cannons opened up the 2nd with some point blank shots, but by the time it was all over, the Jackals had eked out the win in a hard fought battle. Andrew Kelly and Thomas Vangel added one each for the Jackals while the Cannons Andrew Littauer kept it within reach with one of his own until Fitzgerald capped the night with his game winner. Honorable mentions to the Cannons Goaltender – Jack Murphy with 17 saves on the night.

Bullets 4, Lazers 3

This is the first time the U-0's have gotten into the GOW column, but it seemed fitting that they get some air time, as this was one of the better games of the season. Highlighted by a GREAT defensive effort on both sides, the kids really showed that the hard work they've put in has been paying off. However, it was not without it's offensive "fireworks" as the Lazers Zach Robertshaw added one goal to his league leading total, followed by a goal by Colin Clark (with assist from Jonathan Meehan), and a solo tally by William Contento who scored a "long goal" from the other end of the field. The Bullets called on two of their "veterans" to put marks on the board and secure the victory as Luke Ernst and Thomas Flibotte both had 2G. Willie Davis get the credit for preserving the win as this first-time goalie used everything he had to turn back multiple rushes by the Lazers in the waning moments of the game to stifle their relentless attack.

physical it could go either way."

Cohasset took the early lead at 8:04 of the first half when Sarah McMorris fed Gillian Weber in the middle for a breakaway.

Weber took the feed and beat goalie Shauna Silvia to Silvia's left from close range for the first of her three goals.

The Bulldogs tied it less than three minutes later when Holbrook managed to push the ball into the Cohasset defensive end and fired off a flurry of shots.

Goalie Brittany Novak knocked away two quick shots, but Jenna Mumme knocked home the rebound from Jessica Foley's shot a moment before.

Cohasset stole the momentum right back with aggressive play that kept the ball in Holbrook's defensive end for the next several minutes.

The rest of the half, the goalies took over.

With less than three minutes in the half, Holbrook's Amy Breen had a one-on-one shot against Novak. Novak came out for the angle and made the tough stop.

Less than one minute later, Weber had another breakaway. This time Silvia was up to the task and made the save, one of her 14 on the day.

"She (Silvia) kept them in the game," Beal said. "It could easily been 8-0."

Farrell agreed.

"Everyone talks about Shauna," Farrell said. "She's got a lot of skill and plays with a lot of confidence. She's not afraid of the ball."

Cohasset finally broke through late in the first half on another breakaway by Weber.

Cohasset's Gillian Weber fires off one of her many shots in Tuesday's tourney-clinching 4-3 win over Holbrook. The Cohasset junior netted her first career hat trick in the game.

This time, Weber put a move on Silvia, who had come out of the net to cut down the angle.

"Gillie's been working hard," Beal said. "I think she had five goals coming in to this game, so she should have eight now. She hasn't scored a whole lot, but she's been a part of every goal we score. She's a real hustler."

Weber gave Cohasset a 3-1 lead just 4:21 into the second half, lifting a high shot over Silvia's reach. Katherine Coyne set up the goal with a long pass from midfield.

At the same time, Holbrook couldn't get anything going offensively.

"We came out much more aggressive in the second half," Beal said. "We were moving the ball with much more confidence and having fun. They were hustling."

Coyne added a goal of her own at 17:13 on a play that could have been on any highlight reel.

Yasmine Afshar got the assist on the goal with a centering pass that hit Coyne cutting in front of the net for a one-timer.

From there, Cohasset kept the pressure on — until Holbrook's Jessica MacNeil got out in front and fired a shot that just went over the net.

Seconds later, Cohasset had another chance when Nicole Needle had an open shot. Silvia came up big again, diving to her left for the save.

Buoyed by the big save, Holbrook turned the momentum around and went on the offensive, peppering Cohasset's second netminder of the afternoon, Kelly Holway, with a barrage of shots.

Holway made the stops, but couldn't get the ball out of the area and Holbrook's Jessica Foley capitalized with a quick shot past Holway's left at 35:20.

Mumme made it interesting less than three minutes later with her second goal of the game, cutting the lead to 4-3 with less than two minutes remaining.

"Cohasset is a very strong team," Farrell said. "They're big and strong. I'm proud of the girls. They didn't give up. Every time they've been down, they've fought to the end."

While Farrell was feeling good about her team's attitude, she thought they could have played better.

"We played so bad," Farrell said. "The last game against them we played much better. This was a good comeback, but we weren't aggressive. They beat us to every ball. When you win balls, you win games."

Win or lose, Farrell was glad her team was able to play a quality team from a strong league.

"It was a good game," she said. "I love playing Cohasset. It's a challenge. Half of the teams on our schedule we beat 12-0. That isn't as much fun. Playing teams like Cohasset make us stronger."

Having played Holbrook three times, Beal has seen the Bulldogs, a team with just seven juniors and seniors combined, progress.

"They're going to be a good team," Beal said. "They have a lot of young kids. Every time we play them they improve."

All of Holbrook's goals against Cohasset were scored by freshmen.

Farrell is hoping to keep the improvement going next season.

"I'm trying to build a schedule next year," Farrell said. "I'd like to get better competition."

For Cohasset, the victory was a milestone.

"Making it (post-season) is tremendous," Beal said. "We're in such a tough conference with teams like Abington, Norwell, Mashpee. You always feel good when you accomplish something."

Brockton Rox join new league

Brockton Rox owner Van Schley's club played its inaugural season in the independent Northern League. Schley announced the Rox will be part of a new league comprised of many of the clubs from the 2001 edition of the Northern League's East Division, as well as a new franchise, the North Shore Spirit from nearby Lynn.

The league was formed during a meeting of owners this week in Newark, N.J. Northern League co-founder and former Durham Bulls owner and Baseball America publisher Miles Wolff will continue as commissioner. Wolff served as commissioner of the Northern League's East Division in 2001.

According to Schley the principal reason the owners decided to form their own league was that the structure of the Northern League had become unwieldy and did not provide the individual clubs any appreciable benefit. "Last year there were 18 teams in the league, and the Rox never played 10 of them," said Schley "Except for the All Star game we never felt part of a bigger league."

Schley said that the only other time the Rox would have played any club from the Northern League's Central Division would have been in the post season, had the Rox made the playoffs and won two series against clubs in their own division.

Schley feels the new league will be stronger than its predecessor, due to the strength of its commissioner and the quality of its franchises. Those franchises include Brockton, New Jersey and Quebec City, which won the division's attendance crown in 2001. In addition, the new Lynn franchise recently invested more than $1 million to upgrade its ballpark.

"Miles Wolff is a brilliant baseball man with an unmatched track record for creating value whatever he goes," said Schley. "I have no doubt that under his continued leadership our league will emerge as the single most successful independent baseball league in the country."

The 10 teams in the midwest will operate as the Northern League in 2003 under the guidance of Central Division commissioner Mike Stone

"With the addition of a new stadium in Kansas City, Kan., and Gary, Ind., the Northern League will turn its attention to the midwest," Stone said. "We're looking forward to continuing to bring a great brand of professional baseball to our fans."

"We've enjoyed the competition of the all-star game and league championship series the last four years," East Division commissioner Miles Wolff said. "With a new facility in Brockton and a new team in Lynn, Mass., the east owners are glad to start fresh on our own."

The Northern League operations have been relocated to Fort Worth, Texas. The east teams will continue to be run out of the Durham, N.C., office. The east league name and lineup of clubs will be announced in the next two weeks.

Enter Christine Berman, a English teacher with 29 years of experience teaching media related classes at Scituate High School, the last 15 years of which were spent at the helm of the Situation, a newspaper she founded and guided to national recognition.

Her mission in Cohasset was simple: Create an award-winning paper.

"When there was an opening for an English teacher (at Cohasset High School) they definitely wanted someone who could teach journalism and I was told they wanted a school newspaper to be developed," said Berman. "I said, 'I'm your candidate.'"

What followed was a model of organization and motivation, which included the renovation of the aforementioned broom closet, the ordering of supplies, and the establishment of a fully-staffed, working newspaper complete with an advertising department and business manager among other things. Your ordinary student newspaper this is not.

"She came in here with 30 years experience doing this," said David Ingber, one of the two Editors-in-Chief. "She knew exactly what editors we needed, what computers we needed. We didn't even know we needed a production room."

Ingber has worked as a sports correspondent for the Mariner since his freshman year, but jumped at the chance to play a larger role with the school paper.

"This is something that I'm considering as a career," said Ingber. "This is a perfect way to get started. We'll be covering controversy, sports, features, editorials. It's a great way to get your foot in the door."

But it is clear none of the student simply want a "foot in the door." They want more.

"I want to put out a paper that is interesting for the students, but is also tasteful and mature," said Gia Petrakis, the other Editor-in-Chief. "I want to prove to the school, as well as to the community, that we can put out a good paper."

News Editor Shawna Sullivan said the key is addressing current events in a way that is interesting to the student body.

"We will try to relate national and state news to our lives," said Sullivan. "We will always ask, 'How does this affect school lives? How does this affect our school in general. How does it affect the students?"

Advisor Christine Berman, at right, stands with the staff of the Spinnaker, the new school newspaper at Cohasset Middle High School.

The paper is planning on publishing three issues this year, and then moving to a more regular schedule next year. It costs $1 an issue and $3 for a year's subscription. Excess funds generated will eventually go towards a scholarship for students attending college to study journalism.

"I want to prove to the school, as well as to the community, that we can put out a good paper."
— Gia Petrakis, an editor-in-chief

"I think Cohasset needs something like this," said Berman. "The competition with other schools will be healthy and it will give them an idea of what is going on in the real world."

According to Berman, the students have already begun to change.

"Now, they are paying attention to the news," said Berman. "They are coming into the school and talking to me about what is going on, asking 'Can we write about this in the paper? Don't you think we should be covering this?' and that is exciting."

Many of the students see the Spinnaker as a conduit for communication between the youth of today and past generations.

"Older generations aren't really familiar with our generation," said Dave Kupsc, one of the sports editors. "There will be a section that discusses 'What's Hot, What's Not," and that will help show what things have a high interest level right now for high school students. It gives people an idea of what is going on in our lives."

The paper will also serve as a forum for those who go to the school to address concerns and trends in a constructive way.

"I think that, especially in a school newspaper, the social aspect of what is happening around the school with kids and teachers is a huge focus," said Ross Lieb-Lappen, an executive editor. "But we want to cover all of the major areas. We also want to keep parents and the community informed of what is going on at the school."

More than one student pointed to the Homecoming Dance incident as a perfect example. Several students were suspended for a range of problems, from being under the influence of alcohol to insubordination. The issue will be addresses in the first issue of the Spinnaker

"There are other sides to things," said Ingber. "We have great access to everybody because we can get five different perspectives on a story. We know at least 50 people who were at that dance."

.Berman has stressed to her students that they are responsible for upholding the tenants of journalism, particularly because Massachusetts is one of only a handful of states that extend freedom of the press rights to students in high school.

According to students, Berman has made the paper "real" to them. She has given them responsibility and expects them to uphold their ends of the bargain.

"I think it is great that we know that this is a real thing," said Allison Moje, an executive editor. "It's not just fooling around. We'll put as much effort as needed in order to make it successful."

That kind of response is exactly what drives Berman.

"I feel like I have died and gone to heaven," said Berman. "I feel like I have died and gone to Pleasantville. I have nothing negative to say about my experience so far."

The challenge has been laid out (win awards) and several references to an ongoing competition with the paper Berman left in Scituate have been made. Now all the students need to do is get their computers (which will be arriving shortly) and print their first issue. But those are minor details.

"Absolutely," said Berman of the paper's expected rise to the top. "I guarantee an award-winning newspaper."

Who's to doubt her?

Halloween safety for schoolchildren

The Cohasset Police Department and Chief Robert W. Jackson have the following safety tips to help make Halloween a safe and enjoyable time:

- Wear light-colored clothing that's short enough to prevent tripping and add reflective tape
- Make sure children can see well through face masks, or make-up
- Adults should accompany young children
- Go out in daylight and carry a flashlight in case of delay
- Stay within a neighborhood and only visit homes you know
- Watch for traffic
- Only give and accept wrapped or packaged candy
- Examine all candy before allowing children to eat it
- Keep costumed children away from pets. The pet may not recognize the child and become frightened
- Avoid hard plastic or wood props such as daggers or swords. Substitute with foam rubber which is soft and flexible

IT'S HAPPENING

Halloween dance

Due to the fact that Halloween falls on a school night this year, the Halloween dance will be held at the Garage on Friday, Nov. 1, from 7 to 10 p.m. Everyone in Grade 6 and up is welcome and costumes are optional. This ghoulish dance will be free of charge. Snacks and refreshments will be sold as well.

Halloween fair

Pumpkins and cornstalks are appearing at local farm stands. Orange and black decorations are showing up in stores and plans are being conjured up for the South Shore Community Center Nursery School's annual Halloween Fair.

This year's fair will take place on Cohasset Common on Oct. 27, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. a South Shore tradition for more than 30 years, the fair offers Halloween fun for the entire family. Spooks and cartoon characters of all shapes, sizes and ages are encouraged to begin preparing to join in the howlish fun.

For more information about the fair or the programs of the South Shore Nursery School, contact the Nursery School at 781-383-0036.

Jerusalem Road subject of lecture

Wednesday Oct. 30: Jerusalem Road Revisited "The most prominent feature of the town, that by which we are most widely known in the world, as Jerusalem Road, along which so many delightful summer homes have been built overlooking the sea." So E. Victor Bigelow wrote over a century ago in his "Narrative History of Cohasset, Massachusetts."

This remains as true today as it was when written in the 1890s. The Victorian mansions of Jerusalem Road will be featured in a slide presentation by David Wadsworth, the Society's Historian. Lightkeepers' residence, 7:30 p.m. Both events are free, light refreshments will be served.

Sea celebrated in musical program

At 2 p.m. on Saturday Oct. 26 at Saint Anthony's Parish Center in Cohasset, the Hull Lifesaving Museum will present an performance of "A Celebration of the Sea," by the Revels Circle of Song. Circle of Song is the touring ensemble of the Revels, Inc., best known for Christmas Revels performed annually at Sanders Theater in Cambridge. Admission for adults is $10 for members ($12 non-members) and $6 for children ($8 non-members). For a family (five), admission is $28 for members ($30 non-members).

"A Celebration of the Sea" tells the story of those who went to sea during the great age of sail as whalers or merchant seamen and their families who remained on shore. Beginning with street cries on the docks of New Bedford, the program includes: the packing of a seaman's trunk, the farewell to family and friends, loading the ship, hoisting the anchor and sails, shipboard entertainment, a whale hunt, a storm at sea, and the celebration of the sailors' safe return.

The Circle of Song ensemble brings the voyage to life through an interdisciplinary form of musical theater that includes songs, instrumental music, dance, storytelling, and audience participation. For tickets and information please contact Victoria Stevens at (781) 925-5433. Tickets are limited so please purchase yours early.

This event is funded in part by a grant from the New England Foundation for the Arts, and with additional support from the Massachusetts Cultural Council, and the National Endowment for the Arts.

year where students, who are clad in caps and gowns, collect certificates of achievement, not high school diplomas.

But still, teachers in the Chapter 766-approved school must align their lessons with the state curriculum frameworks or guidelines, and compile a portfolio on each student that is subsequently sent to the state and evaluated as an MCAS alternate assessment. The school compiled about 80 portfolios last year and teachers at Cardinal Cushing were challenged on how to adjust the state curriculum that could include 10th-grade geometry, for example, so it was meaningful for their kids. (Chapter 766 is the state's special education law).

According to the Department of Education's Dan Wiener, assessment coordinator for the special education population, the typical student, who takes the MCAS alternate assessment, has moderate to severe cognitive impairment and cannot take a pen and pencil test.

For the most part these students, who are operating significantly below grade level, don't pass MCAS even though many hours have been spent on their portfolios, which demonstrate what the student has learned.

Out of 668, grade-10 portfolios graded by the state last year, only one passed both the math and language arts parts of MCAS, according to the Department of Education.

There's another group of students who have little chance of passing the MCAS, and for whom the denial of a high school diploma can be significant, educators say.

These students struggle with academics in regular high school — and no matter what accommodations are made — cannot pass the MCAS because of their lower ability level but, otherwise, satisfy the graduation requirements of their school.

For the most part these students, who are operating significantly below grade level, don't pass MCAS even though many hours have been spent on their portfolios, which demonstrate what the student has learned.

"For the student whose intelligence ability is truly borderline, but who is able to participate and get a job, driver's license and do all things that allow him or her to have a fulfilling life — that person may never be able to succeed on MCAS," says Betty Fish, director of special education for the Hingham Public Schools. "Are we doing them a favor by not awarding them a diploma?"

The Department of Education recently announced plans to approve certificates for students who complete high school coursework but fail MCAS. But that is not the answer, says Monty O'Neill, executive director of MassCARE, a group opposed to MCAS. About 19 percent of the Class of 2003 or 12,000 students have yet to pass MCAS, according to the Statehouse News Service.

"There is no evidence the certificate will allow a student to go on to college, get into the military or get a job," O'Neill says. "There is no evidence the certificate will help any student whatsoever."

O'Neill says the certificate is a political move on the part of the Department of Education to confuse school committees, which are in large part opposed to the MCAS graduation requirement.

MassCARE (Massachusetts Coalition for Authentic Reform in Education) doesn't believe a single test should determine a student's future and in a recent letter asked area school committees to sign a resolution affirming their rights as diploma-granting authorities.

The issue of whether MCAS should be a graduation requirement could be aired in the courts. A class-action suit was filed last month in US District Court by the parents of six students from the Holyoke and Springfield area who have failed the exam. The lawsuit says the MCAS discriminates against minority, limited English and special education students and that state education officials have no authority to set the MCAS test as a graduation requirement, according to MassCARE.

But Wiener of the Department of Education says MCAS is raising standards for everyone regardless of ability level or impairment.

He says the portfolios for the student population that is the most impaired still provide meaningful information, and regardless, under federal law, schoolchildren with special needs cannot be excluded.

"When administrators and teachers know those results are counted, they pay attention to those kids who get their piece of the pie," Wiener says.

He says the impetus behind MCAS is to have a high school diploma count for something and argues that the borderline student is likely getting a superior education than he or she was before MCAS became an issue.

"We want everyone to work as hard as they can and pull them up and over the bar, not lower the bar," Weiner says.

Stephen Kaplan, who served as Cohasset's director of student services until taking a position with the Lexington-Hanscom district this month, worries denying diplomas to students, who otherwise have satisfied their school district's requirements, is sending the wrong message.

"Yes, we should have high expectations for everyone," he says. "But does that translate into everyone passing the MCAS in order to graduate? Many kids, who don't get 1,000 on their SATs, go on to become surgeons and lawyers, but we're saying 'if he can't do geometry — he can't get his diploma.'

"For those who cannot pass, it sends another failure message — that they are all done and are a terrible person not to have this diploma," Kaplan says.

That failure message may be getting through.

According to MassCARE, students between the ninth- and 10th grades, who are either dropping out, being held back or leaving the public schools, has grown from 6 percent to 13 percent a year since MCAS began in 1999.

Heidi Domos prepares for the history part of MCAS with a creative lesson about Christopher Columbus at the Cardinal Cushing School in Hanover.

Melinda Ewing of Norwell, the parent of a child with special needs, does not mince words when it comes to MCAS.

"First, I'm appalled that school districts have to be forced to provide a quality education and raise standards," she says. "And the other major issue with MCAS is there haven't been enough reliability and validity studies to see how it stands up – the test hasn't been given over enough time.

"If Einstein, who was severely dyslexic, took the MCAS, he'd probably fail," she says. "And I think he proved himself."

Kaplan is also worried about the burden placed on special education teachers who must compile the portfolios for those students who qualify for the MCAS alternative assessment.

"It takes a tremendous amount of work to break down rubrics and standards for a low-functioning child, who might be on a feeding tube with a ventilator," he says. "It's a lot of work and then to get back a failed (grade)."

Fish, Hingham's special education director, is also concerned about the effect on parents of severely disabled youngsters.

"Children who have a constellation of disabilities — blind, deaf, retarded — all in one body and are in a pediatric nursing home, do the alternate assessment," she says. "This is another reminder to the parents how disabled their child is."

But Roberta Mahoney Pulaski, director of education at Cardinal Cushing, who admits the portfolios have increased the teachers' workload "tremendously," supports including even those children who are severely cognitively impaired in MCAS.

Pulaski explains MCAS has made the teachers more creative, as they break down the more complex learning tasks for their students.

"We always did creative lessons because we had to," Pulaski says. "But the (curriculum) frameworks kicked up the notch a bit."

She also says parents' eyes often well up when they see their child's portfolio.

"They say they couldn't believe their child could do that," Pulaski says.

lem that needs to be solved with this kind of solution and that this kind of solution is primarily cosmetic," said Sam Knox, of 23 Border St. "It is based on making the harbor look more like the hotel, the restaurant and the plan for the boatyard."

Knox, and the majority of others in attendance who were against the proposal, were angered by the role a private organization is playing in public policy. The CRC is backed by Cohasset businessman Peter Roy, who owns Atlantica, the Olde House, and Kimball's, now called the Cohasset Harbor Resort, both of which are located in the harbor.

"I'm happy that it has been brought to Town Meeting," said Dean Rizzo of the CRC. "Now we'll get a diversified debate and get a lot of input on it. "

Rizzo said that any worries about the CRC exerting undue influence over the town were unfounded. He said that the CRC was offering to pay for research that the town could take and evaluate itself. He noted that the town would have the right to hire the engineer. All the CRC wanted was a confirmation that the town was behind the project and the investments that goes along with it.

"We can't commandeer town property," said Rizzo. "As Selectman Tom Callahan mentioned, the Selectmen and Town Meeting have the ultimate authority over town property. What we are offering is planning and design and assistance in order to improve the safety and access and aesthetic condition of town property."

Knox did not agree.

"I want to be really clear that I am not casting aspersions on anybody's motives here," said Knox who is the co-founder of the Friends of Cohasset Harbor, a group formed to counter-balance the CRC. "I am simply asking the town government to approach this with its eyes open. The idea of free planning is absurd. And if you think you are getting free planning, you are kidding yourself."

The town has already used a relationship with the CRC as a launching point for the Village Revitalization Project.

The CRC believes that it can find funding for the project through the Transportation Enhancement Grant, but only if improvements are slated for the fence in the area, a change abutters adamantly oppose. There was initially some discrepancy as to the regulations required of a new fence, but after research by Haddad, it appears the only mandated specification is that the fence be 42-inches tall.

For Rizzo, the idea is simple. The CRC is asking for support as it continues to invest money in planning.

"This is just an endorsement by town meeting that they support the need to improve town infrastructure and safety on the waterfront," said Rizzo. "It says 'We support the idea that the CRC is donating funds to help the town do that type of study.'"

The study will investigate the seawall, sidewalk and street areas, along the lines of the moderate plan the CRC has advocated. But the article — even if it passes — is not carte blanche. Any decisions regarding the expenditure of money or the use of land must be addressed after a plan for improvements is officially formulated.

"It is no endorsement of a plan, of a particular design concept," said Rizzo. "But it does endorse looking at the sidewalks, looking at the seawall, and looking at the fence."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris, who joined Fred Koed in dissent, was adamantly against the article.

"I think the concept is very confusing and I think we should have taken things in steps," said McMorris. "I think it would have made more sense to people to take the approach of looking at the seawall and seeing what needs to be done, which would give us a more concrete concept that people can understand and vote on."

Selectman Callahan felt it was only appropriate to put the issue before the town to decide.

" I think we need a wider view of the town of this before we go any further," said Callahan. "It is a town-wide resource and we really do need to get a sense of the whole town as to what direction to go with this."

The board also voted unanimously to create a companion article that would accompany the harbor article, asking town meeting to appropriate funds to study the seawall, should the CRC article fail. If the CRC article passes, the second article would be withdrawn.

Voluntary curfew set for Halloween night

The Board of Selectmen has adopted Chief of Police Bob Jackson's request for a voluntary 8 p.m. curfew for trick-or-treaters on Halloween.

In addition, Chairman Michael Sullivan warned parents of teenagers to be aware of their activities on Oct. 31.

"Trick-or-treating is for the children," said Chairman Michael Sullivan. "I would suggest that parents of teenagers encourage their children to stay in and study."

Scituate sculptor entitles visitors to their own interpretations

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Scituate sculptor Jean Ainslie Richardson may have found the perfect showcase for her work with the current exhibit, "Gadgets, Gizmos and Games," on display at Duxbury's Art Complex Museum through Jan. 12.

In fact, you could say that the sculptor's multi-faceted, multi-pronged, multimedia creations emerge into the spirit of the ACM show.

Richardson's exhibition, "Emerging Spirits," is a collection of 15 conceptual sculpture pieces that are, to say the least, open to visual interpretation. And in fact, the sculptor offers the opportunity to do just that, by intentionally not titling her individual pieces, and inviting audience participation with a sign-in visitor's book including a section for viewers to write-in their own creative, interpretive titles for her works.

"Emerging Spirits" is not officially part of the "Gadgets Gizmos and Games" exhibit; the sculptures are on view in the ACM outdoor gallery through Dec. 1. But like the various side-stage and wandering attractions at the Lollapalooza Festivals of the 1990s, Richardson's collection of new sculptural life forms make a fitting adjunct to

Kinnear finds the sleazy side of Bob Crane in "Auto Focus"

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Greg Kinnear has made the unlikely jump from host of "Talk Soup" to respected Hollywood actor.

Greg Kinnear was just another fresh face looking for a job in Hollywood when he landed one that would make that face familiar. He was the first host on the offbeat "Talk Soup," a TV show that skewered TV talk shows in the early 1990s.

But Kinnear always had his eyes on a jump to feature films. Since he took it — in the 1995 flop remake of "Sabrina" — he's rarely slowed down, jumping between leads in mediocre movies to character acting in some gems. After just a couple of years he scored an Oscar nomination as Jack Nicholson's gay neighbor in "As Good as It Gets."

Now he's starring, in the meatiest role of his career, in "Auto Focus," recreating the successful, but sordid, life of Bob Crane. The public knew him as the happily married actor who once entertained primetime TV audiences as Colonel Hogan. But off the set, Crane wiled away the evening hours playing drums in jazz clubs, making pornographic films and trying to satisfy his sexual addiction. He was bludgeoned to death by an unknown assailant. The case has never been solved.

Kinnear vaguely recalls hearing the story.

"I remember in high school hearing the same sort of shocking conversation I had the day somebody told me that Sonny and Cher got divorced," he says. "I remember the feeling being similar to the day some friend of mine said, 'Hey you know Bob Crane, the guy from "Hogan's Heroes" — he had kind of a strange double life.' But I didn't know any of the details of his personality or how he got to be where he ended up."

Kinnear's film work so far has been mostly in the light comedy range, although there was certainly some depth to the "As Good as It Gets" part, and he played strictly against type in Sam Raimi's gothic horror film "The Gift." But he wasn't concerned about tarnishing his own image by taking the dark part of Crane.

"Maybe if we were doing the Triple X version of 'Auto Focus,' yeah, those types of things would start to matter," he says, laughing. "And I don't know that I'd want to do the Ted Bundy story. But Bob, for all of his shortcomings and all of his strange behavior, was kind of framed in the body of a guy who saw himself as a one-woman man, as a normal, red-blooded American gentleman, as a guy who had what he believed to be a real moral foundation. Yet the behavior was so wildly contradictory to that foundation, I was just instantly fascinated. How do these two people inhabit the same body?"

Kinnear's performance is a riveting one. He picked up on some

Punch-Drunk Love (B+)

If you can imagine Danny DeVito as Hamlet or the expansive gorgon who plays Mimi on "Drew Carey" as Cleopatra, then you might permit yourself the thought of Adam Sandler as a romantic hero, not a dollop of slapstick in his arsenal, no wacky accents or juvenile, arch doggerel at hand. Though we recall Sandler as Canteen Boy and Opera Man on "Saturday Night Live" and in gawky shlemiel doofus roles in his ongoing spate of successful and deliberately stupid comedies (exempt the ghastly "Little Nicky" and the woeful "Mr. Deeds"), always there is within him the prospect both of impassioned violence and of tenderness. The romantic ingredient in the moronic Sandler persona popped up in "The Wedding Singer," and in "Mr. Deeds" enough violence erupted to put an edge on what turned a remake of a classic into a pudding of treacle.

"Punch-Drunk Love," short, to the point, and deliberately bare bones in its theme and its realization, is the creation of Paul Thomas Harris, whom we remember most from "Boogie Nights," about another unlikely protagonist defying its star's image as an underwear model, and "Magnolia," anything but short, to the point, or bare bones.

Orange, onion and fennel salad

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Orange and onion (usually served with oil-cured olives) is a classic Sicilian combination, one that has many variations. At its best, it is an intrepid salad, one that refreshes with bold strokes of complementary but assertive ingredients: sweet oranges, raw onion, and salty olives. At its worst, the oranges are lackluster and pithy, the onion is overpowering, and the dressing is harsh.

I began with the oranges which are key to this recipe. (Don't make this salad with lousy specimens.) I finally came across some navels and Valencias that were sweet and juicy. They cannot be peeled. Instead, the skin and white pith need to be cut away with a sharp knife. You can serve the oranges in slices or, if you want to be a bit fussier, in segments, which takes more preparation time.

The onion quickly becomes overpowering if sliced too thin or if too much of it is used. I preferred red onion and used extremely thin slices. I also tried soaking it in water, as one recipe suggested, but this did not ameliorate its bite and just made the salad watery. So one half of a medium red onion was sufficient for five oranges. Shallots and green onions were tried and voted down.

I tested both brined and oil-cured olives and preferred the latter — Italian, Greek, or French oil-cured olives were all great. Some are more pungent than others are so you may vary the quantity accordingly. I used anywhere from eight to ten olives that had been pitted and roughly chopped. I do think you want to taste some olive in every bite.

Although not unheard of in this recipe, I fell in love with fennel as an ingredient. It offers lots of crunch and its sweet, spicy flavor is subtle but strong enough to stand up to the orange and onion. One medium bulb cut into very thin slices was just right.

I felt the salad was crying out for something green even if it were just a garnish. I tried adding several herbs (chives, mint, thyme, parsley, tarragon) as well as tips from the fennel bulb. The herb that worked best was basil. I used about a quarter cup of thinly sliced leaves—about a dozen medium-sized. The basil fortifies the fennel and adds yet one more bold flavor.

The salad tastes best when dressed with one-quarter cup first rate extra-virgin olive oil. In terms of vinegar, I found less was best. (Some recipes don't even include vinegar.) My favorite vinegar was white balsamic and I only used one teaspoon, enough to lend a bit of bright flavor but not overtake the oranges. (Try rice wine vinegar if you can't find white balsamic.) Along with the oil and vinegar I used one-quarter teaspoon of salt and freshly ground black pepper.

The salad goes together easily. Instead of arranging the oranges, I simply toss the ingredients together with the dressing. Once the salad is composed it should be eaten fairly soon since the onion and fennel begin to wilt and lose crunch.

ORANGE, ONION, AND FENNEL SALAD

For this recipe the peel and pith must be sliced off the orange. This is done most easily by first cutting off a small section from the top and bottom of the orange. Stand the orange on one flat end and slice off the rind and white pith following the contour. Once all of the skin has been removed, the segments can be cut away by holding the orange in the palm of your hand and making V- shaped cuts along the membranes to free each section. For a less elegant but easier method, you may cut the skinned orange in half, pole to pole, and then cut each half into half-inch slices through the segments. A small, inexpensive mandoline (under $20) is a good tool for thinly slicing vegetables.

5 medium or 6 small sweet ripe oranges such as Navel or Valencia prepared using one of the above methods

1 small or 1/2 medium red onion peeled, halved and very thinly sliced

1 medium bulb fennel, trimmed, halved and very thinly sliced

8 to 10 oil-cured black olives pitted and coarsely chopped

1/4 cup best quality olive oil

1 teaspoon white balsamic vinegar

1/4 teaspoon salt

Freshly ground black pepper

1/4 cup loosely packed thinly sliced basil leaves, about 8 medium

Place oranges, onion, fennel and olives in a large bowl. Add the olive oil, vinegar, salt and pepper and gently toss to combine the ingredients and coat evenly with the dressing. Taste for seasoning adding more salt or pepper if needed. Sprinkle with sliced basil and serve immediately.

Serves four to six.

'Love' lifts Sandler up where he belongs

His new film is a paean to emotional intensity, centered on a Los Angeles fellow, Barry Egan, who sells novelty toilet plungers out of a large warehouse, totes a harmonium, left for some reason on the street, into his office, and contends with seven harpy sisters who remind him forever of his most notable childhood moment, when he smashed a window to bits. (The sisters are Mary Lynn Rajskub and six amateurs, four of whom are sisters). Sister Elizabeth (Rajskub) tries to fix Barry up with her pal Lena (Emily Watson, glorious here, as in "Red Dragon"), but Barry refuses. Lena persists, forces herself upon him, and he falls, smitten, as does she, but then they are smote by circumstances.

Well, not quite circumstances, but by the fruit of one of Barry's fitful efforts at connection with someone. Prior to meeting Lena, he called a phone sex line, idiotically gave his Social Security number to the seemingly caring woman on the other end, and soon found himself the object of extortion and, worse, violence, perpetrated by four blond brothers (played by four blond brothers), dispatched by their boss, Dean (Philip Seymour Hoffman, who comes to a more bitter end in "Red Dragon"), to beat up our hero. This does get in the way of romance, but Barry manages both to follow Lena to Hawaii to ply his troth, and to the Utah den of evil presided over by the impresario of the phone sex and extortion gang. There he points out that now that he has a love in his life, he has strength unimaginable by dreadful Dean. Love, we see, has set him free.

We know Barry is neurotic, maybe worse, a sweet guy on a surface just millimeters atop a raging cauldron of anger; we know he's a compulsive, and peddling toilet plungers is an apt if also blatant metaphor for the stoppages in his psycho-social development. But through Lena, who loves him, we come at least to like him, maybe to fancy that he might become a friend. And the romance, however jerky in movement, is not played for laughs but, rather, for acceptance. John Brion's score is inventive, diverse, never intrusive but invariably appropriate. And with Luiz Guzman ,as Barry's chief employee, in the cast, the performances are fine, and the settings calmly offset the schizy events they encompass. Sandler has found his "Truman Show," and like Jim Carrey, who leapt out of his previous incarnation as best suited to "Ace Ventura" and such, Sandler needn't turn back if he chooses to give himself up now to additional dramatic roles.

the main event, which is the assemblage of creative contraptions, devices, robots, high-tech toys and assorted mechanical whatchamacallits on display in the "Gadgets" show inside in the ACM's main gallery hall.

"The sculptures are fantasies based on realistic drawings of what I think are fascinating garden forms, especially tomatoes," said Richardson recently at the ACM's museum-wide opening reception for all its current shows. "I was mainly interested in the bold masses of the major botanical forms at first. But then I began to study more in depth the shapes, crevices and spaces within the forms, and from that came this improvisational series of sculptures."

The results of these improvisations on display almost defy description, but that didn't stop some visitors at the museum reception from venturing their attempts in the write-in book. Some of the more interesting responses include "Amoeba Traffic Cop," "Smiley Skeleton," "Spinal Smile," "Big Footed Love Bug" and "Alien Acrobats."

Richardson, a graduate of the Rhode Island School of Design, has been an artist, photographer and sculptor for 30 years. Her career has included 15 years as a visual arts instructor at Whitman-Hanson Regional High School as well as a number of exhibitions and awards at South Shore art festivals and Rhode Island School of Design shows, working in media including drawing, painting, sculpture, photography, printmaking and apparel and textile design.

The artist compares the forms of her sculptures to the words of the famed gibberish poem "Jabberwocky," in that the forms and features shouldn't make sense but somehow they do. Media-wise, Richardson constructs the pieces with a wood and metal core for the armiture, then a fine coating of resin and fiberglass, plus plaster, paint and sand to make the works, as she said, sturdy and weatherproof.

"As I looked more and more at the garden forms, the more I understood about their true shapes inside and out," she said. "Then I began to play with the forms and expand on them, which finally led to the sculptures you see here."

Richardson's work will be on display in the outdoor gallery at Duxbury's Art Complex Museum through Dec. 1. For more information and gallery hours call the museum at (781) 934-6634.

Prepare your plantings for killing frosts

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Each year, a prediction for the first killing frost of the season creates a sense of panic for many gardeners. As soon as the weather service issues its first frost advisories, we dash around our yards as darkness falls, covering annual plantings and frost-sensitive vegetables with bed sheets, strips of burlap or heaps of newspapers. Tender tropical plants are hurriedly yanked from the ground and haphazardly tossed into empty pots and boxes and hauled indoors. Garages, sunrooms, porches and greenhouses rapidly fill with colorful container gardens, potted herbs and houseplants that were enjoying a summer vacation out-of-doors.

By the time October rolls around, most gardeners have grown weary of maintaining their borders and yet, when the moment of truth arrives, we cannot seem to let go. Perhaps we seek to prolong their growth because we have attended to their needs for months as steadfastly as we care for our children and we feel obligated to protect and nurture them. In some years, these efforts may not be in vain as a hard freeze may be followed by several weeks of mild temperatures during which time we are able to enjoy our colorful annuals and continue to reap the bounty of our vegetable gardens. More than likely, our efforts to save our tender treasures stem from our unwillingness to accept that the growing season has come to a close and that the cold winter months await. Eventually, after days of covering our annual plants at dusk and uncovering them again at daybreak, we finally accept defeat allowing delicate foliage to become limp and blackened by icy chills.

Each property tends to have its own unique growing conditions and within the same landscape there could be several different microclimates depending on exposure to light and wind, elevation or the presence of a water. Low-lying, inland areas often experience frosts earlier in the fall and later in the spring than those higher up. Similarly, wide open, exposed spaces may be prone to early frosts while lawns and gardens protected by a grove of trees, shrubs, fences or walls may remain frost-free for weeks beyond those which are not sheltered. The presence of water, whether it be the ocean, a lake, pond, stream or even a water garden, will often moderate the temperature of the immediate surrounding terrain, delaying the effects of chilly weather. Buildings usually generate significant heat, as well, enabling tender plants to survive several weeks of freezing temperatures and providing a warm, sheltered environment for marginally hardy plants.

Since the average killing frost in my garden varies only slightly from year to year, with an average date of Oct. 10, I cannot imagine why the prediction for frosty weather caught me off guard, but as usual, I was totally unprepared and found myself desperately lifting clumps of coleus and dragging large containers of tropical treasures into my garage well into the evening. Although temperatures dropped into the 30s, no frost was apparent the next morning. The potential threat served its purpose, however, forcing me to accept that the time has come to begin putting the gardens to bed for this season.

On warmer days, many of my rescued tropicals and houseplants will be moved back outside. This will allow me to gradually acclimate them to the lower light conditions they will encounter in my home environment. Even houseplants that spent the summer in the shade received much brighter light than they are likely to find indoors. If these plants can be moved into a sunroom or porch first, the gradual reduction in light will be less of a shock. Although nearly all plants experience some leaf-drop or dieback as they adjust to lower light and humidity in our dry, heated indoor spaces, fewer leaves will turn yellow and drop.

Inspect these plants closely for unwanted pests that may be lurking among their leaves. Somehow, all the little beasties seem to know which plants are destined for a warm, cozy winter indoors and manage to secretly hitch a ride into our homes. Many often go unnoticed for weeks while sucking the vitality out of our plants. Check the drainage holes of the containers as well. It is particularly unappealing to discover sow bugs, worms, slugs or snails crawling across the floors of your home.

Although no insects may be readily observed, eggs are often laid on the foliage and hatch once the plants are brought into warmer environments. One or two applications of a light horticultural oil spray, which is essentially odorless and nontoxic except to bugs, will eliminate a large percentage of the typical intruders including aphids, scale, mealy bugs, white flies, and spider mites.

Pick herbs for drying or freezing. Rosemary rarely survives the winter in the ground but can be grown indoors given a sunny location. Harvest your remaining frost-sensitive vegetables.

Take cuttings of tender annuals to root indoors for next season. Coleus and impatiens are easily propagated, especially if the stems are dipped in a rooting powder and inserted into pots of perlite or vermiculite; containers must be kept in a warm location. Ivy and vinca can be rooted in water. Smaller plants can be lifted and transplanted into containers filled with potting soil. Geraniums and begonias will flower all winter on a sunny windowsill, a welcome reminder of the season past and a new growing season to come.

of Crane's general behavior in interviews with his son, Robert Crane Jr. And he paid careful attention to director Paul Schrader ("Affliction," "Cat People"), who Kinnear describes as someone "who's been around a long time and knows the ins and outs, and tries to create an environment of trust" on the set. But Kinnear is hard pressed to say who taught him the ropes as far as acting.

"I don't know that I know the ropes," he says candidly. "I certainly feel like I know more than I did when I started a few years ago."

It's suggested that maybe he picked up some acting chops while hamming it up on "Talk Soup."

He laughs again and says, "That's an interesting observation. When I started that show I didn't know what my role was a host, and that certainly evolved. As I started as a an actor, I wasn't really sure what my role was as an actor. And I hope there's been some evolution of that. There's definitely a little more confidence and a little more of a sense of what I'm doing. But on more days than not, I still feel like what the hell am I doing here?"

He acknowledges that receiving the Oscar nomination came at a good time, since he had had very mixed success up to that point.

"I was asking questions of myself as to whether this was something I have a place in and maybe I had misjudged acting as a career and a future. Then to get that kind of validation — to have other actors say what you're doing is OK — was incredibly encouraging."

Thinking back on it, Kinnear knows that he made the right choice to leave television when he did — both "Talk Soup" and his own follow-up talk show "Later."

"My contract was up on 'Talk Soup,' " he says. "I had seen every horrific human element that I needed to see and raise an eyebrow over. It was easy to move on from there. And 'Later' was an easy one, too. Up until 'As Good as It Gets,' I was part actor, part talk show host. And the weight of that was getting heavier and heavier. Not just because there weren't enough hours in the day, but it felt to me like I was cheating on one or the other. So it became movies.

"And then," he adds, laughing, "I didn't work for a year."

Up next — Kinnear is reading scripts and going through what he calls "the process" again.

"There are two processes," he explains. "Making movies and looking for movies to make. Making's much better."

"Auto Focus" opens on Oct. 25.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 23

The Taurus moon aligns with Uranus at 10:14 a.m. and becomes inactive until 8:17 p.m. There may be unexpected distractions, delays, reversals. Allow extra time. The sun enters Scorpio at 10:18 a.m., remaining there until November 22. Plan to catch up on unfinished business, handle routine chores and errands. Get your life in order. The moon enters talkative Gemini at 8:17 p.m.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24

A Gemini moon sets a fast pace today and tomorrow. You must carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan, if you want to be productive. The moon forms harmonious 120-degree contacts to Mars at 7:23 a.m. and Neptune at 12:35 p.m. Write emails, letters, send packages, make phone calls. Communicate, network, collaborate.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 25

Get an early start to this day. Initiate new projects before 10:43 a.m., when the Gemini moon aligns with Mercury. Sales and promotion campaigns get the green light. Overall, people will be upbeat and outgoing. Be sure to have a clear plan of action in order to avoid spinning your wheels and wasting time. A lunar alignment to Uranus makes this evening prime for socializing, partying.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 26

This morning may be slow-starting. The Gemini moon aligns with Saturn at 5:01 a.m. and becomes inactive until 7:10 a.m., when it enters Cancer. Zero in on family, domestic concerns. This is a wonderful day for handling projects around the home, making purchases or redecorating. Be more nurturing and give extra attention to children or pets. Slow down and don't take risks between 6:58-9:58 p.m., when the moon and Mars align.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 27

A Cancer moon makes this day ideal for family get-togethers. Plan to spend quality time with loved ones. Enjoy a special dinner at home or your favorite restaurant. A 120-degree alignment of Jupiter and Pluto also impacts the day. Focus on issues that have been problematic or confusing. You can cut through obstacles and make objective decisions. This influence is also favorable for making personal changes, taking control of your life and transforming bad habits or attitudes.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 28

At 3:22 a.m. the Cancer moon becomes inactive. Mars interacts with Neptune at 9:37 a.m., prompting you to take it slow and easy. Be more relaxed and spontaneous. A Leo moon arrives at 2:20 p.m., and the green light goes on for new beginnings across the board. A harmonious alignment of Mercury and Uranus also affects the day. Trust your first impression; live your ideals. This is a wonderful influence for learning, studying, grasping new ideas and concepts, gaining new insights.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 29

Planetary action rates high across the board today. A Leo moon generates an upbeat, playful mood. Be sure to take time out for yourself, to enjoy favorite sports, hobbies or friends. Influences are also prime for getting things done. Projects will come together smoothly. People will be cooperative, helpful. A lunar alignment to Jupiter makes this a great evening for social or romantic activities.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 30

A lunar opposition to Uranus at 10:19 a.m. can make for a hectic morning. Stop, look and listen. Allow yourself extra time. You can be most productive this afternoon. The Leo moon interacts with Mercury and Saturn until 4:51 p.m., when it becomes inactive. However, a 90-degree alignment of Venus-Neptune warns against making major purchases or decisions. You may not have all the facts. The moon enters Virgo at 6:59 p.m. A harmonious alignment of Mercury and Saturn makes this evening ideal for catching up on work or study projects, signing contracts or making practical decisions.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 31

A Virgo moon urges you to plan a busy, productive day. Tackle jobs you have been putting off; follow through on unfinished projects. Postpone launching major new enterprises for a few days. A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Neptune may blur the lines between fact and fiction. On the other hand, this planetary influence is prime for fun and games, tricks and treats. Mercury moves into Scorpio at 5:43 p.m., remaining there until November 19.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 1

The planet Uranus is slowing its rate of motion, preparing for direct travel November 4. That means that the first few days of November may bring unexpected surprises, discoveries or upheavals. Today a Virgo moon continues to place the focus on hard work. Instead of worrying about situations that are out of your control, keep your mind and hands busy with practical projects. Clean out, reorganize, get rid of items that are no longer useful or valuable. This moon aligns with Saturn at 6:19 p.m. and becomes inactive until 8:28 p.m., when it enters Libra.

While the governor's race between Republican Mitt Romney and Democrat Shannon O'Brien may get the lead billing, the race for state representative between incumbent Democrat Garrett Bradley and Republican challenger Nathaniel Palmer may be the bigger draw in Cohasset.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas is hopeful that the election will draw 75 percent of the electorate, an number that will she expects to be slightly aided by the presence of Palmer, who is a Cohasset resident.

Hedlund, LeClair highlight differences during debate

By Jeanne M. Rideout

Democrat Ted LeClair said his campaign is about results, and Republican state Sen. Robert Hedlund said his track record proves that he gets them.

The contenders lobbed barbs while answering questions from a panel of CNC editors on the redevelopment of the former South Weymouth Naval Air Station, MCAS as a high school graduation requirement, Greenbush, the Clean Elections Law, and Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, during an Oct. 24 debate at Hingham Town Hall. The debate was sponsored by CNC and moderated by the Hingham League of Women Voters.

Positive campaigning sparked the biggest flare-up of the evening, with Hedlund saying LeClair had sent out misleading campaign literature and LeClair suggesting Hedlund was the source of a civil lawsuit involving LeClair that had been mailed anonymously to the press.

The suit was a civil action filed in Plymouth County Superior Court on May 7, 2002, claiming breach of contract and fraud in the sale of cranberry bogs and farm equipment. Defendants include members of the LeClair family, including Ted LeClair. LeClair has said the suit is frivolous and without merit.

"I think Sen. Hedlund could write the Fire is put out quickly

A second-story front window was smashed, a hole was cut in the roof, and the entire building was soaked by thousands of gallons of water, but thanks to a quick response, the five-unit apartment building at 108-110 Elm St., was still standing after fire broke out in a second story kitchen Friday.

"The building was saved due to the fact that the mutual aid system works so well," said Fire Chief Roger Lincoln. "We had the help come in right behind us from Hull and Scituate and we were able to institute an aggressive attack team."

While the official cause has yet to be determined, Lincoln said that he believed it would be recorded as electrical. The fire began in the wall of the kitchen, and give the old construction, that most likely contained no fire stops between floors, quickly spread up into the attic.

"I want to point out the great job that the firefighters did in getting the fire under control,"

Three Cohasset teens escape tragedy in car crash

Police say alcohol, speed were factors

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A Cohasset High School senior, star athlete and honor roll student was arraigned Monday in Quincy District Court on myriad charges following a single-car accident on Beechwood Street.

Police say a combination of alcohol, speed and inexperience led to the crash Friday night that sent three Cohasset teens to the hospital, including the driver Robert Hickey, 18, of 473 Beechwood St.

Hickey, who is co-captain of the CHS soccer team that is heading to the state tournament, was driving a 1988 Mercury Grand Marquis at a high rate of speed toward Route 3A, according to police, when it slammed into several large rocks at about 9:45 p.m. just off Beechwood Street not far from its intersection with Norman Todd Road.

There were open containers of beer inside the car, as well as a quantity of beer in the trunk, said police, who arrested Hickey at the accident scene. When police arrived, he was outside the vehicle and appeared to have minor injuries. Hickey, while under police guard, was transported to Quincy Medical Center, and was subsequently bailed to his mother in the emergency room.

"What we're seeing is the tip of the iceberg. What will happen depends on how the community as a whole reacts and if there can be some consensus."
— Principal Michael Jones

Trapped inside were passengers Taylor O'Brien, 17, of 52 Jerusalem Road, and Maura Y. McKenney, 18, of 45 Spring St., both of whom appeared to have serious trauma to their faces, police said. The Jaws of Life were used to extricate the girls from the car. Ambulances from Cohasset, Scituate and Hull were called to the scene along with the Boston MedFlight helicopter.

All three teens were riding in the front seat of the Marquis and were not wearing seatbelts. O'Brien was airlifted to Brigham and Women's Hospital and was released from the hospital on Sunday. McKenney was transported to South Shore Hospital. McKenney's length of stay at South Shore was not immediately available, but all three teens were home Tuesday, and two were back in school.

CHS Principal Michael Jones, who said he was grateful the accident wasn't worse, said school administrators are very concerned about the physical and emotional health of the students in the accident, as well as other teens who went to the scene later.

"Mr. DeLorenzo (assistant principal), Mr. Ford (athletic director) and I have talked to several students who went to the scene," Jones said.

Although the accident was not connected to a school event, Jones said the schools and community need to work together to address the problem of teens and alcohol.

"The problem is very generalized and is not specific to

James Lane taking is off STM warrant

On the recommendation of Town Manager Mark Haddad, the article that was to appear on the Special Town Meeting Warrant to take portions of James Lane has been pulled.

After meeting with the representatives of the Red Lion Inn and Citgo station that abut the road, and noticing that the actual width of the lane does not match the paved area, Haddad and Selectman Merle Brown decided to hold off on any proposed plans.

The road was targeted because the James Brook drainage pipe could possibly be moved there during the Village Revitalization Project.

All sides have agreed to continued negotiating, with the hope of resolving the issue prior to the Annual Town Meeting.

Lamberts Lane to be trimmed

After several calls to the police department, the Department of Public Works will trim an area of shrubs and trees on town land at the corner of Lamberts Lane.

The vegetation is blocking a vehicles from a clear view as they exit onto Hull Street.

The residents, who own the property on each corner of the street, have also been asked to remove the trees and shrubs on their land that are blocking the view in order to make the area safer.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Monday, Oct. 28:

Nov. 5 is Election Day, there will be no selectmen's meeting.

Zoning Board of Appeals, Nov. 4, Nov. 14 (Avalon - Drainage and Septic), Dec. 2 (Avalon-Health and Environment), Dec. 16 (Avalon - Public Safety), Jan. 6 (Avalon - Infrastructure), and Jan. 27 (Avalon - Local Preference and Affordable Housing needs), all at 7:30 p.m. All Avalon meetings will be held in the selectmen's office and will be televised.

Conservation Commission, Oct. 24 and Nov. 14 at 7:30 p.m.

Senior Housing Committee, Nov. 6 at 9:00 a.m.

Planning Board, Nov. 6, 7:30 p.m. (Public Hearing on Senior Housing proposal), Nov. 20, 7:30 p.m.

Growth and Development Committee, Nov. 2 and Nov. 21 at 7:30.

Water Commission, Nov. 7 at 8 p.m. at the Water Treatment Plant on King Street.

Police/Fire Study Committee, Nov. 7 at 2:30 p.m.

Committee on Town History, Nov. 11 at 7:30 p.m., Lothrop House.

Board of Health, Nov. 13 at 7 p.m.

Library Trustees, Nov. 20, at 7:30 p.m.

Sewer Commission, Dec. 2, at 6 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise indicated.

Brush chipping

Residential brush will be accepted at the D.P.W. parking area on Saturday, Nov. 2, from 7:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. No trees over 2 inches in diameter. No contractors.

Foreign objects clogging pumps

There are still many cases of foreign objects clogging sewer pumps, and this is to remind customers that only normal toilet and garbage disposer waste should be discharged. As the sewer department previously advised its users, it is necessary to charge for the Town's $85 ($100 on weekends) cost for service calls to remove foreign objects.

The following objects have caused repeated service calls: tampons, dental floss, baby wipes, Q-Tips. In addition, the following objects will also clog the pumps: bones, diapers, cloth, glass, metal, nuts, plastic, rags, rope, rubber, sand, sanitary, napkins, shells, towels.

Flag depository at American Legion

The American Flag Code adopted by the United States Congress in 1942 says, "When a flag is in such condition that is no longer a fitting emblem for display, it should be destroyed in a dignified way, preferably by burning."

The American Legion, George H. Mealy Post 118 in Cohasset now has a way for the public to be able to bring them their tattered and worn flags so they may be properly and ceremoniously destroyed. Their new Flag Depository, located in front of the legion post at 98 Summer St., has the look and shape of an American flag. This solid metal Flag Depository protects the flags until they are removed for storage and kept until the time of the desecration ceremony. The Herb Chambers Automobile Dealerships made this new service possible through a donation to the post. Everyone is invited to bring his or her retired flags to the depository.

Flu clinic Nov. 2

The Board of Health will hold a free flu clinic at the Second Congregational Church, Bates Hall (next to the Town Hall) on Saturday Nov. 2 from10 am – 12 noon. Residents 50 years of age and older and those with chronic illness are encouraged to get their flu shot at this time. Pneumonia vaccine will also be available. Seniors 65 years and older are asked to bring their Medicare and or Senior Health insurance cards to the clinic.

All are reminded to wear a short sleeve shirt. For further information call the public health nurse at 781-383-2210

Winter guidelines

The public works department has issued the following winter guidelines for residents:

- Do not rake leaves or other debris into roads.
- Uncover storm drains blocked with leaves, snow or other debris.
- Do not plow or throw snow from private property onto the street or sidewalk.
- Do not block sidewalks with plowed snow or motor vehicles.
- Overnight parking is prohibited from Nov. 15 through April 15. It interferes with snow removal and is prohibited by town bylaws.
- The town is not responsible for damaged lawns, fences, steps, shrubs, trees or mailboxes within the town layout.
- Sand for resident use only will be available behind the downtown parking lot.

Assessors say town manager undervalues the board's role

But Mark Haddad disputes appraisal

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

For the second time in less than a month, the chairman of a town board used the public comment period of the Selectmen's meeting to launch into an attack on Town Manager Mark Haddad.

The latest dispute, brought forward by Elsa Miller and Mary Granville of the Board of Assessors, was more civil than the last one — regarding the benches being placed on the town common against the will of the Common Historic District Commission, which devolved into an insult-fest by members of the audience.

The crux of the Board of Assessors' charge is that Haddad has not included them in the process of hiring a replacement for out-going deputy assessor Cheryl Pooler. Pooler announced that she would be leaving 18-months ago, as soon as the assessor's position in East Bridgewater opened up.

However, the Haddad maintains that the assessors are fully-vested in the hiring effort, pointing out that the Town Manager Act adopted by the town five years ago gives him the power to hire and fire.

Tuesday's controversy had its roots in a confrontation between Miller and Haddad that occurred just minutes before the Selectmen's meeting started.

Haddad had been informed by town Finance Director Michael Buckley that the Board of Assessors had twice mentioned that it had planned to go into executive session to discuss "other business" during its meeting earlier in the afternoon – ostensibly to discuss the one-page letter Miller and Granville wanted to present to the Board of Selectmen about Haddad.

"When the assessors' meeting started, Elsa said that they were going to go into executive session later to talk about some 'other business,'" said Buckley, who had to leave to attend a wake. "When I got up to leave to go to the wake, she again said they were going to go into executive session. Whether they did, I don't know. Whether they don't know how to go into executive session properly, I don't know. Whether they thought it was no longer needed because there was no one present at the meeting besides the assessors, I don't know, but she said it twice."

"I also made it very clear that I would bring the finalists to the board for their comment as I have done in every other position that I have hired."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Haddad confronted Miller about the executive session and says she told him that they in fact did go into executive session. Several witnesses who were in or near the room at the time confirmed this, but in a telephone interview Miller vehemently denied that she said that, or that there was even an executive session. Haddad says he also asked what the grounds for the executive session were, and Miller replied, "I'll find a reason." Miller says that quote was taken out of context and meant as a joke.

"Elsa Miller participated in two of the interviews," said Haddad who said after the meeting. "If she was so concerned with the issue, then why did she participate?"

Haddad also said that the Board of Assessors was involved in the process from the start.

"Prior to the interviews, I made it very clear that I would conduct the preliminary screening," said Haddad. "I also made it very clear that I would bring the finalists to the board for their comment as I have done in every other position that I have hired."

Miller contends that the Town Manager and Town Manager Act are making it impossible to fulfill their state-mandated duties.

"How are we supposed to function as we are mandated by the state, if our powers have been nibbled away at?" asked Miller after the meeting. "We don't have a problem with him hiring or firing, but we do want our issues addressed."

Miller would not elaborate on what issues – besides the speed of the replacement search – bothered the Board of Assessors, saying that it "wasn't the appropriate forum to discuss," them.

Miller and Granville presented selectmen with a one-page letter detailing their problems. It asks the board and Haddad to delay the decision to hire until "a REVIEW of the department's salary budget and clerk expenses is reviewed." Throughout the meeting, Miller continually said that the process was moving "too fast."

Haddad responded that the Board of Assessors had been well-informed of the process, the job had been posted for a month, and he was confident that the person hired would be well-qualified for the job.

At that point, acting-Chairman Ronnie McMorris (Michael Sullivan was not in attendance) directed Haddad to slow down the process. Haddad said that he would not, because everything was

"As a State Representative, Garrett Bradley has been a tireless advocate for this district. He works closely with the local elected officials and the community to be the people's voice on Beacon Hill. Most recently, he joined with the people of Hingham in opposing the additional runway at Logan Airport. He lobbied the FAA regarding the importance of a true "over the water" flight path. Garrett Bradley is the clear choice for the people of Hingham."

~ Mathew MacIver - Hingham

"There is no State Representative who has worked harder to secure funding for the School Building Assistance Program than Garrett Bradley. Garrett has been a true friend to Hull and that is why I am supporting Garrett for re-election to the House of Representatives."

~ John Reilly, Jr. - Hull

"One of the largest issues facing the Town of Cohasset is development under Chapter 40B. Garrett Bradley has been a leader in the legislature in working to return control of Chapter 40B projects to local communities. Garrett Bradley is a person who can be trusted to represent the will of the people in his district."

Cohasset High School senior Rachel Judge takes notes during the debate for her current domestic issues class.

State Senate candidate Ted LeClair gestures when making a point as Sen. Robert Hedlund awaits his chance at a rebuttal.

The candidates debate

LeClair and Hedlund tackled several tough issues during the debate including Chapter 40B, the new Logan airport runway and development of the former South Weymouth Naval Air Station.

Hingham League of Women Voters timers Catherine Salisbury and Julie Strehle keep the candidates to their two-minute limit.

Sen. Hedlund faces debate moderator T.P. Elliot-Smith while Ted LeClair addresses Community Newspaper Company panelists and editors Cathy Conley, Gregory Mathis and Alice Coyle.

book on negative campaigning. What about things showing up anonymously in the mail? The definition of negative is when attacks are on a candidate's personal history or family," LeClair said.

"I have run a positive campaign," Hedlund said. "I received a copy of that in the mail, too. For you to accuse me of it is unfounded, unfair, and wrong. I did not do that. You need to look beyond me to find someone with an ax to grind. It wasn't me."

In his opening remarks, Hedlund reported having contrasting feelings about the future of politics he perceived during a debate at Weymouth High School and what he sees on Beacon Hill every day.

"I came away feeling proud about the process in America. At the Statehouse, I am frustrated with the lack of concern for taxpayers. What we see today in state government is what motivated me to run in the first place — the one-party system, the cuts made in human services while we are building a new $1 billion conference center and subsidizing the Hynes Center for $20 million, the same amount cut from the School Building Assistance program. It is my opponents' party that has put us in this predicament. The Democrat rank and file are voting with the leadership, rather than in the best interests of their districts. You should stick with the people who appointed you," Hedlund said.

LeClair stressed the theme of his campaign: Beacon Hill has lost its focus.

"I want to get back to valuing people, not politics. At South Shore Hospital, a surgeon jumps in the ambulance with the patient and does the surgery in Boston. I want to get that fixed. What this is about is valuing you. I want to put you first and politics second. Sen. Hedlund has been there for 10 years. The problems have gotten worse. Maybe I have the opportunity to take over a leadership role in the Senate," LeClair said.

Both candidates agreed that a master developer was the right choice for the naval air station, but differed on whether master developer Lennar Partnership and the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corp. should be in charge of the cleanup under the watchful eyes of the state Department of Environmental Management and the federal Environmental Protection Agency.

The Tri-Town Corp. agreed on a master developer after struggling through a period of realigning the direction of redevelopment after braking off negotiations with Virginia-based Mills Corp. to build a mega-mall at the base. The mall was planned to be the economic engine driving base redevelopment.

"The South Shore Tri-Town Development Corp. came to the conclusion that it did not have the economic means or expertise to redevelop the base. Many of us felt that way this summer. When the Tri-Town Corp. courted Mills, it lost a lot of valuable time," said Hedlund, who came out in opposition to the mall.

"I supported a master developer more than two years ago. It is the biggest development in the South Shore, and we need people to be completely involved," LeClair said.

The Legislature is predominantly Democratic. A panelist questioned how LeClair could support reforms if he was a member of the predominant party.

"For five years, the state budget has not been done on time. No pay until the budget is done. It works in other states. There should be no bonus pay. The budget process should be done in open session. I hope future leaders can accept this in their future," LeClair said.

"The majority party controls the budget. Reforms have been proposed by the Republicans. The Republican Party has not put up enough good candidates. There is blame to go around for this one-party monopoly," Hedlund said.

Both agreed that Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, needs change. Chapter 40B allows developers to apply to the state to build housing projects turned down by local boards as long as 24 percent of the units meet the criteria for affordable housing.

Hedlund voted against the Omnibus Bill, which, he said, merely kept the status quo. Hedlund said he has offered several amendments to correct the flawed law.

"We have had the affordable housing law since 1969, and we have the worst record in the country for affordable housing. I stood with the region in opposition to a bill that kept the status quo in place. We'll get another bite at the apple," Hedlund said.

"It was a signal to the activists that their voice has been heard," LeClair said. "I propose a three-year moratorium to allow towns to do their own 40B. If that does not work, then enforce the law."

"You ran two years ago and never mentioned 40B," Hedlund retorted.

One panelist noted that 90 percent of the states have less building permits per person than Massachusetts.

Hedlund noted the impact of 40B in construction. He told the story of a contractor who, a year ago, had never heard of 40B. This year, he has three 40B applications with the state.

"He said to me, 'I think 40B is out of control, even though I'm making a lot of money.' We don't want to take any more control away from the people. Some red tape needs to be cut, but we need to rein in 40B," Hedlund said.

"Housing is a huge issue," LeClair said. "We need to work together to make the process go more smoothly. 40B is not the way to do it. People have a right to build on their land."

The candidates also agreed that MCAS should not be a graduation requirement.

"I think it is outrageous," LeClair said. "You can't set your people up to fail. People don't give the money and resources to people to pass, to become the important members of society they can be. MCAS is a tool. It can't be the only answer."

"When the Education Reform Act was passed in 1993, it brought significant reform. It was warranted and long overdue. For a while, there was a valid argument that there should be a yardstick to measure the effectiveness of the act, that the money was wisely spent, but that was years ago. I don't believe MCAS should be a graduation requirement," Hedlund said.

The road to true transportation improvements never runs smooth.

LeClair said he was opposed to Greenbush at first, "then I realized it was coming."

"I want them to do it right," LeClair said. "Do I think it is the best solution? No, but it is the solution we have now. My biggest concern is the parking. We have to be proactive."

Hedlund has been staunchly opposed to the restoration of the commuter rail line.

"My opposition to Greenbush led to better mitigation for the towns," Hedlund said. "Frank Hynes and I were directly involved in negotiations. It led to a better deal that they would have had. The book is not closed on this issue. The Weymouth Landing design is something I am still quite involved in."

Hedlund and LeClair both supported the Clean Elections Law, which was overwhelmingly supported by voters in a ballot question.

"I always respect the integrity of the petition process. I took that as my mandate, and I voted consistently for Clean Elections. It should have been allowed to take effect. I had planned to set up my campaign under Clean Elections, but before long, I realized the funding was not there. There will be a tough debate in the coming session. I hope to do my best by the voters, as I have in the past," Hedlund said.

"I support clean elections," LeClair said. "It was wrong of the Legislature not to fund it. We need to give Clean Elections a try. If it doesn't work, then we'll know the money thing wasn't the answer, and we can. try something else."

In closing, LeClair stressed his belief that Hedlund has not delivered.

"It is great to be able to explain problems, but you've got to fix them. I was very honored to serve you in the Navy. I would be very honored to serve you in the Senate," LeClair said.

Hedlund closed by citing examples of how he has delivered: helping to create a senior citizen pharmacy program, securing funding and open space for projects such as the new Abigail Adams State Park and Turkey Hill, creating a plan to clean up the polluted Hingham Annex and add more acreage to Wompatuck State Park, funding for seawall projects, and a self-help grant to help preserve the Nantasket carousel.

"My hard work as state senator has produced direct results that benefit our community and the people I serve," Hedlund said.

Cost of campaigning

LeClair outspends Hedlund by nearly $27,000 in race for State Senate seat

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

When voters go to the polls on Tuesday, Nov. 5 to elect their state senator, there will be many issues to consider.

Among those issues in the Plymouth and Norfolk District are education, health care, local aid, Chapter 40B (the state's affordable housing law), Greenbush, and the state's unfunded Clean Elections Law.

An issue for the candidates as they head into the final week before the election is how they will get their message out to the voters. Whether by mailings, newspaper or television ads, radio spots, glossy brochures, or campaign signs, these methods all cost money.

Money talks, and how much of a war chest candidates acquire plays a big part in how a battle for the ballot is waged.

The state Office of Campaign and Political Finance requires candidates to file a disclosure of receipts and expenditures during a campaign period.

As of Oct. 18, Democratic challenger Ted LeClair of Marshfield has out-raised State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, by approximately $18,500 and outspent him by nearly $27,000.

LeClair had amassed $104,909.06 in donations and spent $107,218.98. Because he started with a balance of $20,438.98, campaign funds available to LeClair totaled $125,348.04.

Hedlund had received $86,433.77 in donations and spent $80,369.95. With a beginning balance of $41,175.87, Hedlund had campaign funds of $127,609.64.

Hedlund's campaign season took an unexpected turn, since he had hoped to file as a Clean Elections candidate.

"I had planned to set up my campaign under Clean Elections, but I realized the funding was not there," said Hedlund, who intends to continue to stump for funding of the law.

On Nov. 3, 1998, voters approved Question 2 — known as the Clean Elections Law — on the state ballot. The measure established a system of public funding for candidates for state office who agree to spending limits.

According to the OCPF web site, a Clean Elections candidate agrees to receive individual contributions of no more than $100 per cycle. For any election, a Clean Elections candidate may not accept contributions of more than $100 from a political committee.

In a primary election for the state Senate, a participating candidate would receive $46,500 in Clean Elections funds and have a spending limit of $58,400. In the general election for state Senate, a participating candidate would receive $31,400 and have a spending limit of $39,000.

One of the costs to candidates is campaign signs.

In a late afternoon development on Tuesday, Weymouth Building Inspector Jeffrey Richards ordered the LeClair campaign to take down some banner-style signs put up over the weekend.

Richards said he received four written complaints and four phone calls complaining about the oversized signs.

Residents complained of seeing 20 such signs. Driving around town, Richards spotted five.

Bylaws limit campaign signs to six square feet in size.

"I think they just didn't know the requirements under the bylaw," Richards said. "They agreed to have the signs down by 5 p.m."

Three Cohasset teens escape tragedy in car crash

Cohasset," he said. "But it is really clear as a community and as an educational institution, we need to make our environment safer in town and at school."

School officials have said drinking is a problem at school dances, the most recent example was the Homecoming Dance, where several students arrived under the influence of alcohol, which resulted in a student-administrator confrontation.

Jones said the middle-high school intends to conduct a series of focus groups with student leaders, parents and police to ascertain to what they think can be done.

"Then the administration will draft whatever changes in policy and procedures we think are necessary and present them to the school council and school committee for review," he said.

Jones said it is a town-wide problem.

"What we're seeing is the tip of the iceberg," he said. "What will happen depends on how the community as a whole reacts and if there can be some consensus."

He also said student leaders need to exhibit a different kind of leadership.

"Instead of being advocates for the class, they need to lead the class," Jones said.

Michael Gill, school health coordinator, said he is compiling the results from a youth risk survey he conducts every two years.

"There is no question with regards to alcohol, students who live in coastal towns like Cohasset are higher than the state and national averages," he said, explaining that coastal towns may tend to be more "party communities" because of their location.

The survey, which will be mailed to parents soon, shows 62 percent of Cohasset High students consumed alcohol in the past 30 days as compared with 53 percent in the state and 47 percent in the country.

"We have concerns about alcohol, binge drinking and marijuana," Gill said, noting other communities have problems with different drugs. "Alcohol and marijuana are the drugs of choice in Cohasset."

Police say alcohol was a factor in the crash of this 1988 Mercury Grand Marquis that slammed into some rocks off Beechwood Street on Friday night.

Hickey, who was named to the high honor roll last spring, was arraigned Monday in Quincy District Court on several charges. They included: operating under the influence and causing serious bodily injury while operating negligently; OUI liquor; having an open container of alcohol in the vehicle; negligent operation of a motor vehicle; minor in possession/transporting alcoholic beverages; speeding, failure to drive in marked lanes and not wearing a seatbelt. Hickey will return to court at 9 a.m., Dec. 23, police said.

Police Chief Robert Jackson said it was fortunate that no one was killed.

"Mixing alcohol, young people and cars often leads to tragic results," Jackson said.

At the time of the interview Tuesday, Jones, the principal, had not talked to the students regarding possible suspension from athletics. McKenney also plays soccer. But Jones did say Cohasset school policy is to suspend a student from athletics for 30 days following an alcohol or substance-abuse incident. The MIAA (governing body of high school athletics) mandates a 14-day or three-game suspension, whichever is greater, for consuming or being in possession of alcohol.

Elm Street fire is contained quickly

said Lincoln. "Cohasset along with Hull and Scituate did a fine job of fighting and containing this fire, while Norwell stood guard over the station."

No one was home at the time, but two dogs and two cats were rescued.

The fire was noticed by a passerby, who called the business number of the fire station. The station then relayed the information to the dispatcher.

"Most of the damage was sustained in the kitchen on the second floor," said Lincoln. "But, it also went into the attic and it also burned down into the ceiling of the first floor."

The section of Elm Street in front of the Cohasset Harbor Resort (Kimball's) was blocked and vehicles were forced to travel around the grassy triangle the separates Border Street from Elm. Six vehicles responded to the incident, two each from Cohasset, Hull, Scituate.

The home is owned by Peter Flaherty, who lives in one of the apartments. So far, no one has moved back into the house due to extensive smoke damage.

"No one is currently living in the house," said Flaherty, who was contacted earlier this week. "Right now, I'm just collecting information and dealing with insurance people."

A man at the scene of the fire who said he lived in the building declined to comment at the time.

No one who lived in the apartment was injured, but Capt. Mark Trask of the Cohasset Fire Station was transported to a nearby hospital as a precaution.

"He was in the initial attack team and took some smoke and heat," said Lincoln. "He took some oxygen and headed over to the hospital just to be checked out."

Nov. 5 election to draw a crowd

"I think with all efforts like this, there is so much you wish you did," said Palmer before Monday night's candidates' forum on WATD. "At the same time I have been overwhelmed by the support I have gotten. I've said it before, so it is starting to sound trite, but each day the support grows and I think now we are in a position where we can win. Will we win? We'll find out in a week."

Bradley also feels confident that he is in a position to win.

"I think I have done everything possible to try and be successful," said Bradley. "We have an unbelievable amount of volunteers who have worked so hard making phone calls, putting up signs, and holding signs, so I'm going to continue to work hard for them, because it is they – not I – who have put this campaign in a position to win once again."

Bradley wishes that the campaign had focused more on the issues.

"I wish my opponent hadn't gone as negative as I he has gone which has distracted us from the issues that we should be talking about," said Bradley. "This is a very serious job and it will be a very difficult two years ahead and we need someone with experience and I think I am the person."

But Palmer says that there are fundamental changes that need to take place on Beacon Hill, which opens up Bradley to criticism.

"To most people, government is out of sight out of mind," said Palmer. "People are concerned about the economy, but I am not sure that people connect the role of government in the economy and the direction of the state. That is the one area where I think we have really had to push and show that it is not just about the guys who argue up there on Beacon Hill, but that the consequences of what they do have real affect on jobs and on the quality of life."

There are 5,225 registered voters in Cohasset. Of that total, 1,096 are Democrats; 1,248 are Republicans; seven are from the Green Party; four are Libertarians; and five list the political designation "all other." That leaves 2,865 unregistered voters — a group many feel will decide the election.

So far, 88 residents have pulled absentee ballots in the town's two precincts.

"We were very busy yesterday (giving out absentee ballots)," said Douglas. "We now have 38 pulled in Precinct 1 and 50 in Precinct 2."

The polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Tuesday, and as usual, both Precinct 1 and Precinct 2 will vote at the Town Hall auditorium.

Absentee ballots for state election

Absentee ballots for the state election Nov. 5, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noon Monday, Nov. 4, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

- Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open.
- Physical disability.
- Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Nov. 5 to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the oval to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check-in tables. The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your Town Clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the Town Clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Payphones could make comeback at CMHS

On the request of Assistant Principal Jack DeLorenzo, the school department is considering installing two public telephones on the middle-high school grounds.

Prior to construction, there were two phones on the building grounds (one inside and one outside), but they cost the school nothing and actually generated a small amount of money for the school. Now, because of the increased use of cell phones (and the corollary drop in payphone usage) the phones will cost $2,350 to install this year and then $1,800 annually after that.

"The committee is still reviewing it," said Supt. Edward Malvey. "There are two locations in question, one outside and one inside. We'll probably end up with some type of phone inside for off-hours use, since the office is closed. It is more iffy with the one outside."

Business manager Ivan Klimko recommended the installation to the School Committee, which will take the issue up again Nov. 7.

The phones are primarily used by students involved in after-school activities, such as sports, though the outdoor phone also generates usage by fans attending sporting events and other student presentations. It is also hoped that the installation will cut down on the use of school phones by students to make calls, though Malvey was unsure how much the installations would impact that situation.

The approximate locations that DeLorenzo indicated for the payphones are in the corridor outside the cafeteria and outside the building near the turnaround that is in front of the entrance to the lower lobby.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

VASSAR FIELD HOCKEY

Elizabeth Pierson of Cohasset, daughter of Wigmore Pierson and Janet Pierson, is a returning member of the field hockey team at Vassar College. The team lost three starters from a squad that went 7-10 last year. But Elizabeth, a senior, who was one of two leading scorers last year, has helped the team reach a 5-8 record so far this season.

BUSINESS DEGREE

In September, Matthew M. Conley of Cohasset earned a bachelor of science in business administration from the School of Business Administration at Northeastern University.

AT GEORGETOWN

Katharine M. Grimm and Anna E. Roche are both freshmen at Georgetown University. Katharine is a CHS graduate and Anna, who is enrolled in the School of Nursing and Health Studies, graduated from Notre Dame Academy.

DORMITZER TO SPEAK

The Social Service League Speaker Series continues this Friday with the author of "Narrative History of Cohasset" by Jackie Dormitzer. Jackie has lived in Cohasset for more than 35 years and has been very involved in town politics as well as serving on the town's Advisory Committee, the South Shore Art Center and co-founded the Cohasset Village Renaissance. Her book traces the story of Cohasset and its people from 1950 to 2000. Jackie will be speaking from noon to 1p.m. at the South Shore Art Center. Free and open to all. For more info 781-383-0771.

IT'S TIME FOR A BALL!

This is an off year for the Community Garden Club's very popular Holiday House Tour and the first year for its Holiday Ball. A limited number of tickets are now being offered for sale to the general public. The Holly Ball will be held at "Stoneleigh", 478 Jerusalem Road on Saturday, Dec. 7 from 7 p.m. until 11p.m.. Stoneleigh will be decorated for the holidays by garden club members. Included in the decorations will be many club-member designed holiday wreaths available for purchase by means of a silent auction. Guests will enjoy a buffet supper served throughout the evening. They will be entertained by a five-piece band playing music suitable for dancing. Suggested dress is optional black tie. The cost of admission is $75 per person. (Cash bar).

This is a fund-raising event to benefit club projects. The club maintains the gardens at three locations in Cohasset — the Lothrop House, the Lightkeeper's Residence, and Constitution Park. The club also supports local beautification projects, provides scholarships for three deserving Cohasset High seniors, and contributes to many environmental organizations. For more information phone 781-383-9689. Make checks payable to the "Community Garden Club of Cohasset" and mail them to One Windy Hill Road, Cohasset 02025.

Rebecca Kirk just received her MBA from the MIT Sloan School of Management in Cambridge.

I had this email sent to me recently and I am so hoping that someone out there can help in this most interesting search. The email reads, "My great-aunt Frances Kent died in Cohasset in 1979. Our family lived out of state, and was unable to make it to the funeral. She lived with a man named Walter Egan on Beechwood Street, and he died in 1985. At the time she died, Frances had a red felt-covered photo album with very old family photos and/or tintypes. We are very interested in locating the photo album, and believe it may have been acquired by someone in the Cohasset area. We have visited Cohasset, and inquired at several antiques shops, but nobody has any knowledge of an item from so long ago." If anyone knows of this photo album or has any other information that could be shared, please contact Glenn Corbin 3662 Twin Oaks Drive Smyrna, GA 30080 (770) 433-0850 glarco@netzero.net

VAN STORAGE

The Cohasset Sailing Club received a mini van generously donated by Peter Cappazolli of Cohasset Imports. This van was used by the race team and is worth it's weight in gold! The problem, where to store it this winter. The Sailing Club is now looking for a place to store it and wanted me to place this in this week's column to see if anyone has any extra garage space, extra parking space etc. If anyone thinks that may be able to help with this dilemma, please contact Sandy Crough at 781-383-1117.

HOLIDAY MARKETPLACE

The South Shore Art Center will hold a Holiday Marketplace and Open House on Saturday, Nov. 9, from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. The marketplace will feature a select number of craft artisans selling jewelry, glass ornaments, clothing, soaps, holiday soft sculpture, and doll clothing. WEDDINGS & ENGAGEMENTS

Mr. and Mrs. James David Santacroce

Santacroce - Daley

Bronwen Marie Daley, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Daley of 75 Whitehead Road, Cohasset, and formerly of Hingham, married Mr. James David Santacroce, son of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Santacroce of 290 High St., Hingham on June 8, 2002.

The bride is the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis A. Sousa of Lynnfield and the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Daley of Bronxville, N.Y. The groom is the grandson of Mrs. John A. Santacroce and the late John A. Santacroce, and grandson of Mrs. C. John Alessandrini and the late C. John Alessandrini of Weymouth.

The Nuptial Mass was held at St. Paul Church, Hingham and officiated by the Rev. James Rafferty. The bride was given in marriage by her father, Charles G. Daley.

Maids of Honor were Ashley B. Nelson of Weymouth and Jessica F. Starsiak of Hingham.

Bridesmaids were sister of the groom, Julie Burt, of Weymouth; Tess O. Doyle of Hingham; Kathleen E. Murphy of Centerville; and Allison M. Smaldone of Hingham. Flower girls were Erin Beth Abbruzzese of Kingston and Allyn Colby Reed of East Greenwich, R.I., both girls cousins of the bride.

Matthew T. McGonagle of Chicago, Ill. served as best man. Groomsmen were Michael Agostino of Hingham; John J. Pollick of Hingham; Michael R. Cunningham of Boston; Thomas J. DeGrann of Boston; C. Grant Daley III of Cohasset, brother of the bride; and Burke M. Reed of East Greenwich. R.I.

Mr. Michael J. Puzo and Mr. Michael Muldoon, friends of the couple, with Sal and Nicole Bartolotti provided the vocal and musical accompaniment at the Nuptial Mass. Capturing the day's festivities for the bride and groom was photographer, Julie Coletta.

The bride and groom are both graduates of Hingham High School.

The bride graduated from the University of Massachusetts - Amherst, College of Nursing and is employed as a pediatric oncology nurse at New England Medical Center in Boston.

Her husband is a graduate of Assumption College, Worcester and Suffolk University, Boston. He is employed at Harvard Pilgrim Health Co. in Quincy as corporate sales trainer.

A reception was held at The Red Lion Inn in Cohasset.

Following a wedding trip to St. Lucia, the couple reside in Quincy.

Mr. and Mrs. Kevin D. Williams

Williams - O'Sullivan

Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah F. O'Sullivan of Cohasset announce the marriage of their daughter, Kathleen Mary, to Kevin D. Williams, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Williams of Amherst, on Saturday, Sept. 21, 2002, at Saint Thomas the Apostle Chapel in Falmouth Heights.

The bride, wore her mother's silk faille gown and matching veil from Priscilla of Boston.

She is a graduate of Brown University and employed as a reporter at INC magazine.

Her husband is a graduate of Boston College and employed as a finance manager at Omgeo.

After the evening ceremony, celebrated by the Rev. John Mulvehill, a reception followed at the New Seabury Country Club.

The bride's sister, Meghan O'Sullivan served as maid of honor, and the groom's brother, Stephen Williams, was best man. Also in the wedding party were the bride's brother, James V. O'Sullivan, and cousins Emily and Mary Beth Orme. Friends Miranda Gordon and Rachel Salguero of Boston, and Karen Jones of Amherst were bridesmaids. Jon Derome and Patrick Korths of Boston, John Stretton of Guilford, Conn., and Joshua Liberman of Great Barrington, Ma., attended as groomsmen.

The bride and groom enjoyed a honeymoon in Kauai and Maui, Hawaii.

Bleakie - Fuller

Mairi Ann Fuller and Michael Scott Bleakie were married Sept. 21, 2002, at the First Parish Church in Cohasset. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Royce Fuller of Avonport, Nova Scotia, and the late Mr. Fuller. The groom is the son of Mrs. John M. Bleakie of North Scituate, and the late Mr. Bleakie.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. David S. Heald, minister of St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church in Yarmouth, Maine.

A reception was held at the Bleakie's home, Lion's Pride.

Following a wedding trip to Maine, the couple is residing in North Scituate.

OPINION

Hedlund for reelection

So much needs to get accomplished in the next Legislative session Our state senators and state representatives will need to hit the ground running. The economy is continuing its downward slide and the state budget crisis looms large. There's no time for learning curves.

For these and other critical reasons, we support the reelection of Weymouth Republican Robert Hedlund as state senator for this district. Hedlund has shown surprising energy and enthusiasm this latest term. He demonstrated remarkable resilience coming off a bruising campaign against Democrat Jim Cantwell and a devastating defeat by David Madden for Weymouth mayor in late 1999.

In the last election, we endorsed his opponent because we thought Hedlund lost some of his spark and focus. He proved us wrong over this last session and we're only too happy to acknowledge that fact. His latest term was filled with accomplishments and achievements to benefit the many towns in his district. Here are but a few which stand out:

- Assisted in getting the state to pick up 100 percent of the repair costs for the Fitzpatrick Way Bridge in Hull and Sea Street Bridge between Humarock and North Marshfield. (That bridge is now renamed the Capt. Frederick Stanley Bridge.)
- Working with Hull to get $10 million in improvements to Nantasket Beach, one of the busiest public beaches in the commonwealth.
- As a member of the transportation committee, Hedlund has been able to get results on some projects of importance, particularly to Norwell, Hingham and Marshfield. Hedlund took the lead in the banning of 18-wheelers on Union Street. It was enacted as a citizens petition. Once it got to state level, Hedlund was instrumental in getting Mass Highway Commissioner Matthew Amorello down to Marshfield and Norwell to see first-hand the impact of the heavy trucks on the narrow roadways of Union and Bridge streets.
- Hedlund has been pushing Mass Highway on the reconstruction and reconfiguring of Queen Anne's corner. Again, Hedlund has taken the lead in getting the state to fund its portion of the work and has kept the project on the front-burner over the last two years.
- He continues to be a strong voice for Marshfield and Scituate's coastal concerns, including funding for seawalls, as well as his work on the Coastal Committee, which has included working closely with scientists and fishermen to study fishing stocks off the New England coast.
- Helped secure funding and open space for the new Abigail Adams State Park in Weymouth.
- Assisted in getting the MDC pool reopened in October after it was closed for the summer due to budget constraints. Last year when he came up against a logjam at the MDC about filling the pool with water, he contacted the National Guard to truck in water. This shamed the MDC into filling the pool.

He's proven he has renewed energy and commitment after 10 years on the job. Maybe it's because he wants to leave a legacy and is eyeing other career options. Whatever the case, he is in place to roll up those sleeves again at a critical time for the state. He's earned the reputation as maverick in the Democratic-controlled senate and he may have made a few enemies over the years, but his is a voice we need right now on Beacon Hill when so many others are speaking the party line. He has shown the district he can still work the system and be a player when needed to bring money and projects to our area.

Hedlund also has a vision for what he wants to accomplish in the next few years — help clean up the fiscal mess by voicing unpopular views on sacred projects like the new convention center and finally fixing the 40B affordable housing law so communities have real tools to address the issue on their own.

It's been a spirited campaign and Hedlund's opponent, Ted LeClair, deserves credit for raising important issues and giving the senator a challenge. LeClair is a smart, articulate and polished up-and-coming politician. In the end, though, we need the experience and voice of Hedlund at this time.

A vote for Garrett Bradley

When newly elected state Rep. Garrett Bradley, a Democrat, took over the reins of the Third Plymouth District from long-time Republican incumbent Mary Jeannette Murray two years ago, he promised to be an independent voice for the district.

Murray used to joke she was a "Republi-crat" and was able to win votes from both sides of the political aisle. Her undying popularity was earned over more than two decades of putting service to her individual constituents first.

But times have changed, and constituent-centered service, although important, is no longer enough.

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we cover the complex issues pertaining to the our district [that come January will include a Scituate precinct] all year long.

So we can say with authority that Bradley is working hard for us — whether it's on reforming Chapter 40B, increasing funds for School Building Assistance grants, or preventing thousands of more aircraft overhead — just to name a few.

In his first term, Bradley showed dogged determination on Beacon Hill to make sure his district's interests were heard. He has demonstrated the courage to stand up to the leadership of his own party and support the will of his district – whether that's on clean elections, the tax roll back, voting against the $22 billion budget, and not supporting the knee-jerk reaction of the Legislature to raise our taxes to cope with the deficit. He is also a tireless worker who has been very visible in our communities, following Mary Jeannette Murray's fine example of constituent service. Bradley is a quick study and has an exceptional gift for sifting through information and facts to make complicated issues easier to grasp.

Two complex land swaps in Hingham requiring special legislation came to fruition during his first term thanks to Bradley and his colleague across the hall, Sen. Robert Hedlund.

The Hingham Shipyard legislation involved an exchange of 25 acres among the MBTA, Dept. of Environmental Management, and developer SeaChain so development of the 155-acre site could move ahead. The land swap also made it possible to increase badly needed, commuter boat parking.

The Old Ward/Main streets land swap enabled Black Rock Corp. to pursue its golf its golf course-residential development and provided Hingham with valuable open space on historic Main Street.

Bradley's challenger, Nathaniel Palmer, a Cohasset Republican, ran an excellent campaign. Mr. Palmer's business acumen and keen analysis of how to help small companies and attract more workers to the South Shore raised the level of debate. He's a political newcomer, but one whom we hope will stay involved and become a strong voice on the South Shore.

We agree with Mr. Palmer that there needs to be more balance on Beacon Hill. However, Bradley has shown he can rise above party politics and represent the district as a whole.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Should be grateful

TO THE EDITOR:

Do members of the Friends of the Harbor have any record of interest and constructive involvement in town affairs, or regular attendance at town meetings? Else why do they keep repeating their objections to the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation "because it is a private, rather than a governmental enterprise"?

As informed citizens well know, most of the organizations and activities that make the town so livable were developed and maintained by the initiative of groups of private citizens, not by a government agency. A few examples are: the Sailing Club, the town histories, the Community Center, the library, Bancroft Hall at the Lightkeepers residence, the garden clubs, the Minot Light replica, our churches, our sports activities, our road races, the Town Pump, the Farmer's Market, the children's museum, the Maritime Institute at the former Hagerty Property, the South Shore Art Center, the Conservation Trust, the Swim Center, the Sandy Beach Association, the Maritime Museum, the South Shore Music Circus, the dramatic club, the Social Service League, the Village Renaissance Committee, Mariners Park, the Wilson and Antoine Memorial, the Tennis and Squash Club, the Yacht club, The Golf Club, the Teen Center

Many of these depended heavily on the financial support of well-to-do residents, and we should be grateful to them for past and future generosity, instead of resentful.

HEALTH NOTES

More talking about walking

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

We wouldn't be talking about walking again if it wasn't important. We have some late news. Win Merrill formerly of Cohasset; now of Scituate, organizer of the Chanticleers, the well known breakfast club is interested in elder health. He hopes that the Chanticleers (we all know a Chanticleer is a rooster), with the help of Kathy Bryanton and the Board of Health, will become walkers. This possibility was discussed at the last meeting of the club Wednesday (yesterday). We are not aware of the outcome yet, but we expect that at least some of the 25 or so members from all over the South Shore will rise from their breakfasts in the near future and stroll with their friends at some pleasant spot, thereby improving,, hopefully, both health and disposition.

There's nothing like walking and sharing a discussion of a favorite topic with an old friend.

As we move into this crusade of ours at the Board of Health, we learn much about walking, and find it is a very personal thing. Many love to walk and reflect, with the mind running over the various issues important to the time. Others enjoy the companionship of walking with a friend or acquaintance. For many, it is a competitive thing with the 8 or 12 minute mile as a personal goal. I personally enjoy walking with my granddaughter Samantha, because the walk is timeless; she stops often and has so many things to wonder at. There's nothing like walking and sharing a discussion of a favorite topic with an old friend. Murray Campbell walks to the sound of bagpipes; says it keeps him from walking too fast. He also says that he's never seen a walker who isn't cheerful, nor a jogger who is. Joe Godzik, the Health officer citing the information received over a long military career points out that there are many ways to walk, and march, some, much more demanding and healthful than others. Suffice it to say that we pass through many gaits from youth to old age.

Dispelling misconceptions on efforts for senior housing

The following people contributed to this commentary: Joe Buckley, Anna Abbruzzese, Nancy Barrett, Gary Ritts, Margy Charles, Ronnie McMorris, Ed Mulvey, Carol Barrett and Kathy Bryanton.

The Cohasset Senior Housing Committee (SHC) has recently come under criticism for ostensibly proposing to use town-owned land to build an upscale housing project targeted for our wealthy residents. However, this project, as envisioned, is neither upscale nor targeted to the rich. Those of us who have either served on senior housing committees or supported those efforts wish to make clear our mission and attempt to dispel any misunderstandings or misconceptions about those efforts.

— COMMENTARY—

The recent necessity of school projects, sewer projects, and overrides to support the operating budget has driven significant increases in local taxes. This is also a time of escalating housing prices, assessments and tax bills. Residents on limited or fixed incomes are hardest hit, particularly the elderly. It has become apparent that many of our senior citizens who are rooted in the community are finding that they have to go elsewhere to be able to afford to live. The redevelopment of the former Osgood School into affordable condominiums seemed a promising place to begin to address this situation. However the Fall 1998 town meeting voted to re-use that building as the beautiful new home of the Paul Pratt library.

Following that town meeting the Board of Cohasset Elder Affairs created a subcommittee to explore the issue of housing alternatives for Cohasset seniors. As explained below in more detail, community needs were examined, siting and zoning options were reviewed, and the present SHC was created to facilitate the process of creating senior housing. The present concept is the product of several years of work by many concerned citizens and town officials.

The SHC mounted a multi-pronged approach to the task facing them. Visits were made to complexes in all the surrounding towns, including Housing for the Elderly in Milton and the Glastonbury Abbey's project in Hingham. An accessory dwelling by-law was successfully added to our zoning. Further zoning relief to allow multi-family dwellings continues to be pursued.

However, the most difficult task was to identify a parcel of land suitable for some type of senior housing project. Inventories were developed, sites identified and the 10-acre parcel behind Stop & Shop was prioritized both because it is already owned by the Town and its proximity to shopping. A preliminary development feasibility study, including site assessment and concept plan, were prepared in April of 2002. The committee decided to focus on the concept showing two apartment buildings.

The Board's goal was to research and identify options that would allow Cohasset seniors to remain in the community.

Now, with a potential site in mind, the SHC is moving forward in its mission to develop housing for low- and moderate-income seniors who do not qualify to live in the subsidized housing at 60 Elm St. These are the seniors with limited resources and limited options. We recognize that as a group of volunteers, the development of a housing proposal is beyond our expertise. Professional assistance is needed with further pre-development study and preparation of a Request for Proposal (RFP). We continue to look to the Community Preservation Fund to assist in this effort. If further study determines that the site is suitable, the town will then seek proposals from potential developers. The SHC holds as its goal a project similar to the Glastonbury Abbey's work in Hingham in both levels of affordability and quality of work. Examples to the contrary have been purely hypothetical.

Only if the site passes scrutiny, and suitable development alternatives are proposed, will a comprehensive, complete plan be developed and then presented to the town for approval. This is the Town of Cohasset's project to benefit Cohasset citizens, and it will only go forward if the town agrees.

Background

The work of the present SHC is the product of much effort by many dedicated residents over the past four years. After the fall 1998 town meeting vote to use the old Osgood School for the library, the Board of Elder Affairs redoubled their efforts in seeking a workable housing proposal and established their own sub-committee on housing. That group's final housing report stated, "the sense of the board was that there exists a need for housing options in town for seniors who are house rich and cash poor, who are struggling with rising taxes and upkeep costs, perhaps are on fixed incomes, and would like to downsize but do not have affordable options in town and therefore are moving elsewhere and leaving this community." The Board's goal was to research and identify options that would allow Cohasset seniors to remain in the community. That committee looked at what other towns were doing; compared zoning by-laws gathered and compared housing surveys; sponsored a forum on housing issues at the senior center in September, 1999 and initiated a plan with the McCormick Institute at UMass to survey the housing needs of Cohasset seniors. Suggestions were made that the Selectmen consider a parcel at the Osgood school site or the town land known as the "gravel pits for senior housing. A final report and recommendations were presented to the Selectmen on Nov. 2, 1999.

Those recommendations included: finance the survey of housing needs by the McCormack Institute; review the variety of housing options that exist in other towns; revise the zoning by-laws to allow accessory dwellings, cluster housing, retirement villages; and appoint a Selectman's committee to continue working on senior housing issues (the SHC), include in their charge visiting successful senior housing projects in other communities, and determine potential sites for a senior housing projects in Cohasset.

The Center for Social Policy at the McCormack Institute then conducted the No Place Like Home: Cohasset Senior Housing Survey and presented the results in April of 2000. The overwhelming conclusion drawn from the Executive Summary was that senior housing was needed in the town. Further, seniors in all income brackets were concerned about affordable housing options that would allow them to remain in the community they called home. The recommendations focused on rental apartments and identified the fears of many seniors with limited incomes and resources that they would be forced to move. Most cited the pressure from escalating taxes and home maintenance costs.

The SHC believes it is on the right track to address these concerns. Taking the next steps to study the site suitability and formulate development plans is essential. We ask the town's support to help us continue with the process, with the hope that we can produce a final proposal that the town can enthusiastically endorse.

The spirit of Peter Rugg

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

While you're out trick or treating this week, kids, keep an eye out for a spirited bay horse pulling a carriage with a man and a little girl while storm clouds gather behind them.

That'll be Peter Rugg and his daughter, a spirit of Halloween in these parts, and if they stop and ask you the way to Boston, tell them, for you may bring them peace after, lo, these many years.

Peter Rugg was a familiar sight on the highways of New England in the early days of the 19th century, forever on the move, forever asking the way and the distance to Boston, yet never reaching it.

A bold and curious stranger from New York once halted him on the road near Hartford and attempted to question him.

"My name is Peter Rugg," he replied. "I have lost my way. I am wet and weary and will take it kindly of you to direct me to Boston. I live on Middle Street."

"When did you leave Boston?"

"I cannot tell precisely; it seems a considerable time."

"But how did you and your child become so wet? It has not rained here today."

"It has just rained a heavy shower up the river. But I shall not reach Boston tonight if I tarry. The clouds are gathering in the south, and we shall have a rainy night. Ah, that fatal oath!"

And he was gone.

That same year, Mrs. Betsy Croft answered a knock on the door of her home on Middle Street in Boston and found a stranger on her doorstep, inquiring for Mrs. Peter Rugg.

Mrs. Rugg died 20 years before, an old woman, the stranger was told, and he seemed surprised when Mrs. Croft could not direct him to King Street, for there was no King Street, and he left muttering, "No home tonight!"

James Felt, an old, old man who lived near Middle Street, recalled that when he was but a youth, a man named Peter Rugg had lived nearby and disappeared with his daughter, Jenny, about the time of the Revolution.

Another man remembered his grandfather telling him this story:

A half century before, there was a man named Peter Rugg who lived on Middle Street with his wife and daughter. He was a prosperous horse trader and respected citizen. His one fault was a violent temper.

One morning in late autumn, he hitched his carriage to his spirited bay horse and went to visit a friend in Concord. On the way back, the travelers were overtaken by a fierce storm.

They stopped briefly for a glass of hot, spiced rum at the home of another friend, one Tom Cutter, in Menotomy (now Arlington), and Cutter urged them to spend the night for the storm was increasing in its ferocity, and they were in an open carriage.

He must have argued too long, for Rugg angrily declined, saying, "Let the storm increase. I will see home tonight, in spite of the tempest, or may I never see home." He flicked his whip at his horse, and they were gone.

Neither Peter Rugg nor his daughter Jenny were seen alive again, but the man who collected tolls at the Charlestown Bridge has seen them several times, the horse and carriage speeding through without stopping to pay the toll.

The toll collector once tried to halt the carriage and wound up throwing a stool at the onrushing horse. It went right through and clanged against the rail on the other side of the bridge. The toll taker never spoke of it again.

So if you happen to run into Peter Rugg and Jenny while you're trick or treating, be nice to them and point the way to Boston. You might be the one who finally saves them after all these years.

CPC's role in Barnes purchase

COMMUNITY PRESERVATION

STUART IMVEY

The Community Preservation Committee, in partnership with the Cohasset Conservation Trust, a private citizens group called the "Friends of Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary," the Conservation Commission and other private and public organizations is attempting to finance the purchase of 32 acres of forested land that is adjacent to Wheelwright Park. The purchase price is $1 million, of which $600,000 has already been raised. We still need to raise $400,000 to buy the land. This money must be raised by the Nov. 18 Special Town Meeting.

We still need to raise $400,000 to buy the land. This money must be raised by the Nov. 18 Special Town Meeting.

The Community Preservation Committee does not have enough cash to pay the $400,000 shortfall. In an effort to act in a fiscally responsible manner, the committee has sought to partner with other funding sources including the Cohasset Conservation Trust, the Executive office of Environmental Affairs and other public and private groups. Fortunately, the Cohasset Conservation Trust, a private tax deductible nonprofit foundation has agreed to match dollar-for-dollar all private contributions that it receives for this purchase. These donations are crucial to the project's success.

The Community Preservation Committee has already paid for two appraisals (both of which support the $1 million purchase price) and the initial down payment. In addition, the committee coordinated the entire project, which included negotiating the sale with the Barnes family, obtaining the approval from the Board of Selectmen, clearing-up legal issues, and organizing the appraisals. The committee also assisted the Conservation Commission prepare a grant application to the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs.

As many townspeople are aware, Cohasset levies a 1.5 percent surcharge on real estate taxes in order to raise money for the community preservation fund. In addition, the state annually contributes money to Cohasset's community preservation fund. This year the state matched dollar-for-dollar all money collected by the town. The state contributed more than $215,000.

The money raised by the surcharge and received from the state may be spent exclusively on projects involving the acquisition of open space, low to moderate income housing and historical preservation. The money does not become part of the town's general fund. By law the money can only be spent on projects that are recommended to Town Meeting by the Community Preservation Committee.

Town Meeting must then approve the proposals.

The Community Preservation Committee is continually faced with funding requests that exceed its annual revenues. The committee cannot fund large projects without leveraging its limited revenues with the resources of other groups and individuals. The town is truly fortunate in this case to have received the $150,000 challenge from the Cohasset Conservation Trust; however, the Trust will donate this money only as a dollar-for-dollar match of private contributions.

Stuart Ivimey is chairman of the Community Preservation Committee.

Now is not the time to give up runway fight

LOGAN VIEW

ERIC ODDLEIFSON

Despite a temporary legal delay in Hull's suit over the runway, we are beginning to see the benefits of vigorously pursuing our case through the courts — an action supported by our congressman, Bill Delahunt. For the first time, our proposals to move traffic over the ocean, and off the South Shore, are being given serious attention by the FAA. Our suggested flight path modifications harm no community, are supported by the Citizens Advisory Committee to Massport which represents 27 cities and towns in the greater Boston area, and are of great benefit to us. Without the combination of legal action and a proactive stance on recommending new approach and departures tracks we would not be receiving the attention from the FAA that we are today.

A study, commissioned by the South Shore Jet Pollution Council, of air traffic between July 4 and Sept. 5, supports our nuisance claim against Massport. It indicates the following:

- Despite having less than 10 percent of the land mass of the greater Boston area, 60 percent of Logan's traffic passes over the South Shore.
- Planes departing Boston from Runway 22 were in violation of a 1980 ruling by the FAA requiring them to fly at least one mile north of the Hull peninsula, 20 percent of the time, passing either directly over Hull, or within one mile of its shoreline. We recorded over 800 violations during the two month period.
- Turning to head south, and with engines at full throttle, planes achieved the required height of 6,000 feet most of the time — indicating that the height requirement itself is faulty. Planes which depart Los Angeles to the west over water have a 10,000 foot requirement as they turn back east over land.
- Periodically the South Shore is subject to virtually all of Logan's landing traffic — over 600 flights per day, and night, on Runway 33L. Since an aircraft noise event lasts 45 seconds, we are subject to a continuous blanket of noise during these times. This becomes particularly onerous when planes are operating under visual flight rules (which is 80 percent of the time), as they are allowed to fly under the glide slope, passing over Cohasset at between 1,500 and 2,000 feet
- The noise metric adopted by Massport (a plane's noise becomes "significant" only when it is so loud that human habitation is no longer recommended!), motivates the FAA to direct planes over the South Shore during the nighttime hours of 10p.m. to 7 a.m. — the very time that the difference between ambient, or background noise (crickets chirping for example) and the thunder of the jets passing overhead, is the greatest.

These data continue to support our contention that the construction of Runway 14/32 will be an environmental catastrophe for the South Shore, as heavy jet arrivals on 33L will triple in number (Massport's own data, not ours). We can expect constant noise from landing traffic alone 50 percent of the time. It is the FAA's, and Massport's intention, fully revealed in the data, to make the South Shore the aviation gateway to New England.

Our case is a strong one. In support of it we now have hundreds of pages of testimony from the best experts in the country, which we are summarizing and will make available to both the press and residents of the South Shore. Judge Hely admitted in his decision that Hull has presented substantial summary judgement evidence of damages to the town. His problem was simply procedural (the apparent lack of a legal basis for imposing public nuisance liability upon a state government authority) and not with the facts.

Additionally, Massport's own noise consultant admitted in his deposition that the facts as presented are false and misleading.

Finally, our own experts, in their testimony, indicate the runway does not produce the delay improvement benefits that Massport claims. The facts are clearly on our side. I urge the three towns to appeal the case to a higher court, an option which is available to them. The work has been done, so the cost is minimal. The potential benefits in getting our case before the public are substantial. We need not prove fraud, but only that Massport knowingly concealed a material fact or knowingly submitted false information. Massport's Final Environmental Impact Statement was clearly, and knowingly, intended to mislead us. Its entire case was built on modeling assumptions, rather than clear, and available, factual data. The truth will emerge, one way or another.

Mr. Oddleifson is a member of the South Shore Jet Pollution Council, established in 1999 by the towns of Hull, Hingham and Cohasset as an aviation noise advisory group. He is a Partner in Renewable Resources, LLC, engaged in sustainable forestry investment management, both in the US and internationally.

Supports MCAS for graduation requirement

TO THE EDITOR:

While it still needs some fine-tuning, the MCAS program is certainly a step in the right direction of higher expectations and accountability, and should not be abandoned. I noticed recently a report that 88 percent of the senior class at Plymouth High School had passed the test and therefore, became eligible for their diplomas. This seems to me a pretty good record if a diploma is to have meaning.

There should not be a guarantee that everyone completing high school is entitled to a diploma. The 12 percent may be disappointed but they will be offered further training or other form of recognition that should not be demeaning.

Hedlund, LeClair on clean elections, budget

Is the Clean Elections Law a wasteful use of limited public funds or a way to reduce special interest money in campaigns and increase competition for incumbent legislators? How will you vote on Ballot Question 3?

Bob Hedlund

Ted LeClair

Ted LeClair

As someone who has supported the Clean Elections Law, I see it as a well-intentioned initiative, but with some flaws. I want to encourage individual participation while limit special interest influence in the political process. The choice to participate should be voluntary. I think the Clean Elections Law is primarily flawed in that it further burdens the taxpayer by using valuable public funds to pay for political campaigns. That's wrong. The political playing field should not be balanced on the backs of the taxpayers, and in these tough economic times, we certainly should not be using very valuable taxpayer dollars for election expenses, when we are already making cuts to valuable human services and education. Clean Elections should limit special interest contributions and encourage voluntary individual contributions. I will vote NO on Question 3. Nevertheless, while I am opposed to taxpayer funding of elections, I still strongly believe that the voters created the Clean Elections law, it is the law, and the legislature should follow that law until the voters decide to repeal it.

Bob Hedlund

I support the integrity of the initiative petition process and respect the will of the voters who approved the clean elections law. I have consistently voted to implement clean elections and voted against the legislative leadership's attempts to gut the law.

The influence of lobbyists and special interests in campaign financing is real, and everyone agrees it has a substantial impact on politics in Massachusetts. Today most would-be candidates, average people motivated by a genuine desire to enter public service, cannot even seriously contemplate mounting a credible race unless they are independently wealthy given the modern-day cost of campaigning. Public service should not be an exclusive club for the wealthy and politically connected, but continue to be an accessible goal available to every citizen, as it was meant to be. I believe the law should have been implemented in a timely fashion and given the chance to work. I and other candidates for the legislature fully intended to run as clean elections candidates. I went through all of the necessary procedures, sadly the Democratic leadership thumbed their noses at the voters and those of us who worked to implement clean elections.

The state budget was about $10 billion in 1990. And today, with some $23 billion, the legislature is unable to make ends meet. Does state government have a spending problem or a revenue problem?

Ted LeClair

The truth is the state has spending problem, a revenue problem and a problem with dealing with the problem. Spending is a problem because certain programs like Medicaid, the senior pharmacy program and the state health insurance program are growing uncontrollably at double digit rates. More importantly, the spending problem involves the waste and patronage on Beacon Hill. The legislature will have to make real cuts to legislative perks, pensions, benefits, and agency waste. Each and every agency must start with a zero dollar budget. Every single dollar budgeted will have to be justified or lost. Before the legislature asks the taxpayer for a single additional penny they must seriously address the spending problem. The taxpayer is entitled to see results with real cuts before they are asked for any more of their hard earned money. The legislature must grow up and face their responsibility to make accurate and conservative revenue projections early in the budget process. The next session must come to agreement on revenue projections with the governor no later than March 15. Furthermore, projections must be realistic, if there is a revenue "surprise" it better be that revenues are better than expected. Finally, the process must be open, each legislator must have access to the complete financial statements, debate must be open in open session, and a realistic budget must be submitted on time. The voter is entitled to results from our legislature and that means a realistic budget done on time.

Bob Hedlund

We have both a spending problem and a revenue problem. Unfortunately the spending problem is not a new development. Over the past decade state government has grown at an alarming rate, and instead of belt tightening, the Legislature has determined that the best way out of a temporary economic downturn is to spend down all our reserves and hike taxes.

These tax hikes completely undermine the will of the voters by including a freeze of the income tax rollback and an elimination of the deduction for the initiate petition process in 2000.

Unlike my opponent who supports the record $1.2 billion tax hike, I could not in good conscience support this disregard for the taxpayers when tremendous waste in state government exists. Democratic Leadership has demonstrated misplaced priorities. It is unconscionable that we have duplicative state agencies like the MDC and DEM or MA Hwy and MA Turnpike yet human service workers are either cut or fail to get living wages.

The Democratic Leadership cuts the School Building Program $20 million, and yet we continue to subsidize The Hynes Convention Center $20 million per year, even as we commit $1 billion to build a new convention center in So. Boston.

As taxpayers, we are forced to rein in our expenditures when our income decreases; however, the legislature has decided to force us to bear the burden for years of overspending and waste-filled budgets. I will continue to oppose tax increases until the Legislature gets serious about targeting and eliminating waste first.

Bradley outspends Palmer 3-1 in month before Nov. 5

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Incumbent Democrat Garrett Bradley outspent Republican challenger Nathaniel Palmer in the campaign's final month-and-a-half, by a 3-to-1 ratio, in the race to represent the Third Plymouth District.

According to the latest report released Monday, Bradley outspent Palmer $17,014.46 to $4,929.79 from Sept. 1 to Oct. 18. Previously, Bradley held a 2-to-1 ration in terms of money spent from Jan. 1 to Aug. 30.

Bradley, well known for his ability to fundraise, was again on top of his game for this, his third election (Bradley lost to Mary Jeanette Murray in 1998, before winning in 2000). During the election (current to Oct. 18) Bradley spent $37,533.51 more than Palmer, who spent only $29,607.19 on his entire campaign.

Bradley is owner of the most expensive state representative campaign in Massachusetts political history (more than $126,000 in 2000), and is unapologetic for his ability to raise money.

"It is critical for a candidate to reach as many voters as possible so that on Election Day the voters are able to make an informed decision as to who is the best candidate," said Bradley when the first financial reports were released. "I was in the unique position two years ago, in that I had a strong challenge in the primary and in the general election, which in effect means that I had two elections in one year. If you break it down, it averages $55-60,000 per election." Bradley called that figure "average" for a state representative campaign.

Palmer, who raised approximately $15,000 for his campaign by his own estimate (not in including more than $16,000 of Palmer's own funds), sees the fundraising in a different light.

"Mr. Bradley has taken what I would characterize as an absurd amount of special interest money," said Palmer. "Where I have taken no special interest money, Bradley has taken about 70 percent of his money from outside the district, over 20 percent alone from trial lawyers and lobbyists. This does not serve the district."

McDermott campaign becomes family affair

The McDermott Campaign welcomed its newest supporter on Thursday, Oct. 24 at 11:45 a.m.. Alana Wilson McDermott was born 6 lbs. 10 oz. and 19 inches to proud new parents Patrick McDermott and Tracy Wilson.

McDermott has been campaigning for the past year for Norfolk County Register of Probate culminating in his Democratic Primary victory in September. Tracy McDermott recently left her law practice in Plymouth to await Alana's arrival.

"There are those in the political circles who believe we planned it this way," joked McDermott. "With her due date scheduled for Oct. 31, there was a good chance Alana could have been born on Election Day, Nov. 5."

McDermott reports that the birth of Alana created quite a hectic schedule to maintain between spending time at the hospital with mother and daughter and keeping up with the campaign. On Alana's birthday, and of course with his wife's blessing, McDermott "shot out" to Canton for a previously scheduled fundraiser at Nick's Restaurant.

"How many campaign events do you get to attend that have an 'It's a Girl' banner hung across the podium," joked Charlie Wilson, Tracy McDermott's father who has been assisting in his son-in-law's campaign. McDermott also had the opportunity to formally announce his daughter's birth at the Quincy Democratic City Committee breakfast on Sunday morning.

Hedlund lobbies for Barnes property

The Cohasset Community Preservation Committee's growing commitment to purchasing the 32-acre Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary, thereby saving it and the Wheelwright Park area from being destroyed by development, has received a major boost on Beacon Hill from longtime open space advocate Senator Bob Hedlund.

The Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary is vital to a much larger forest whose habitat thrives from Little harbor to the Golf Course and from Sohier Street to the ocean. The Sanctuary is cradled on two sides by Wheelwright Park, and the Arthur Lehr Boy Scout Retreat. They all abut the White-Holly Hill Farm and forest.

What most visitors haven't realized is that 32 acres of this deep forest park area are private property. The property line cleaves the skating pond in half. They will be shocked if it is developed.

Sen. Hedlund has been aggressively lobbing the governor, and other key officials to stress the importance of saving the Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary and the Wheelwright Park area from potential ruin.

"He has been there when we need him through this whole long ordeal," said Stuart Ivimey, Chairman of the Community Preservation Committee.

"I have had my eye on the Barnes property for a long while," Hedlund said. "It's one of the reasons I worked so hard with the Cohasset Selectmen and town manager to insure that the railroad mitigation settlement included enough money to help make this kind of open space purchase possible."

Sunrise Assisted Living offers residents and families round-the-clock care by dedicated staff in a caring, inviting environment.

All Assisted Living Is Not Created Equal

At Sunrise Assisted Living, our approach to senior care is different—and better. It's an unmatched living environment beautiful beyond compare. It's residents chatting with friends in the parlor with music playing in the background. It's joining a group outing or taking a quiet stroll on the walking paths on our grounds. More importantly, it's a caring place where help is always at hand. Here, residents enjoy supportive health care for the challenges of advanced age—and the promise of new friendships, too. It's a positive alternative to an institutional setting.

Library director to retire early

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Now three months and two additional rounds removed from the Board of Selectmen's decision to opt into the state's early retirement plan, it appears that the issue is finally resolved.

At the its meeting two weeks ago, the Board of Selectmen approved the inclusion of Library Director Janet Husband into the plan, after learning she wished to participate.

"The reason that this came up now is that she was in the hospital and was unaware that we were taking it up," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "So I think that it is only fair that the board address that, and they did."

The deadline for inclusion in the plan is Nov. 1, which makes it unlikely that there will be any more additions.

The move was supported by the library trustees and will not affect this year's operating budget. Husband will stay on in an advisory capacity to oversee the move to the new library at the former Osgood School. The money that will be saved when Husband moves from her current salaried position, to the advisory position will fund the additional cost of her retirement. Husband was scheduled to retire in six months.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said that a search for a replacement will be underway soon.

This is the second time the board has amended its decision to include employees who wanted to participate in the plan.

"It's not going to have a significant impact, she is going to stay on through the transition and the library trustees are in favor of it."

— Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan

The law, known officially as Chapter 116, is intended to be a cost-saving measure for cash-strapped towns, so an employee would take an early retirement and the position would not be filled.

But Cohasset took s slightly different approach to the legislation. Initially, the town only included two Group 4 positions in the program, because both were firefighters and would be replaced by paramedics which would allow the town to raise the ambulance rates. However, Elizabeth Soule, sister of custodian Kevin Soule, complained that the decision to exclude Group 1 employees was unfair. The town has no Group 2 or 3 employees. After Soule came forward, Department of Public Works staffer Kenneth Sargent also asked to be included.

The selectmen initially voted for the two firefighters because of the cost benefit and decided not to include Soule. who falls under the jurisdiction of the school department, under the recommendation of the school superintendent.

After objections by Soule's sister, Elizabeth, the school committee changed their decision and asked the Board of Selectmen to reconsider.

Chairman Michael Sullivan was glad to help an employee retire early.

"I think if we can enhance someone's retirement package and allow them to retire a little bit sooner, and there is no cost to the town, it is great," said Sullivan. "It's not going to have a significant impact, she is going to stay on through the transition and the library trustees are in favor of it."

Husband, who lives in Braintree, was hired in June 1998 to replace Richard Hayes, who retired after 29 years as director of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Husband came to Cohasset after a 13-year tenure as the library director in Rockland. Initially 14 candidates applied for the position but the library trustees reopened their search after the three finalists withdrew from consideration for different reasons, including not wishing to relocate. Six new candidates applied during the second round, and the trustees recommended Husband, who was then hired by Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Contacted on Wednesday, McMorris agreed that Haddad had conducted the job search properly, but that he should have been open to slowing down at the request of the board.

"One of the people, who was new to the board, wanted to talk about some of her issues," said McMorris. "I tough that was a reasonable request, granted the request should have been made to him directly, not in the public forum, but it is still appropriate to deal with that aspect."

Sullivan, who was not present at the meeting, is concerned with the way the last few selectmen meetings have gone.

"It's getting to me," said Sullivan. "It wears on you. You are trying to do a good job and make decisions in the best interest of the town, but unfortunately, some people like to go after people, and that is not really productive."

Sullivan feels the best way to combat the problems would be for all sides to remain respectful.

"I think people are always going to express their opinions," said Sullivan. "But I think it is important that they have respect for the people that are involved. It is a public meeting and people do have a right to speak and should have a right to speak, but they should respect the people that they are speaking to or speaking about."

Selectman Tom Callahan was incensed by the latest public display.

"It is disgusting," said Callahan. "This is now becoming standard operating procedure, that if you don't like what is happening, don't talk to anybody about it to their face or try to work things out like adults, but rather to come and just attack," Callahan said he was confused about what exactly the Board of Assessors were seeking.

"I have no idea what their issues are," said Callahan. "I have no idea what the problems are in that department and in part it sounds to me that this is, in part, a failure to accept the way the Town Manager Act has changed our town."

Skippers primed for tourney run

Scituate boys give Cohasset booters all they can handle

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

One team was playing for pride, the other for playoff positioning. It turns out both can be pretty powerful motivators.

No one would have been critical if the Scituate boys soccer team had caved-in emotionally after falling behind powerhouse host Cohasset just two minutes in to Sunday afternoon's non-league tilt, a nifty solo effort by Chris Clark making it 1-0 before most folks had even found their seats.

Certainly, no one would have faulted the Sailors for not matching the intensity level of the Skippers (9-4-5), who were battling for each and every point down the stretch with a home game in the state tourney hanging in the balance. After all, this was a non-league game for Scituate, and their tourney dreams were long ago quashed.

However, the Scituate players (1-12-5), fresh off their first win of the season on Thursday over Abington, gave a noteworthy accounting of themselves, turning the Sunday afternoon tilt into an enjoyable hard-fought, back-and-forth soccer game.

Cohasset hung on to win the game going away, 3-1, thanks to a couple of late second half goals from Dave Santiago, but not before garnering some respect from the Cohasset players and coaches.

"Scituate played a more aggressive style than I'd heard they did," said Cohasset coach Dave Nigro. "They attacked us, and had a few chances in our end. It was a good game, and I was happy to come away with the win."

Scituate coach Jim Willis was also, not surprisingly, pleased with the level of play from his troops. His only complaint after the game is the same one he's been offering all season.

"We're always just one pass away from creating a real good scoring chance," said Willis, whose team scored just nine goals in 18 games this season. "Our inability to finish has killed us all season. Our defense has played well, but every time we make a mistake it just seems to wind up killing us."

With this latter remark, the fifth year Scituate coach was clearly thinking of Cohasset's second goal with just over 19 minutes left in the game. What appeared a harmless dump-in toward the middle of the goal box from Cohasset captain Evan Pestone became anything but when Scituate defenders Wil Falaro and Andrew Liedtka (in his first game back from injury) collided with one another while trying to play the ball in the air. This allowed Santiago to run on to the ball 30 yards out with only Scituate keeper Roman Grivalja between him and the twine.

Grivalja did what he could, charging out hard on Santiago while he tried to settle the bouncing ball, but the gifted Cohasset goal scorer (a team

Cohasset and Scituate lady booters prep fortourney with hardfought finale

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset and Scituate girls soccer teams may not have sterling records that would land them anywhere close to a top five seed in the upcoming State tournament, yet the coaches of both teams could breathe a sigh of relief after the match-up on Sunday. They're in.

Visiting Scituate downed the fellow tourney-bound Lady Skippers on Sunday evening, 1-0, on a slippery and wet field after the rain had postponed the game from Saturday. The win came as a tremendous load off the back of Scituate coach Joseph Strazdes, whose team had lost five straight before this one.

The win bumped Scituate's record to 9-8, enough to clinch a spot in the post season for the second consecutive year.

"We got contributions from everyone," noted the veteran Strazdes. "It was really a team effort."

Opposing coach Deb Beal, who played under Strazdes as a basketball and soccer player at Scituate High, seemed just as relieved as her counterpart. After four straight years with fewer than five victories, the Lady Skippers have finally made the tournament, coming in with a record of 10-7-1.

Battle of unbeatens with Canton precedes run at SSL mettle for Skippers

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Calling all fans!

The Skippers close out their non-league schedule tomorrow night at Alumni Field versus the Canton Bulldogs. This will be a battle of undefeated teams, both schools stand at 6-0.

Canton is a Div. 3 school, a former member of the Hockomock League.

After going 1-19 over the last two years, Canton is now playing an independent schedule. The Bulldogs have scored a total of 79 points in six games, while beating the likes of Norton, Randolph, North Reading, Weston and Sharon.

Cohasset's offense has racked up 124 points in six games, while the defense has yielded a total of 30 points.

The Skippers are in a three team battle for the South Shore League championship — and the right to represent the league in the Div. 5 Super Bowl tournament — with Abington and Norwell. All three teams are undefeated in league play. Abington travels to Norwell this weekend, the winner will take over first place. The following week the Skippers visit Abington, and then host Norwell on Nov. 15.

So, pull out those longjohns and support your Skippers tomorrow night as they continue their quest to repeat as South Shore League Champs.

Cohasset field hockey team goes out fighting versus powerhouse SL

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Two teams locked horns last week to close out the field hockey season on Thursday and Friday, one a Div. 1 team headed for a top 10 seed in the post season, the other a Div. 2 squad with double-digit losses.

Sounds like a slaughter, doesn't it? One would think.

The tenacious Cohasset Skippers, taking on the juggernaut Silver Lake team for a back-to-back double-header, was playing only for pride, but impressed their opponents by dropping only 1-0 decisions in both games.

"We'll take the one-nothing," noted 11th year Silver Lake coach Marlene Lopes. "Our best 11 goals and five assists this season despite missing a few games) deked right and then finished left-footed across his body, slipping it to the left of Grivalja and inside the right post to make it a 2-0 game.

Cohasset returned the favor with a defensive breakdown of its own four minutes later, and Scituate tri-captain Chet Miller made them pay to make it a 2-1 game with 15 minutes remaining.

Again, another seemingly innocuous dump-in became an adventure when a Cohasset defender did not hear his hard-charging keeper, Curt Kahn, yell him off. The ball got headed past Kahn away from the goal toward the back line to the right of the net, but Miller won the race to the ball, sliding into the goal mouth just ahead of Cohasset sweeper JT Oronte to knock it home.

Scituate turned up the pressure over the next several minutes, Miller, his fellow captain Ryan Cahill and Kyle Simpson leading rushes in to Cohasset's end. However, it was the counterattacking Skippers who managed to create the best opportunities over this stretch.

Grivalja twice took hard shots out of the air off the foot of Clark in the waning moments and Pestone had a shot sail just wide.

Santiago finally put the game away in the 77th minute with a great solo effort. Collecting a cross near the top of the goal box with a man on his back, Santiago tapped the ball to his left and then spun quickly to drill a low one-timer with his right just inside the left post past the helpless Grivalja.

Boys soccer notes

The Cohasset boys wrapped up the regular season on Tuesday with a far from surprising 6-1 whitewashing of Chatham, the same score the Skippers posted in their early season defeat of the struggling Cape team.

Santiago netted a pair of goals to improve his team best tally total to 13. Clark brought his own goal total to 11, joining Jon Littauer, Aidan Buick and Curt Kahn with solo tallies.

The goal for Kahn, a senior who has played virtually every minute this season in goal after performing as a key member of the attack the two previous years, was his first of the season. Littauer, a sophomore, played well in net, according to coach Nigro, when Kahn was moved in to the field.

- Between the Scituate and Chatham wins, the boys played in yet another non-league tilt, this one a 3-1 loss to Div. 2 powerhouse Hingham

The visiting Harbormen dominated the first half, scoring the only two goals before the break.

A few adjustments during the break, though, helped the Skippers make a game of it in the second half and even carry play for substantial stretches. Chris Clark scored his 10th goal of the season early in the half on a feed from Pestone to make it a one-goal game, and the Skippers continued to pepper the Hingham net over the balance of the half.

With the Cohasset defenders pinching up for an all-out assault on Hingham's end in the final minutes, the Harbormen were able to trigger a counterattack and put the game out of reach with their third goal with under a minute remaining.

"I was pleased with the way we played, especially in the second half," noted Nigro. "Hingham's a real strong team that should do well in their (Div. 2) tourney. This was a good tune up for the tourney."

- Seedings and pairings for the state tourney were supposed to come out yesterday, with announcements expected in today's daily papers.

With their second place finish in the South Shore League (6-2-4) and overall record of 9-4-5, the Skippers were hoping for a home game in the first round of the Div. 3 South Sectionals for the second year in a row.

"We've played a tough schedule and done pretty well in a tough league, so I think we should get some consideration," said coach Nigro. "A home game would be nice. It's always a great way to start the post-season."

- The Skippers had four players named to the South Shore League all-star team this week: senior captain Evan Pestone and juniors Chris Clark, Coner Buick and Craig Laugelle.

The annual all-star game against the Patriot League all-stars was scheduled to be played last night at Norwell High.

Clark was also one of five SSL players selected to play in the Eastern Mass. All-Star game after Thanksgiving at Silver Lake High School.

MaxLax Report

Game of the Week: U12 Hawks soar over Cannons, 10-9

As all of the players have started to get "playoff fever" in anticipation of next week's championship showdowns, this contest kept with MaxLax tradition (every week with an OT thriller) and gave us a glimpse of what's to come.

The Hawks opened the action first with two quick strikes from Geoffrey Evans with an assist from Enrico Terucci (his first points of the season), and then a minute later the lights flashed again on a nice slide move by Andrew Bell.

Two of the league's leading scorers then teamed up to get the Cannons on the board with a goal from Dean Driscoll on an assist from Will Wise. After some physical play that cost both sides some time in the penalty box, the Hawks took advantage of their "man-up" advantages with scores from Justin Yeager and Will Lynner. Will's brother, Andersen Lynner, then put up a tally of his own a few minutes later that gave the Hawks a 5-1 lead.

However, this sense of impending victory was short-lived as the Cannons answered with a 3-goal rally to close out the half (again from man-up penalty situations) on a goal by Sean MacCarthy and two from Jack Murphy to bring the score to within one goal.

The Cannons evened the game with a scoop and shoot goal from Derek Cyr (also his first goal of the season) and then they went ahead on a fast break score by Will Wise who found the back of the net with a great low fake.

With another penalty against the Cannons, Olly Forrer found the goal wide open for an easy Hawk tally which was followed by a fan rousing end-to-end rush from Eamon Davis that put the Hawks back up by one.

Max Shipp, one of the Cannons veterans, put their opponent on notice that they would not go down easily when he combined a solo tally with a great no-look pass to Murphy who puffed the back of the net to earn his "hat trick" for the day. With time running down and penalties continuing to provide prime scoring opportunities for both sides, the defense held the offense at bay refusing to give up anymore ground.

Davis broke the drought and tied it up again when he intercepted a clearing pass at mid-field and fired it right back for a "low skidder" that caught the goalie off balance. Typical of a battle of the titans, Shipp quickly put the Cannons back on top when he took the ball off of the next face-off and managed to evade several defenders before picking the upper corner for what appeared to be the game winner.

However, this day was for Davis as he took a page out of Shipp's playbook and returned the favor with a series of dodges that had the fans cheering as the he sent the game into OT with his last second score.

With the adrenaline pumping on both sides, the first minute of OT was as physical and aggressive as we've seen — with more than a few "pad-to-pad" sounds coming from the field. The Hawks thought they had it won on a back door shot, but it found the side of the net (rather than the inside) and on the Cannons next clear, the goalie found Davis free at mid-field and he took it into the upper right hand upper corner with a rocket (from 20 feet) for the game winner. Expect more of the same next week . . .

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse adopts an Aussie sister

Finally, a place for kids to send their old uniforms

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse has adopted the East Fremantle Lacrosse Club in Australia as a sister program, and plans to begin sharing warm greetings and not-too-old equipment with the Aussies by the time the spring season begins next year.

The long-term goal of the sister program is to support lacrosse internationally, foster goodwill, help children learn about other cultures, create some pen-pal relationships and, perhaps, foster an international player exchange or tour at some time in the future.

East Fremantle is located about as far from Cohasset as possible, literally on the other side of the earth in Western Australia. It borders Perth, which is the most isolated city on the planet, located more than 2,000 miles from any other large population center.

The relationship between Cohasset and "East Freo" began last summer, when Cohasset Youth Lacrosse coordinator Chuck Jaffe traveled to Perth to participate in the World Games of Lacrosse.

While in Australia, Jaffe learned that Aussie programs often have a hard time getting the kind of high-quality gear that Cohasset youth players take for granted. In preparation for the World Games, Jaffe's team — Brine/Atlantic Sportswear USA — changed its colors from green-and-gold to red, white and blue; upon its return, the Brine/Atlantic players donated their green gear to the Wembley Lacrosse Club, which has identical colors.

"While that was being arranged," Jaffe says, "we learned that most Aussie programs don't have scrimmage vests and some other things that we take for granted. That's when we heard that East Freo's colors matched our scheme and knew we might be able to do something."

Jaffe contacted Tim Kennedy of the East Fremantle Club, and the idea of sister clubs was hatched.

The first real action — besides a link on their web sites ? involves taking up a collection of uniforms. Each year, Cohasset youth players get completely new two-sided jerseys. Many players also get Cohasset jerseys in summer camp.

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse is going to collect old jerseys to send to East Freo. "Every year, parents complain about all the jerseys and shorts they have piled up around the house," says Jaffe. "Now they have something cool to do with the extras."

"We've never quite had the budget for practice jerseys," Kennedy says, "so this will help our program, and our players will enjoy getting to wear something from a good program in America."

Further, Jaffe notes that any Cohasset player giving up an old jersey can write a note, affix the letter to the shirt and the East Fremantle club will arrange for one of its players of a similar age to receive the donation and write back.

Jaffe is encouraging players to say a bit about themselves, their lacrosse experience, how they've done wearing the jersey they're now donating, how their team has performed, as well as contact information, e-mail addresses and more.

"Our kids should think of this as extra credit work in lacrosse," says Jaffe. "It's like homework, in that the more effort they put in and the more they share, the better the relationship, the more likely that it will lead to cultural exchanges in the future. And you'd be hard-pressed to find a nicer place to visit — or nicer people to visit with — than the ones you will meet in Western Australia.

"If all this leads to is some smiles and emptier closets, that's good enough for me," says Jaffe. "But if it leads to a tour, a visit, a long-term friendship, hosting visiting players or, maybe, one of our players taking a tour of Australia as a paid coach and player when they graduate college, we'd have really created something outstanding."

To kick-start the program, Cohasset will be collecting jerseys, shorts and any other extra gear throughout the fall and early winter. Uniforms — shorts and jerseys — should be limited to Cohasset clothing, not gear accumulated from summer camps and other programs. Parents and players who want to clean their closets and contribute to the cause can drop their contributions in the mail to Cohasset Youth Lacrosse, Box 70, Cohasset, MA 02025-0070.

Players wishing to write a letter to an Aussie player should put the letter in an envelope, affixed to the jersey by safety pin. The program is accepting boys and girls uniforms, and the pen-pal program includes children from youth ages up through high school.

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse will also collect gear at its registration day — scheduled for the first Saturday in January — and will send its first box of goodies to Australia shortly thereafter.

A second donation will be made at the end of the season, when all of the gear Cohasset coaches find on their sidelines through the season gets shipped to Australia.

Says Jaffe: "The punishment for losing your gear and not coming to get it back this year won't just be the usual running, it will be having your forgotten equipment shipped to the ends of the Earth to someone who will take better care of it."

For more details on making an equipment donation, contact Jaffe at 781-383-9858. For a link to the East Fremantle Lacrosse Club web site, go to www.cohassetlacrosse.com.

girls didn't give an inch. They did what they had to do."

The Lady Lakers, now with a 13-2-3 record, will head to playoffs peaking at exactly the right time. On Monday, Silver Lake was given the number seven seed in the upcoming Div. 1 tournament, and they will host Dartmouth (10th seed, 12-4-2) in round one tomorrow (2:30 p.m. start). They finished second in the Old Colony League behind Falmouth this year, as they qualified for post season play for the first time in four years.

If the Lady Lakers get by round 1, they'll likely have to face second seeded Norwood (14-1-2), the Bay State League champs, who tomorrow will face the winner of Tuesday's preliminary round game between Apponequet (8-6-3) and Wellesley (6-6-6)

"Now, everyone is equal," stated Lopes of any team's chances in the playoffs. "The team that wants it the most will come away with it. That's the beauty of high school athletics."

Since sophomore Courtney Struble took over the goalkeeping position for Silver Lake, she has recorded six shutouts in as many career starts. An exemplary athlete, Struble had played midfield and defense, but transitioned beautifully into her new role.

Like Struble, many of the Lakers possess the same type of versatility of their current goalie, as they brought a willingness and ability to play multiple positions. Lopes attributed some of her team's success to that type of players, particularly noting senior co-captains Renee Schneider and Krysten Conboy.

"Those two have been instrumental in leading the team on and off the field," she noted. "It's a mentality thing they have. They will do anything for the team. They understand what it takes."

Sophomore Courtney Smith, a second year varsity scorer, provided the differencemaker in both contests, on the same play. Coming in from the weak side, Smith was able to sneak a shot past Lady Skipper goalie, senior Sera Genovese.

Genovese had a terrific couple of days, thwarting relentless Laker shots, recording 43 saves in 45 chances.

Although Cohasset's field hockey is done for 2002, veteran coach Deb Bostwick seemed very pleased with the effort put on by her squad. If nothing else, the Lady Skippers proved that they could play competitively with Div. 1 and 2 powerhouses, dropping close one-goal decisions to Silver Lake, Hingham, East Bridgewater and Hanover.

"If we had played like this all year, we would be in tournament," said the coach. "My heart goes out to the seniors. I really wanted this to be the year that they shined. But we made the best of the end of the year."

Football fever...catch it

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

Whether your first sporting love is baseball, hockey, basketball, soccer, lacrosse, field hockey or whatever, any true sports fan must admit there is nothing that truly compares with a "big" football game.

Football has something for every kind of sports fan the way the sport naturally showcases brute strength, sheer athleticism and immeasurable desire all in one package. Plus, there is just something riveting about watching a week's worth of tireless planning, prepping and honing all come together in a three-hour pressure cooker.

The powers that be in the NFL finally wised up and started marketing the game around these undeniable attributes approximately a decade ago, and just look at the result: the MLB, NBA and NHL are now barely visible in the NFL's rearview mirror in terms of TV ratings and market clout.

Much of what is great about the NFL game can also be observed locally at the high school level. Each and every game is an event regardless of whether it features two unbeaten teams going head-to-head or a couple of 1-5 teams battling for pride and a little respectability.

Still, we in Marinerland feel fortunate we've got more of the former than the latter in our subscription area. For example:

- The battle for supremacy in the South Shore League has come down to three Marinerland team: Norwell, Cohasset and Abington. All unbeaten in league play, but all will see the other two over the next three weeks, beginning with Norwell's hosting of Abington Friday night (7 p.m. kickoff).

Both teams are currently 3-0 in league play and coming off of lopsided defeats of the SSL's pre-season favored Hull. Abington blew the Pirates out of the water, 34-0, this past weekend, a week after Norwell toppled them, 10-0, in a game that was not as close as it sounds. This week, Norwell trashed Carver's homecoming with a 20-0 whitewashing, another game not as close as the score might indicate (the yardage tote, 367-102, was a more accurate summation).

Both teams feature punishing ground attacks. Norwell boasts the league's top ground gainer in 6-foot-1, 210-pound Andrew Farinick (1,100 yards through seven games). As his size suggests, Farinick does the bulk of his damage between the tackle, one of whom is the league's most dominant lineman – 6-foot-3, 270-pound lineman John Chappell. Abington features a multi-back attack with Adam Bowser (108 yards versus Hull) generally the number one option.

If you love high school football, Norwell High is the place for you this Friday night (7 p.m. kickoff).

And the following week it's Abington High, as the Green Wave host Cohasset (2-0 in league).

Cohasset tied Abington for the SSL championship a year ago, but won it by virtue of their tiebreaker, an instant classic come-from-behind 26-23 win in their head-to-head meeting.

Cohasset, the SSL's smallest school by far with just over 300 students, is the dark horse in the mix, having been hit hard by graduation and injury. The loss of 1,400 yard halfback Jason Brown to the former and returning league all-star wideout Chris Bilodeau to the latter have been particularly tough. However, bruising tailback Braun Goodson (13 TDs) has stepped right into Brown's shoes, and better than expected line play has helped keep the Skippers unbeaten to this point.

Cohasset, the SSL's smallest school by far with just over 300 students, is the dark horse in the mix, having been hit hard by graduation and injury.

In the Patriot League, Hanover, in its first year under coaching legend Paul Costello, has opened a few eyes by staying alive in their league race to this point. The Indians surprised Scituate two weeks ago and also have wins over PL rivals Middleboro and Hingham. Their lone loss in league play came to East Bridgewater. A big test with Rockland awaits on Nov. 8, but if the Indians can pull that one out, they'll travel to Duxbury (unbeaten, but not invulnerable, as Rockland proved) the following week with a chance at the league title. Not bad considering this was tabbed a rebuilding season by most South Shore football pundits.

The Indians feature a solid ground attack, a good athlete at quarterback in Adam Pardo and a great defensive front anchored by Dan Cotrone and Mike Sirignano, and, oh yeah, a Massachusetts High School Hall of Fame coach in Costello, who came out of retirement after a brilliant 30-plus year career at Boston Latin to try his hand at rebuilding Hanover's program. Looks like he still has his fastball.

A stunner on a similar scale has been pulled off by Braintree in the Bay State Conference. A four game winning streak moved the allegedly rebuilding Wamps into a tie for first place in the Carey Division heading in to this past weekend in the always competitive BSC. Unfortunately, a heartbreaking 13-6 loss to Herget Division leading Norwood this past Sunday, the winning TD a 37-yard pass inside the final 30 seconds, puts Braintree in the position of needing a little help.

The Wamps feature a much improved defense this year (surrendering a league low 65 points), a fast improving first year QB in Drew Dominguez, and a solid ground game led by Joe Shea.

The Silver Lake gridders also now find themselves in the position of needing some help in their quest for an Old Colony League title. A 31-30 heartbreaker to Barnstable two weeks ago — with the host Red Raiders prevailing with two TDs in the final five minutes, the second on an interception return after a Silver Lake receiver fell down on his cut – has cost the Lakers a shot at competing for the second straight year for a Super Bowl berth with Bridgewater-Raynham on Thanksgiving.

The Lakers are a well rounded team with a quarterback capable of making them a "special team." Third year starter Dennis Hill is considered one of the top five QBs in the state and is being actively recruited by several colleges in this, his senior year. The 6-foot-1 signal caller is a double threat, capable of big strikes through the air or on the ground.

These are just a few of the compelling football stories happening in your own backyard. If you're a football fan or even a sports fan, you owe it to yourself to personally check out one or even a few of these stories.

"We are so eager for this tournament to start to see what happens," noted Beal. "It's a new experience for Cohasset soccer and one that is the start to a new trend."

Cohasset played a solid defensive game, with South Shore League All-Star sweeper Holly Graham having yet another great campaign. Skipper senior Julie Lordan, who made the SSL All-Star team for the second straight year, had another tremendous game on defense.

For Scituate, defender Katie Hess did a terrific job covering Cohasset's All-Star forward Jen Buckley, holding her to just four shots. Along with Patriot League All-Star Margaret Tansey, the Lady Sailors drew their opposition into five offsides penalties, three being called on Buckley.

Scituate sophomore Michelle Littke scored the game's lone goal, tallying it with 21 minutes left in the first half. Littke took a centering pass from senior captain middie Lucy Hayes and slipped it past Cohasset goalie Kelly Holway for the game-winner.

Hayes was playing for the first time in several weeks, after being knocked out of the game against Cohasset five weeks ago. Hayes' co-captain, senior Lauren Glancy, also returned to the line-up for the first time after an extended stint on the injured reserve.

Although they played sparingly, their on-field leadership proved to be a main reason why the Lady Sailors were able to pop out of a five game slide.

"Spirit-wise, they were great to have back," noted Strazdes. "They're the seniors, and they are getting their shot."

On top of the injuries to Hayes and Glancy, two crucial blows to this year's squad, the Lady Sailors have been hit with several other injuries. While Glancy (torn ACL) will probably not return for the playoffs, Strazdes did say that "We'll be as healthy as we've been all season."

Scituate will likely face a powerhouse of an opening round opponent in the Div. 2 South Sectionals, having finished right at .500 (after a regular season ending loss to Norwell on Monday). However, with 10 wins, it seems quite possible Cohasset could wind up with a relatively evenly-matched pairing in the Div. 3 South.brackets.

"We could fall anywhere," admitted Beal, looking over the possibilities of playing Mashpee for the third time this year. "But it's definitely exciting. The girls are pumped. We've worked really hard to get here. The competition level has increased."

Special NDA visit sheds light on a different world

Mary Fegreus of Cohasset plays Helen Keller

By Amanda Gontarz
CORRESPONDENT

"This is normal for me. I don't know what I didn't have."
— Jaimi Lard of the Perkins School for the Blind

Imagine, instead of buzzing exasperatingly, your alarm clock wakes you up by vibrating your bed.

Your doorbell doesn't ding, but flashes a bright light throughout your house.

Or someone has to accompany you every time you need to run to the store for a loaf of bread.

The average person may be inconvenienced by some of these differences, but, to Jaimi Lard, this is every day life.

"This is normal for me," she said. "I don't know what I didn't have."

And what Lard doesn't have is a world filled with sight and sound.

When she was a baby, her parents noticed that her eyes moved around a lot and that she didn't respond to their voices.

They brought her to a doctor who determined that their daughter was deaf and blind. He then suggested that she be put into an institution because, according to the doctor, she would never be able to walk, be educated or independent in any way.

Lard, 38, lives in a Watertown apartment, enjoys running and swimming and works as a spokesperson for the Perkins School for the Blind, the same school that educated Lard and taught her the skills she needed to live in today's world.

"I don't want to sit home isolated and people should understand that deaf and blind people shouldn't have to be isolated," she said.

With a sign language interpreter speaking, Lard talked to a group of students at Notre Dame Academy Wed., Oct. 23 about her life as a deaf and blind person in preparation for the school's upcoming production of "The Miracle Worker," which tells the story of Helen Keller.

Lard first learned to sign at the age of 2, when her parents brought a tutor into their home to help them communicate with their daughter. Three years later, she entered the Perkins School, where she spent the next 16 years learning everything from math and science to cooking and table manners.

Like many people, Lard spends a good deal of time in front her computer, reading the news and sending e-mails. Her computer has a special program that enlarges and darkens the text, which Lard is able to read it if she brings her face right up to the screen.

Though she hasn't let being blind and deaf stop her from trying anything, Lard said she admits that life often can be more challenging because of it.

"I can't go to the store by myself. I need someone to go with me. It's frustrating," she said.

Kathleen Walter, director of theater arts at Notre Dame, played the role of Keller in "The Miracle Worker" when she attended the school in the late 60s. In preparation for her role, she spent an afternoon with a blind woman and said she thought the students in this fall's production would benefit greatly from a similar experience.

To learn a little about Lard's world, the students put on blindfolds and earplugs and were guided around the auditorium by their classmates.

"It's like being in your own little world," said sophomore Mary Fegreus, a Cohasset resident.

Fegreus portrays Keller in the production and spent many of the early rehearsals behind a blindfold.

"I thought it would be cool to play someone who couldn't see or hear," she said. ""I talk a lot so the role gives me another perspective on life."

"The Miracle Worker" opens Nov. 15 at 8 p.m. in Notre Dame Academy's Cushing Auditorium with a second performance Nov. 17 at 2 p.m.

Find out about Derby

Derby Academy in Hingham will hold Information Sessions and Campus Tours for parents on Tuesday, Oct. 22 starting at 8:45 a.m. (for adults), and on Sunday, Nov. 3 at 2 p.m. for adults and children.

Director of Admissions, Jay Sadlon and Beverly Koswick, Parents' Association Admissions Liaison are planning the events as information introductions for parents interested in learning more about the Pre-kindergarten through Grade 9, coed, independent day school.

Parents of the current Derby students will lead visitors on tours of the 27-acre campus after a short introduction. A question-and-answer period will wrap up each session. For directions to the school or more information, call the school at 781-749-0746, Ext. 46; or visit their Web site at www.derbyacademy.org.

Local teachers in 'Who's Who'

A select group of America's teachers are being honored by their toughest critics—their former students—in the seventh edition of "Who's Who Among America's Teachers, 2002."

All of the approximately 114,000 teachers being honored were selected by their former students who themselves are currently listed in "Who's Who Among American High School Students," or "The National Dean's List," publications which recognize five percent of our nation's high school and college students, respectively.

The students were requested to nominate the one teacher from their entire academic career who "made a difference in their lives" by helping to shape their values, inspiring interest in a particular subject and/or challenging them to strive for excellence.

Local educators honored in "Who's Who Among American Teachers, 2002" include:

Cohasset: David Russell Magnussen, Cohasset Middle/High School and Scott P. Newkirk, Cohasset Middle/High School.

911 Emergency Beacon is a light bulb that can help the Cohasset Police and Fire Departments find your home. It is an ordinary light bulb that becomes a flashing signal for help with the flip of a switch. The bulb fits any standard socket and can be used in a visible indoor window light or porch or yard light. In an emergency, simply flip the light switch twice and the 911 Emergency Beacon will flash, pinpointing your location and alerting neighbors that you have an emergency. It will direct police, fire and rescue personnel right to your door. Inquiries should be referred to Carol Barrett at the CEA office. 781-383-9112. Carol will provide the bulbs, free of charge.

Housing issues floated in forum on Master Plan

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"Developers are looking at the town as a nice big piece of cherry pie."
— Jack McCarthy, 278 Jerusalem Road

Put away the crystal ball because it's not needed, say concerned residents.

They want to keep Cohasset just the way it is and are worried about over-development – especially AvalonBay's proposed 200-unit apartment complex off Rte. 3A and what "mansionization" is doing to the character of their neighborhoods.

But those doing the homework for the town's Master Plan say the best way to preserve Cohasset is not only to air current concerns but to look at existing conditions and trends, and see what steps the town can take to control its future.

To that end, the Growth and Development Committee has worked countless hours over the past year to set the stage for the Master Plan, a blueprint so to speak, of what direction the town could take with proper planning.

The committee conducted a workshop on housing issues last week, which was the latest in series of forums planned to help collect community input on what the issues and concerns are. Last month, a Route 3A talk was held. The committee is cautiously optimistic it can have an early draft of the Master Plan ready by the end of the year.

But that can't be soon be soon enough for Jack McCarthy, 278 Jerusalem Road.

"Developers are looking at the town as a nice big piece of cherry pie," he said. "How do we pick up the pace and nail this down, so developers won't come in here?"

Larissa V. Brown of Community Design Partnership, consultants hired by the town, walked some 50 attendees through the existing conditions in Cohasset related to housing development, what concerns townspeople, who responded to a recent survey have, and some options the town could consider to control growth.

Brown cited two town surveys that demonstrated residents' concern over housing issues. In the town-wide survey, respondents included limiting the size of house construction relative to lot size; limiting barriers to viewing the ocean; and limiting the amount of new residential development among their top seven issues. The survey of senior citizens showed a majority want to remain in Cohasset but tax increases could play a role in their decision whether to leave and that their current homes are too large or too expensive for people on fixed incomes.

It was probably inevitable that much of the conversation focused on the AvalonBay development and the town's lack of affordable housing. The proposed 200-unit, luxury apartment complex on one of the last tracks of commercially zoned land has been controversial since Avalon officials first floated the concept some 18 months ago.

Brown noted that under recent changes to Chapter 40B – the state's affordable housing law – having a Master Plan, could play an important role in whether the town would be vulnerable to developers seeking comprehensive permits.

Under the new regulations, the state will consider a town's credible affordable housing plan, she said. Earlier in the evening, state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, also told the gathering having a housing plan for the community is part of new 40B changes, which he said don't go far enough to allow communities more control.

"But the one thing that is a constant is having a master plan regarding housing for a community," he said.

Towns that don't meet the state threshold for affordable housing are vulnerable to comprehensive permits that allow developers to skirt local zoning, in exchange for providing 20-25 percent affordable or low-income housing.

Wayne Sawchuk, 432 Beechwood St., said the town needs senior housing, something besides the 64 units off Elm Street behind the police-fire station.

"I've had four friends leave," he said. Sawchuk said whether Avalon takes the onus of providing affordable housing off the town or not, is not the issue. [If Avalon goes through, the town could be out from under the 10 percent affordable housing threshold, because the state counts both market-rate and affordable units in a 40B rental project. The town has some 2700 housing units and currently, only 76 are affordable by state guidelines].

Sawchuk, who is a local developer, said he's tried twice to build senior housing but hasn't been able to because of zoning restrictions. He said the town needs to change its zoning to allow independent living units for the 55 and over population.

"This would allow our seniors to cash in (on their homes) and not take all their money and go to Scituate," he said. "I hope people will think of the elderly."

Selectman Tom Callahan, who also sits on the Growth and Development Committee, pointed out the town passed a zoning bylaw allowing up to 10 accessory dwelling conversions a year. It was a bylaw that had seniors in mind, he said. Callahan suggested offering amnesty for any illegal apartments in dwellings in town.

But Roger Hill, 19A Highland Ave., asked how many accessory dwelling permits had been applied for since the bylaw passed, and was told "none."

'Mansionization'

The debate moved onto the so-called "mansionization" which was defined as replacing a smaller home with one that is two to three times bigger than what was there before.

Steven S. Daley, 322 Jerusalem Lane said the current zoning laws are not being interpreted correctly, and pointed to a new 13,000 square foot house going up on Jerusalem Lane. He and others argued the plans should have gone before the zoning board for a special permit, but did not.

Later, zoning board chairman Woody Chittick explained the proper procedure for neighbors to challenge a building permit is first to review the project in light of existing building and zoning regulations with the building inspector.

"If a neighbor believes there to be a violation, that person should then write a letter to the building inspector requesting enforcement," Chittick said. "The building inspector has 14 days to respond in writing of his action or inaction. If no action is taken, the aggrieved party can then file an appeal with the Zoning Board within 30 days."

Preserving views was also a hot topic, with Brown, the consultant, saying creating scenic overlay districts could be a way to preserve views as a public resource.

Mark Baker of the Capital Outlay Committee said a philosophical discussion is warranted because one of the assets the town has is its ocean views and it should have the right to protect that asset.

Stacey Weaver of Nichols Road said residents' property values are tied to their view.

"If someone is cut out of a view, the assessors aren't going to say their house is worth less – they're still going to be paying (taxes) as if they had a view," she said.

Growth & Development chairman Rick Swanborg gave last week's housing forum high marks.

"I thought the meeting was well attended with great participation," he said. "We focused on key housing issues, which the town has identified should be addressed in the future."

Town Planner Liz Harrington said Community Design Partnership will provide a draft of the housing section of the Master Plan to the Growth & Development Committee in early November. The committee will decide if it wants to distribute the draft at the Nov. 18 Special Town Meeting.

Swanborg is working on an interim report that will summarize progress to date and the next steps, which will be distributed to town boards and other interested citizens in the next few weeks. A follow-up meeting on housing is slated for Dec. 9 during which specific strategies and recommendations will be presented and discussed with the goal of creating a consensus around specific proposals, Harrington said.

The committee will conduct a meeting focusing in the environment and open space aspects of the Master Plan on Nov. 21.

MCAS changes offered at state-wide issues forum

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The Massachusetts Association of School Committee' acronym, MASC, may share the same letters as the state's high-stakes test, the MCAS — but the two are very different.

In fact, the MASC may be the organization that brings widespread changes to the role of the MCAS in Massachusetts education, particularly in regards to the role it serves as a requirement for graduation.

Last Thursday, the Cohasset School Committee voted to support all three MASC resolutions in preparation for the MASC Conference, which began yesterday (Wednesday) and runs through Friday at the Worcester Centrum Center.. The resolutions target the MCAS test, bilingual education, and educational funding fairness (see sidebar).

"We endorsed all the resolutions," said Chairman Rick Flynn. "Our feeling on the MCAS is that something needs to be done. We thought that (the MCAS) resolution was a little bit extreme, but the feeling is that it needs to be done."

Superintendent Edward Malvey sees the decision to endorse the resolution as merely a continuation of the school committee's long-held stance on the issue.

"This School Committee has dealt with the issue forthright since the MCAS (Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System)has come into existence," said Malvey. "The vote the other night to support the resolution is intended to serve as a wake-up call. A lot of communities are dealing with this issue, and we want to keep it on the front burner."

The committee believes that a strongly-worded departure from the Department of Education's policy is necessary in order to being about a fair negotiation.

"Whatever happens, it will have to be a compromise," said Vice-Chairman Chartis Tebbetts, who will be the voting member of the committee at the annual meeting. "We are very comfortable with the idea of supporting this resolution. We would prefer to make a strong statement and compromise from that."

Last year – presented with two resolutions on MCAS – the MASC voted to approve the weaker one. This year, there is only one (MCAS) resolution on the docket.

"If we pass it and it goes to the legislation it would be something that the Association would lobby for," said Tebbetts. "It would significantly water down the applicability of the MCAS as a graduation requirement."

The committee also voted to support a resolution on bilingual education and equal funding, though the committee termed the latter as "awkwardly worded and hard to get your hands around."

As for the bilingual education resolution, it is a matter of maintaining local control.

"We need to work hard to maintain local control, because both of these issues (MCAS and bilingual education) take something away from us," said Tebbetts. "For the Department of Education to tell us that someone, who in every other respect passes our standards for graduation, is ineligible because they did not pass the MCAS represents a loss of local control."

Spelling out the resolutions

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The following is a synopsis of the three resolutions that will be voted upon at the Massachusetts Association of School Committees (MASC) Conference. The conference began on Wednesday and runs through Friday.

Resolution 1 – Education Funding Fairness Study

This resolution would indicate support for the creation of an Education Funding Fairness Study, particularly targeting communities with incomes below the state average who receive less than 25 percent of the net school funding from Chapter 70.

The resolution itself is based on a proposed amendment that was submitted by Sen. Robert O'Leary, D-Cummaquid, and Sen. Bruce Tarr, R-Gloucester.

Resolution 2 – MCAS as a Requirement for Graduation

Out of concern that the MCAS does not "adequately support the different styles of learning," and that high-stakes testing is not "educationally justified," the resolution calls for the end of the use of the MCAS test as a graduation and seeks the return of local control to school committee in regards to the awarding of high school diplomas. There is also concern that the test is out of character with the Education Reform law in Massachusetts which "calls for the use of a comprehensive assessment system, not a single test, for determining academic competency.

Resolution 3 – Bilingual Education in Massachusetts

The resolution calls for the public "to reject the bilingual education initiative ballot question," at the polls on Nov. 5. The MASC is concerned that local school committees will lose the ability to implement educational plans that are specific to the needs of the community.

Forest Avenue sidewalks not curbed

Voters to have final say Nov. 18

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Sidewalks could come to Forest Avenue, nearly a decade after the need was first officially identified by the Sidewalk Study Committee.

Those who live in the area say they don't need a study to let them know that the street is dangerous. Several, who were in attendance at the last week's selectmen's meeting to urge the board to move forward with the project, said they do not allow their children to walk on the street.

"I think that it is time that we move forward," said Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan. "We've been talking about it for 10 years. Forest Avenue is a heavily traveled road and a lot of children live in the area. It might not be the best time from a financial standpoint, but we've been saying that for a long time. It's time to just do it."

The article will ask the Nov. 18 Special Town Meeting to appropriate $250,000 to completely fund the project. The town already has approximately $180,000 allocated towards the project. If the article is rejected, the selectmen would then investigate how best to utilize the money the town already has in order to address the safety issues.

Town Manager Mark Haddad was glad to see the issue put before the town.

"I think the town should make a decision," sad Haddad. "If they don't want to do it, we'll know what our marching orders are."

Selectman Merle Brown voted in opposition of the article, saying that it was fiscally irresponsible to be working on sidewalks when there are larger issues – such as the need for a new school bus – that were being put off over financial concerns.

"I think sidewalks are very good ideas, but I don't think sidewalks are good ideas when we don't have the money to construct them," said Brown. "I don't think it is right for the other selectmen to put it in the town meeting because it'll go through in town meeting, because (the proponents) will pack the meeting and push it through."

IT'S HAPPENING

Bird walk

The Straits Pond Watershed Association will host a Bird Walk led by Sally Avery on Saturday, Nov. 9 from 8-10 a.m. at Atlantic Avenue, Hull (at the foot of Summit Avenue).

Community center fund-raisers noted

The South Shore Community Center is having a raffle for a weekend for two at the Jared Coffin House in Nantucket. Reservations can be made from Dec. 1 through March 31. The package includes two nights lodging, full breakfast each morning, lunch one afternoon and dinner one evening. The drawing will be Nov. 21, at 2:30 p.m. at the Jingle Bell Walk in the gymnasium. You need not be present to win. Donation one chance $25 or five chances $100. All proceeds benefit the South Shore Community Center.

The South Shore Community Center is going to have a Ski, Skate and Sports Equipment sale on Nov. 16, from 9 a.m. to noon.

If you have any ski, skate or sports equipment that is cluttering up your garage or basement then why not put it to good use and for a good cause. Donate it to the South Shore Community Center. You can drop off equipment from Nov. 13 through 16, at the South Shore Community Center, 3 North Main St., Cohasset, Ma. 02025

All donations are tax deductible.

Halloween dance

Due to the fact that Halloween falls on a school night this year, the Halloween dance will be held at the Garage on Friday, Nov. 1, from 7 to 10 p.m. Everyone in Grade 6 and up is welcome and costumes are optional. This ghoulish dance will be free of charge. Snacks and refreshments will be sold as well.

Trick or treat at Stop & Shop

Local Stop & Shop supermarkets will be home to ghosts, goblins, witches, and other Halloween guests in the supermarket's first ever Trick-or Treat event. On Halloween night, Oct. 31, from 4 to 7 p.m.

Stop & Shop associates from each department will get into the spirit, dressing in costumes, decorating the store for Halloween and handing out Skittles and M&M candies to trick-or-treaters. Stop & Shop will also award a $20 gift card for best costume at each store.

For more information, customers should contact their local Stop & Shop supermarket.

Newcomers host farm family fun day

The Scituate/Cohasset Newcomers Club has arranged for a Family Fun Day at the Weir River Farm in Hingham on Saturday, Nov. 2 at 11 am. The farm has been reserved just for the club, so come out and enjoy the beautiful fall weather!

The farm staff will be on hand to lead an informal barnyard tour and answer questions. There will be a $2 fee per person for those who are not members of The Trustees of Reservations.

The farm is located in Hingham, with parking available at the end of Turkey Hill Lane. Light refreshments will be served, so please call Heidi Blanchard at 545-8066 if you would like to attend. For more information on the Newcomers Club, call Vicki Defreitas at 545-5202.

Arts, crafts offered

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for grades K-3 arts and crafts programs by calling 781-383-4109.

Arts and crafts for grades K-3 will be held from 3 to 4:30 p.m. Tuesdays, and will be held at the Joseph P. Osgood School.

The program will be five weeks in duration, costing $42 per child. Programs are scheduled to begin Tuesday, Nov. 5, continuing through Dec. 3.

For more information, details and registration, call the Recreation office at 781-383-4109.

Dormitzer to speak

The Social Service League Speaker Series continues Friday, Nov.1 from noon to 1p.m. at the South Shore Art Center with author Jackie Dormitzer, author of "Narrative History of Cohasset." This book traces the story of Cohasset and its people from 1950 to 2000. It describes the changes to the town, its people and temperament. Dormitzer has lived in town and served on many political and civic boards for more than 35 years. Come and share her wealth of knowledge about Cohasset. Free and open to the public. For more info 781-383-0771 The next speaker will be Rich Sylvia, member of the Community Preservation Committee that is spearheading a town effort to save the Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary. Nov.15.

Student job bank

The Social Service League provides a referral service to match high school students looking for work opportunities in Cohasset. If you are interested in hiring a student to work for you, please call the League Office at 781-383-0771 between 8:30 a.m. and 3 p.m., Monday through Friday.

A list of student names is available for the following services: lawn mowing, leaf raking, general yard work, cooking, computer skills work, babysitting, house sitting, pet sitting, etc. at $7 per hour.

Financial workshop

John Flanagan, the Edward Jones investment representative in Cohasset, will host a "Financial Workshop for Individual Investors." The two-week workshop will assist individuals in setting financial and investment goals.

The class will provide an in-depth look at the many different types of investments available to and suitable for investors who are working or retired.

The workshop will be held Nov. 4 and Nov. 12.

Classes will meet one night per week from 7 to 9 p.m. and will be held at the South Shore Community Center. The enrollment fee for the workshop is $15 per person or $20 per couple, which includes all course materials. For more information or to reserve a seat, call Flanagan at 781-383-1996.

Ice fishing course

The Cohasset Recreation Department announces telephone registrations will be accepted for a unique "Ice Fishing Course," designed for all ages, children through adults.

The course will be held on Island Creek Pond in Duxbury on Sunday, Jan. 19 from 9:55-11:55 a.m. No ice skates allowed! The fee for this very unique opportunity to learn how to ice fish is $34 per participant and includes all necessary equipment and bait.

You may register by calling the Cohasset Recreation Department at 781-383-4109. Space is limited and early registration is strongly suggested.

Teaching the class will be Paul Bruce of Duxbury. Last year, his group caught 15 pickerel and two bass in three hours; there's fish under the ice with voracious appetites! You'll learn traps, tackle, bait and techniques. Take advantage of this opportunity and learn a skill for life!

Open house, market place

The South Shore Art Center will hold a Holiday Marketplace and Open House on Saturday, Nov. 9, from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. The marketplace will feature a select number of craft artisans selling jewelry, glass ornaments, clothing, soaps, holiday soft sculpture, and doll clothing. Holiday shoppers will find Arts Festival favorites Susan Arnold of Ad Libs Designs; photography products from Sandi Smith; jewelry by ek Designs; glass ornaments by Simple Syrup Glass Studio, and children's clothing by Fleece on Earth.

The activities at the Art Center will be held in conjunction with the Annual Small Works Exhibition, showcasing the artwork of many of the Art Center's 150 Gallery Artists. All of the work is small in size and priced under $500. Highlighting the activities on Nov. 9 will be the chance for all visitors to add their own artistic creation to a creative quilt. The Art Center will provide paper and materials for artists young and old, talented and those just experimenting, to contribute their personal touch to this giant collage. For more information call 781-383-ARTS.

Victorian fair

The Hull Lifesaving Museum presents a Victorian Seaside Holiday Fair on Saturday and Sunday, Dec. 14 and 15 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the museum at 1117 Nantasket Ave. in Hull.

The Museum Store will be full of amazing gifts for young and old and more than a dozen local artisans will display and sell their wares of jewelry, textiles, wood-turning, candles, seaglass and more. There will be activities and crafts for children—kids play while you shop, and you can enjoy delicious refreshments and holiday cheer.

Admission and parking is free. For information, call 781-925-5433. Come and enjoy the most rewarding holiday shopping of the season!

Pop-up book at Buttonwood

Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset will host Robert Sabuda on Saturday, Nov. 16 from 4-6 p.m. Sabuda is an artist who has taken paper engineering to its ultimate level. A paper engineer is an artist who creates pop-ups using paper as his or her primary medium. The term "pop-up" is a catchall phrase for all moveable and dimensional art. His newest book is a pop-up adaptation of Clement C. Moore's, "The Night Before Christmas" (Little Simon, $24.95). The illustrations are breathtaking as reindeers jump from the pages in your hand and Santa rises up the chimney. His work is fascinating to children but is also highly regarded by adult collectors. Sabuda will do a brief pop-up demonstration at the beginning of his visit. This is a free event and the public is most welcome. Please call Buttonwood at 781-383-2655 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

Festival of trees

Friends of the Paragon Carousel Inc., 205 Nantasket Ave., Hull, presents the First Annual Festival of Trees at the Carousel. The gala grand opening will be Friday, Nov. 29, from 6 to 9 p.m. Tickets: Child $2/Adults $10. Tree lighting entertainment, refreshments.

The event runs Nov. 30, Dec. 1, 6, 7, 8, 13, 14, and 15. Hours: Friday, 4 to 8 p.m. Saturday, 4 to 8 p.m. and Sunday, 3:30 to 6:30 p.m.

Bring a can good or food item for the Wellsprings Food Pantry and receive a "Good Deed Coupon" for a free ride on the Carousel.

It seems small. Until you turn it on.

The Bose® Acoustic Wave® music system. The biggest thing about it is the sound.

It measures just 10.5"H × 18"W × 7.5"D and fits on an end table. But turn it on, and you'll hear rich, lifelike, room-filling sound. In fact, the Chicago Tribune said the Acoustic Wave® music system produces "big, bold sound" that places it "at the forefront of compact music systems." No other system this size produces the same deep lows and natural sound.

The key to this sound is our patented waveguide speaker technology. Just as a flute strengthens a breath of air to fill a concert hall, the waveguide produces room-filling sound from a small enclosure. It's no wonder the waveguide won its team of Bose engineers the prestigious "Inventor of the Year" award.

Folded inside, our patented seven-foot waveguide enriches sound.

Easy-to-use features.

As small as it is, the Acoustic Wave® music system is big on features. A handy credit card-sized remote gives you control from your favorite chair. Plus, the CD player, AM/FM radio and three speakers are all built in, so you'll have no confusing wires or external speakers to hook up. The Acoustic Wave® music system even allows you to bring rich Bose sound to your favorite TV shows and movies by easily connecting to your TV, VCR or DVD player. And with a choice of colors – Platinum White or Graphite Gray – it fits almost any décor.

Call to learn about our 30-day in-home trial.

The Acoustic Wave® music system is available directly from Bose, the most respected name in sound. Call today and listen to the system in your home for 30 days, satisfaction guaranteed. If you're not completely satisfied, simply return it for a full refund of the purchase price. Be sure to ask about our 12-month interest-free payment plan and free shipping offer.

Order by December 31, 2002 and get a free Multimedia Pedestal with inputs for your TV, VCR, DVD player and another music source.

The Acoustic Wave® music system may look small, but just wait until you turn it on.

Coastal Research Center signs lease on Hagerty House

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research took another step towards reality at the Selectmen's meeting Tuesday, when representatives Jack Buckley and Steven Daly signed a lease for the former Hagerty House.

The $1-a-year lease runs for five years and will self-renew as long as the project continues its forward momentum.

"It has been a long process for the town, certainly for guys like Jack Buckley," said Daly, who works in real estate in Hingham. "It's sort of the culmination of Kevin Ulmer's original vision and I think it is going to be great fun for the kids."

Ulmer was the proponent behind the Lobster Lab, an educational program that previously rented the Hagerty House. Selectmen terminated the lease when Ulmer failed to meet the terms of the agreement that included building upkeep and fundraising.

"We want to have programs for younger kids so that they can get excited about learning about science and finding new ways to explore the environment."
— Jack Buckley

"The main idea is to have a place for students to do research that is of importance to the town," said Buckley, a teacher at Cohasset Middle High School. "Already, the kids have worked on monitoring the salinity in the harbor, because of the concern from the increased effluent from the wastewater treatment plant and doing bacterial studies of coliform bacteria in Little Harbor."

The 10-member board heading the CCSRC hopes to have the building operational – at least in part – by the summer of 2003.

"We have $100,000 of need," said Daly. "We have half of that on hand or raised and we have another 15 percent of that which is committed as a guarantee. For the balance of it, we are also seeking guarantees in order to establish a credit line."

According to Daly, the line of credit will provide the Center with all of the working capital it needs to renovate the building. The Center also plans to lease the upper floor to the South Shore Art Center for studio space.

The selectmen pledged $25,000, which was left over from the Hagerty account, to fund a public bathroom in the building that would be accessible from Mariner's Park.

The Center would provide an educational tool to be used across the school system.

"We want to have programs for younger kids so that they can get excited about learning about science and finding new ways to explore the environment," said Buckley. "When the kids get older, they can then take on some more serious research projects."

Hagerty Committee chairman Russ Bonetti asked several questions before the lease was signed as to the financial stability for the plan and the zoning issues, but selectmen felt confident that their Aug. 8 decision to approve the project was the right move.

"We gave them the go-ahead last time," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris. "The Lobster Lab didn't make it, but Jack Buckley put together a good plan for using the building, and a great way to finance it. Signing the lease was just a formality."

Project Safeguard helps kids make healthy choices

On Tuesday, Oct. 8, seventh-graders from the Cohasset Middle School attended a half-day community-sponsored seminar on the Common to kick off the revitalized "Project Safeguard" program. Project Safeguard is a national program model that encourages a family approach to adolescent health-related issues and substance abuse prevention, and can be adapted to meet specific community needs. This year's "Campus on the Common" event focused on three themes: social and academic pressure; drug & alcohol prevention; and gender & body image issues. Roughly 50 percent of students had at least one parent in attendance.

Keynote speaker Ed Gerety, one of America's top youth motivational speakers and leadership trainers, got things off to a rousing start at the Town Hall at 7:30 am. His energy and sense of humor kept kids alert, and by most accounts his thoughtful messages made them pause and think. Focusing on the importance of respect, appreciation, and kindness, Gerety told several poignant stories of his own childhood. He spoke about bullying and about being "egged on" to be mean to other kids, even when he knew in his heart it wasn't the right think to do. He repeatedly encouraged kids to "listen to your heart" when making decisions and to treat others with respect.

Next the group walked up the hill to St. Stephen's Church, where selected Peer Leaders from Cohasset High School put on a play called "Jesse's Journal." Four boy characters and four girl characters took turns reading from their journal entries. The interweaving stories touched on many sensitive topics, including eating disorders and the media's influence on body image; academic pressure and the "overscheduled kid" syndrome; gender stereotypes faced by boys, particularly surrounding sports; and peer pressure concerning drinking and drugs. Afterwards, the audience dispersed to form small student and parent discussion groups, and then convened all together to discuss problems and solutions.

Later, students attended another talk by Gerety while parents met with school guidance counselors to discuss the transition from Deer Hill to the Middle School. Students then took the bus back to school, leaving parents to enjoy a luncheon at the Second Congregational Church and casual conversation with school staff and discussion leaders.

Background

Similar but larger-scale Project Safeguard events were held in Cohasset in 1996 and 1997. These were coordinated by a group of three parent volunteers (Liz Bates, Maureen Smith and Susan Etkind), who worked closely with Dr. Mike Gill, Health Education Coordinator of the Cohasset Public Schools. These parents had attended a Project Safeguard event in Weston and were so impressed that they wanted to do the same in Cohasset. The Cohasset events in '96 and '97 received high marks from Cohasset parents and students alike and were well attended — 75 percent of students had at least one parent in attendance. Unfortunately, the program had to be shelved due to budget and time restraints.

Last year, the PSO decided to try to resurrect the program, this time on a smaller scale. Using a half-day, rather than a full-day format, the program is more cost-effective and hopefully more manageable for working families. Working together with Dr. Gill, the Health Education Advisory Committee, and the Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee, the group designed a curriculum to meet the developmental needs of seventh-graders. They also enlisted the help of Peer Leaders from the High School to cut down on speaker fees. PSO Community Relations reps Sally Sisson and Karen Oronte organized this event, with the help of parent volunteers from both Deer Hill and the Middle School schools.

What's next

The hope is that "Project Safeguard" will serve as an umbrella name for a host of programs for different grades. Plans are in place for a smaller-scale, in-school event for sixth-graders this spring, and for another "Campus on the Common" event for next year's seventh-graders in the fall. Peer Leaders selected from the High School will play an important role in both events. In addition, there are plans to show the play "Jesse's Journal" to current 8th graders some time during this school year. The future will depend on parent interest level, funding, and volunteers.

Many thanks

Many thanks to the following sponsors who made this program possible: Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee; Cohasset PSO (Parent School Organization); St. Stephen's Episcopal Church; Second Congregational Church; St. Anthony's Church; and Eagle Flag of America, Inc.

And to the following businesses that helped provide refreshments: Dunkin Donuts, Stop & Shop , and Shaw's

Many people helped to plan the "Campus on the Common" event. The Project Safeguard team included: Dr. Mike Gill, Middle School Administrative Coordinator & Health Education Coordinator of Cohasset Public Schools; Paul Callahan, Deer Hill Principal; Ed Leonard, Ann McCarthy-Egan, Betsy McGrath & Anne Porter, Guidance & Adjustment Counselors, Cohasset Public Schools; Karen Murphy, Lead Nurse, Cohasset Public Schools; Rev. Cliff Cutler, Director, Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee; Don Ivas, Director, Social Service League; and Sally Sisson & Karen Oronte, PSO Community Relations reps. Many of the team members served as discussion leaders and facilitators. Thanks also to Beth Wheatley-Dyson, Asst. Rector of St. Stephen's Church; Betsy Keefe, licensed social worker; and 7th grade teachers Marie Schlieff and Maureen Duffy for helping as well.

These parent volunteers helped with preparation, setup and cleanup, refreshments and lunch: Eleanor Coughlin, Mary Goodwin, Melody Maurer, Jen Piepenbrink, Allison Moskow, Carolyn Queenan, Barbara Baumgarten, Sue Thompson, Amelia Buckley, Derry Schwantner, Beth Seraikas & Vicky Neaves. Bakers & cooks included: Barb Mullin, Mary Goodwin, Sheila Sinclaire, Olivia Baldwin, Monica McKenna, Joanne Allen, Gloria DiPaolo, Carolyn Queenan, Eleanor Coughlin, Donna Coughlin, Vicky Neaves, Susie Durant, Sandy Crough, Chris Harag & Doris Goodwin.

SAFEGUARD is on the Web

"Healthy Minds, Healthy Bodies," the Project SAFEGUARD Web site, is up and running. This site is designed as a resource to support the youth in the community. It's for parents, for kids, for teachers...for anyone who cares about making Cohasset an even more safe, nurturing, and responsible community.

Log on to www.cohassetpso.org/safeguard.htm to see what it's all about.

Along with a Parent Booklist of titles dealing with child development and adolescence, the Web site contains links to news articles, features, and resources for both parents and kids. Topics include Stress, Body Image, Bullying, and Drinking & Drugs. Over time the site may expand to cover issues for a wider age range. Content is researched and compiled by parent volunteer Sally Sisson, who also works as a freelance writer and editor specializing in educational publishing for the secondary-, middle- and high-school age ranges. Your ideas are welcome; visit the site and send in your comments or suggestions.

This site is designed as a resource to support the youth in the community

Project SAFEGUARD is a community initiative designed to supplement the health education program in our schools. It depends on parent and community volunteers, as well as community funding, to keep running.

POLICE BRIEFS

Exposed himself

On Saturday, Oct. 26, at 5:20pm, a white male subject accosted an 11-year-old female at Shaw's Plaza by exposing himself.

The suspect is described as being of medium build, approximately 25–30 years old, 5 ft. 8 ins. to 5 ft. 11 ins., 180 pounds, light brown hair, wearing a faded blue/gray baseball hat, blue jeans, tan coat with a zippered front, green and blue plaid shirt with a dirty white T-shirt and all black sneakers.

Quick work nabs alleged shoplifters

At about 10:16 a.m., Tuesday police received a call from CVS on Route 3A that two females had just left the store after allegedly shoplifting. According to police, the stolen items set off the sensors in the doors when the women walked out.

The manager got a description of the suspects' late model Honda that was headed northbound on 3A. Officer Christy Tarantino stopped the vehicle near Sunrise Assisted Living and was soon joined by Officer Larry Ainslie. The CVS manager was brought to the scene and identified the suspects.

Arrested and charged with shoplifting and larceny, were Bethel Keller-Brittle, 19, of 192 B Humboldt Ave., Boston and Angelique Fitzgerald, 22, of 66 James St., Roxbury. Tarantino said both women admitted to shoplifting and allegedly had two canvas tote bags full of stolen items in the car.

The women were arraigned later Tuesday in Quincy District Court.

Otis St. break-in

On Oct. 23, police arrested David B. Silva, Jr., 24, of 12 Williams Drive, Carver. Silva is alleged to have broken into a house on Otis Avenue and stole property that belonged to the homeowner and a private contractor. Silva is also alleged to have pawned some of that property at Traders Mart at Brockton. The house was not occupied at the time of the crime due to renovations. Silva is charged with breaking & entering in the nighttime; intent to commit a felony; larceny of property over $250 (two counts); and receiving stolen property over $250 (two counts). Det. Garrett Hunt led the investigation.

Along comes a 'Spider - Man'

A live-action version of superhero swings into the Wang

By Josh B. Wardrop
STAFF WRITER

Since 1962, Spider-Man has conquered comic books and TV animation. And then last summer the story found a new level of dizzying success, as Tobey Maguire's feature film version of "Spider-Man" broke box office records.

Now Spider-Man takes aim at the stage, as a live-action version of "Spider-Man Live!" hits the Wang Theatre, in Boston, Nov. 5-10.

"My whole life, I've been a Spider-Man aficionado, or, as others would put it, a Spider-Man 'geek,' " laughs Kevin Shinick, the show's writer/director. "So, when I originally had met with the producers to pitch other projects, and they casually asked me whether I knew anything about Spider-Man, I figured somebody was setting me up. But, I took a shot at writing a script treatment, and they liked it. Pretty soon, they were asking me to direct the show!"

Like the blockbuster film, "Spider-Man Live!" chronicles the challenges and opportunities that arise when a teenager — our hero, Peter Parker — is bitten by a radioactive spider. Imbued with fantastic powers, Spider-Man battles the nefarious Green Goblin, from whose clutches he must rescue his true love, Mary Jane Watson. Beyond those similarities, however, Shinick insists that the stage show more than stands up on its own.

"I tried to stay closer to the mythology of the comic book character," he says. "There's plenty of twists and turns that are different from the movie."

Shinick, who made his name in the business as a performer (he hosted the popular PBS kids series "Where in Time is Carmen Sandiego?"), says directing the show has certainly been demanding and eye-opening. "Anything I do after this will be a piece of cake," he says. "This show encompasses flying, explosions, trapeze work, fight scenes — all along with directing the performers' actual acting. What's been really interesting and unique about this show is that, behind the scenes, we've been trying to create a family out of a number of diverse groups — stuntmen learning to act, acrobats learning to stage fight, and so on."

Still, the biggest challenge Shinick faced was to tell the story of Spider-Man in a way that would grip both young audiences and their parents. "We've all been to 'family spectaculars' that were neither spectacular, nor for the whole family," he says. "My key goal was to do something that would appease adults who have been Spider-Man fans since 1962, as well as to create something for kids that was a great introduction to the character, and to live theater."

While Hollywood star Tobey Maguire busies himself with new screen projects (including the upcoming movie sequel to "Spider-Man," scheduled for 2004), the man behind the mask at the Wang will be 27-year-old Colin Follenweider. A gymnast and high-diver since his school days, Follenweider was chosen for "Spider-Man Live!" after a two-and-a-half year stint performing the Cirque du Soleil show "O" in Las Vegas.

"When I auditioned for the part, I was really trying out for Peter Parker," says Follenweider, referring to the web-slinger's bookish alter-ego. "I didn't really have to demonstrate any of the physical, Spider-Man stuff. Having Cirque on my resume pretty much convinced them I could handle it."

While Follenweider admits that he wasn't really a comic book reader growing up in Colorado, there are a couple of indications from his childhood that the producers have found the right man for the job. "As a kid, my best friend and I had a 'Daredevil Club,' in which we would jump out of trees, and off of houses and stuff. I was president and he was vice-president, so he always had to go first," he chuckles.

"Plus, there's an old picture of me from some Halloween — I must have been about 9 or 10 — and I was wearing a homemade Spider-Man costume," Follenweider says. "So, it must be fate."

Follenweider says the show ensures that he doesn't have to worry about finding a gym in a strange city during the show's national tour, which lasts through next summer. "Between tumbling over rooftops, the gymnastics and acrobatics, the stage combat scenes where I swoop down on burglars from above, the strap act where I'm supposed to be swinging over the city... and then there's the wrestling scene, where I fight a guy who's 6 foot 6 and weighs 265 pounds... I definitely get a good workout doing the show."

Follenweider got lots of input on the role from director Shinick, but, in an indirect way, "Spider-Man" creator Stan Lee chimed in, as well. In the first-ever "Spider-Man" comic book story, published by Marvel Comics in issue #15 of "Amazing Fantasy," Lee wrote the words "with great

Beatles exposition makes Danvers debut

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDANT

It's been more than 30 years since the band broke up, but the Beatles are still making headlines and sales.

This year alone has seen the long-awaited video and DVD releases of the Fab Four's classic A Hard Day's Night film. More recently, a British newspaper article named John Lennon as one of the Top Ten Brits of all time, placing him alongside such luminaries Winston Churchill, William Shakespeare and Princess Diana.

On a more somber note, fans continue to mourn the passing of George Harrison in November 2001. But the quiet Beatle is also getting the appropriate sendoff this fall with the forthcoming releases of his final studio CD, Brainwashed, plus his hardcover-edition autobiography, I Me Mine.

Add to these the sensationally received stops at Boston's Fleet Center of Paul McCartney's worldwide "Feelgood Factory" 2002 concert tour in June and October, and the time seems right to bring the world's original Beatles fans and collectors festival event to the Boston area for the first time.

"The Fest For Beatles Fans 2002 — Boston," a nationally touring expo founded in 1974 and originally known as "Beatlefest," lands at Danvers' Sheraton Ferncroft Hotel this weekend, bringing fans and vendors from more than 20 states, England and Canada to partake in non-stop, activities celebrating The Beatles.

The Fest's Boston area debut is, in fact, the event's first show with its new name, "The Fest For Beatles Fans." The gala showcase was originally founded in New York by John Lennon friend and Beatles fan extraordinaire Mark Lapidos, who now, with his wife, Carol, oversees national operations from his company, Mark Lapidos Productions, Ltd., based in Westwood, New Jersey. Since 1974, the company has produced more than 90 "Beatlefest" shows, including long-running annual events in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles as well as going to Philadelphia, San Francisco, Atlanta, Seattle and several other cities.

"We've always wanted to do a show in Boston," said Lapidos. "But somehow or other it's just never worked out to our ideal when we've made attempts in the past. This year though, we've found a great hotel, and we're expecting fans coming from all over New England and the East Coast. There'll be continuous activities in eleven different ballrooms plus a great lineup of musical guests, both speaking and performing."

The musical lineup is indeed impressive and includes artists with direct connections to the Beatles history, both in the band and solo years. Among them, singer/guitarist Joey Molland of Badfinger, the first band signed to the Beatles' Apple label in 1969; Laurence Juber,

MEDEA

Through Sunday, Nov. 3 at Boston's Wilbur Theatre, local theatergoers have the opportunity to experience a quite nearly flawless rendering of Euripide's "Medea," staged by Dublin's Abbey Theatre, the national theater of Ireland. Featuring an extraordinary performance by Fiona Shaw, in the title role, this retelling of 2,433-year-old Greek tragedy is not only set in the present, but it is also fresh and utterly riveting under the direction of Deborah Warner.

The iconic play explores themes of passion, pride and the blinding desire to exact revenge at any cost. When her husband (the excellent Jonathan Cake) leaves her for a Corinthian princess, the jealous "Medea" strikes back at him for the betrayal by killing those closest to him, including the couple's two young sons. It may have been written more than two thousand years ago, but this production proves that "Medea" is as compelling a story as any being written today.

The Abbey Theatre production of "Medea" will continue at the Wilbur Theatre, 246 Tremont Street, Boston, through Nov. 3. For tickets and information, visit the box office or call 617-931-2787.

Quincy Dinner Theatre production shines

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

In their four-decade-long collaboration, composer John Kander and lyricist Fred Ebb have written memorable songs for the stage, feature films and television. Just a partial list of the team's Broadway triumphs would include "Cabaret," "Chicago," "Woman of the Year" and "Kiss of the Spiderwoman."

In 1991, director Scott Ellis and choreographer Susan Stroman paid homage to the master songwriters with the off-Broadway revue, "The World Goes Round," which included some 27 Kander and Ebb classics. Darling Productions' Quincy Dinner Theater (QDT) is currently presenting its own first-rate production of the show featuring the imaginative stage, music direction and choreography of resident Musical Director Jason Andrew Brenner.

Four star boiled dinner

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Boiled dinner sounds like something you would eat as a last resort, when all you have in the house is a tough piece of meat and some old vegetables. The French don't see it that way, they often make "pot au feu," and it isn't viewed as a second-class dish. The notion is simple. Take tough cuts of beef (some recipes also include chicken, sausage, etc.) and vegetables and simmer them in water. This produces a first-class broth (which the French serve as a first course) plus tender meat and flavorful veggies. The problem with this recipe is choosing the right meat and vegetables and coordinating the cooking times.

Let's start with the key cooking principle here. Simmering meat in water is a terrific way to cook tough cuts. In a test at Cook's Illustrated, we found that roasting never gets the meat hot enough to become fork tender (air is a lousy heat conductor) and that boiling meat is just as good as braising it (cooking in a covered dish with a small amount of liquid). There is a simple bit of physics at work here. Tough cuts of beef must reach and maintain an internal temperature of over 200 degrees in order for the collagen to break down which results in fork tender meat. So boiling can be a very good thing indeed.

Okay, now for the cuts of beef. I tested chuck roasts, short ribs, beef shank, veal shank, oxtail, pork ribs, ham hock, lamb shank, chicken, and sausage. Anything with bones increased the flavor of the broth, the chuck roast was nice for slicing, but the chicken and sausage added nothing to the broth. So the winners were a chuck roast combined with beef or veal shanks.

I was using 3 quarts of water (too much water produces a weak broth) and I had found that simmering the meat the day before, chilling the broth, and then removing the solid fat that rose to the surface was the easiest method of defatting the liquid, a crucial step. As for the vegetables for serving, I found that cooking them separately in the defatted broth was best since the meat didn't get in the way. As for the vegetables and herbs I wanted to flavor the broth (which would be discarded). I settled on two medium to large onions, one leek, one celery stalk, two carrots, 1 large ripe tomato, 3 medium cloves garlic, 6 whole cloves, 10 sprigs parsley, 4 sprigs thyme, and 2 bay leaves. I also added one teaspoon each of salt and peppercorns. The dish may need more salt at the finish but you must be careful not to add too much salt now since the broth intensifies as it cooks.

As for the vegetables for serving, the losers were leeks, sun-dried tomatoes, and artichokes. I liked potatoes, carrots, turnips, peas, pearl onions (frozen are fine), green beans, peas, asparagus, fennel, parsnip, and rutabaga. They each have their proper cooking times and so I divided them into three categories: 20 minutes, 10 minutes, and five minutes. You can use any combination you like.

To finish the dish I tried a variety of sauces including horseradish cream, gremolata, ginger/garlic, and a simple salsa verde. The latter was the winner and is included below. (It is, however, optional.)

FRENCH-STYLE BOILED DINNER WITH SALSA VERDE

This is a good recipe for company since most of the work can be done the day before. It also provides both meat and vegetables – all you need is bread and wine. Don't depend on the cooking time for the meat – keep cooking it until it is really fork tender.

For the meat and the broth:

4 pounds chuck

4 pounds beef short ribs, beef shank, or veal shank or any combination

2 medium or large onions, peeled and quartered through the core

1 leek, trimmed and cut into large pieces

2 medium to large carrots, cut into large chunks

1 large ripe tomato, quartered

3 garlic cloves, smashed

6 whole cloves

10 sprigs parsley

4 sprigs thyme

2 bay leaves

1 teaspoon salt

1 teaspoon peppercorns

To finish the dish:

7 to 8 pounds prepared vegetables of your choice (see below)

20 Minute Cooking Time

Small Red Potatoes Washed and left whole

Carrots Peeled, halved, thin end halved lengthwise, thick end quartered

Fennel Bulb Tops cut off, bulb quartered through the core

Turnip, Medium Peeled, quartered

Rutabaga Peeled, cut into 1 1/2-inch chunks

10 Minute Cooking Time

Parsnip Peeled, halved, thick end quartered

Five Minute Cooking Time

Peas Fresh or frozen

Asparagus Thick ends snapped off

Green Beans Trimmed

Pearl Onions Frozen

1. Place all of the ingredients for the broth with three quarts of water into a large Dutch oven or soup pot. Bring to a boil skimming scum as necessary. Reduce heat to maintain gentle simmer and cook, covered, for 2 to 3 hours or until the meat is fork tender. Cool to room temperature and refrigerate overnight.

2. Remove solid layer of fat that has formed over the broth. Reheat until warm over low heat. Strain broth into a large saucepan. Separate the meat from the vegetables and discard vegetables. Place the meat back into Dutch oven and ladle a couple cups of broth over meat. Continue to cook over low heat until hot.

3. Bring remaining broth to a boil. Taste for seasoning adding additional salt if necessary. Add vegetables from the 20 minute category and once the broth comes back to a boil cook for 10 minutes. Add vegetables from the 10 minute category and cook for five minutes once broth has returned to a boil. Add vegetables from the five minute category and boil for five minutes. Place the meat on a large platter or cutting board. Cut the chuck into thick slices on the bias. Arrange the vegetables on a large platter. Ladle a small amount of broth over the meat and vegetables. Serve with optional green sauce.

Serves eight to ten.

GREEN SAUCE

This sauce can be made and refrigerated up to two days ahead but should be allowed to sit out for about 20 minutes to come up to room temperature before serving.

1/2 cup best quality olive oil

2 tablespoons red wine or white balsamic vinegar

1 slice day old European style bread cut into 1-inch cubes, about 1 cup

2 tablespoons capers

1 medium garlic clove, coarsely chopped

2 cups flat leaf Italian parsley, coarsely chopped and loosely packed

2 anchovy fillets, coarsely chopped

1 teaspoon Dijon mustard

1/8 teaspoon salt or to taste

Freshly ground black pepper to taste

Add oil and vinegar to the bowl of a food processor. Place bread cubes in puddles of oil and vinegar and let sit for five minutes. Add all other ingredients and process for about 40 seconds or until the mixture is finely chopped and homogeneous stopping to scrape down the sides of the bowl if necessary. Taste for seasoning adding additional salt and pepper if desired. Serve immediately.

Miles, and Stephen G. Lee, Brenner has assembled a talented company that not only sings, but also dances its way through the first 25 years of the Kander and Ebb catalogue.

In an auspicious QDT debut, Miles opens the show with a plaintive take on the revue's title song, written for the 1977 feature film, "New York, New York." With the lyric, 'Sometimes you're happy and sometimes you're sad, but the world goes round. Life — full of glories, indignities, hopes and quiet dreams," the song sets the tone for the show. The company joins Miles for "Coffee in a Cardboard Cup," for which Brenner has provided clever choreography to complement the song's witty words.

The lighthearted mood continues with Lee's sprightly "Sara Lee," and QDT newcomer Maus's sly rendering of the slightly naughty "Arthur in the Afternoon." Both songs were written for the 1978 Broadway show, "The Act," which starred frequent Kander and Ebb muse Liza Minnelli.

Maus is strong, too, on both song and dance, in "All That Jazz," from the 1976 stage musical "Chicago." The lesser-known "The Rink," which paired Liza Minnelli and Chita Rivera on Broadway in 1984, gives Miles and David a chance to showcase their vocal gifts and comic timing on "Class." Joined by Lee and Collins-Jensen, Belcastro offers a winning "How Lucky Can You Get" from the 1975 movie "Funny Lady."

The company backs David at center stage as she begins the second act with a rousing "Ring Them Bells," from the legendary 1972 television special "Liza with a Z." Also making an impressive first appearance with QDT is Collins-Jensen who is solo in the spotlight for a stirring rendition of the title song from "Kiss of the Spiderwoman."

David and Maus manage to be affecting amidst the laughs on the funny and touching duet "The Grass is Always Greener," which helped earn its original performers, Lauren Bacall and Marilyn Cooper, 1981 Tony Awards for "Woman of the Year."

With an obvious nod to their show's title, the cast closes out the show with an international spin on "New York, New York." Not only does Collins-Jensen channel Charles Aznavour, Maus also manages to make the all American Big Apple taste just a little bit Japanese.

Jason Andrew Brenner and Scott Brenner provide solid musical accompaniment throughout. Wendy Paschke also does an outstanding job on the wide array of costumes which only serve to further enhance an already splendid evening.

(The Quincy Dinner Theater production of "The World Goes Round" continues at the Masonic Temple, 1170 Hancock Street, Quincy, through Nov. 3. For tickets and information, call 781/843-5862.)

bassist/vocalist with Paul McCartney's Wings in the late 70s; and singer/guitarist Billy J. Kramer a fellow Liverpudlian with his band the Dakotas ("Bad to Me," "Little Children") to the Beatles in the early 60s. Other live music includes a Sunday Battle of the Beatles Bands and shows each evening by Beatles tribute band Liverpool!

Also appearing to speak and mingle with fans is Alistair Taylor, former Apple general manager and author of many Beatles books. Plus, overall emcee and noted Beatles expert Martin Lewis, and additional emcees Cha Chi Loprete and John Laurenti of WZLX as well as WODS's Mike Finnegan hosting the Sunday Trivia Competition at around 2 p.m. Other features include a giant marketplace, auctions, slide presentations, laser Karaoke, videos, a Lennon/McCartney art exhibit, puppet shows, panel discussions and much more.

As Lapidos describes it on the Fest Web site —www.thefestforbeatlesfans.com the fixture event began in April 1974 when he approached John Lennon with the idea of a Beatles fan convention, with films, special guests, live concerts, flea market, auctions, contests and many other features. Lennon responded with his characteristic sly wit, "I'm all for it. I'm a Beatles fan, too!" "Beatlefest" debuted in New York later that year, then opened in Los Angeles in 1976 and in Chicago in '77 and has grown steadily in the almost three decades since.

A fall farewell to the growing season

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the brisk days of autumn grow shorter, the gardens, and those who maintain them, prepare for a well-deserved rest. Years ago I was advised by an elderly gentleman farmer to expect hard killing frosts to coincide with a full moon and nearly every season, this prediction has come to pass. Under crystal clear skies and the mellow glow of the full Hunter's Moon, a series of hard killing frosts have coated the lawn each evening with a shimmering layer of silver-dusted cover of ice crystals. The tender foliage of impatiens, marigolds, begonias, peppers and tomatoes lies black and limp. For the majority of South Shore gardeners, Mother Nature has brought an emphatic conclusion to the growing season.

Although many perennials in the border have become unappealing as they prepare to enter dormancy, a few continue to offer spectacular fall beauty. Old-fashioned Sheffield daisies (Dendranthema) offer a multitude of soft pink or pale apricot flowers on 2-foot stems well into November. Clusters of small lavender daisies continue to delight atop the statuesque stems of Aster tataricus and are most attractive planted in amongst the handsome bronze leaves of 'Diablo' Ninebark and alongside the persistent yellow daisies of Rudbeckia 'Herbstsonne' or perennial sunflowers (Helianthus angustifolius). Perhaps the most dramatic architectural additions to the fall landscape are the ornamental grasses. An elegant, singular clump of Miscanthus sinensis creates a stunning focal point. Silky plumes shimmer in the autumn sun as they sway in the breeze providing textural contrast in addition to sound and motion, especially during the star! k winter months. These sturdy clumps are particularly lovely when backlit by the morning or afternoon sun.

The shady border also boasts a number of lingering star performers including the tall white spires of the autumn snakeroot (Cimicifuga simplex) that gently sway in the chilly breezes. Its distinctive bottlebrush blooms and attractive, divided foliage are elegantly displayed against the bronze foliage of a PJM rhododendron. Dancing on 3-foot stems, the pristine white blossoms of a late-blooming windflower, Anemone japonica 'Honorine Jobert', glisten in the sun's slanted rays. Existing flowers were singed by the frost but new blossoms continue to open, undamaged by the frigid temperatures. The stunning violet-blue 4 to 6-foot tall spikes of monkshood (Aconitum carmichaelii) provide a handsome companion to these sparkling white flowers. Magnificent, glossy, deep green foliage is attractive in all seasons given moisture retentive soils in partial shade.

Once killing frosts blacken the foliage of annuals and vegetables and the leaves of perennials become brown and crispy, it is time to start the process of putting the gardens to bed. High on the priority list should be the digging and storing of what are termed "summer bulbs". Canna and calla lilies, caladiums, tuberous begonias, dahlias, gladiolas and elephant ears should be lifted, dried and stored before freezing temperatures damage their fleshy storage systems. Use a digging fork when lifting these tender bulbs to reduce the risk of bruising, slicing or injuring the bulbs which could lead to disease or rot during their winter storage.

Cannas, callas, caladiums and tuberous begonias should be carefully dug and dried in an airy, dark place without danger of freezing for a few days. Cut off dead foliage and gently brush off dried soil. The corms of gladiolus should be dug while the stems are still attached to prevent injury to the bulbs. Once they have been lifted, the stems can be cut to about an inch from the top of the corms and dried in the sun for a few hours. Cure for approximately 2 weeks in a well-ventilated area. Some types of these distinctive bulbs may survive the winter in sheltered locales, but for best results, annual lifting and winter storage in a cool, dry environment is generally recommended. Take time to inspect dried bulbs for wounds, the presence of clinging soil or uninvited pests. Store healthy bulbs in shallow trays or boxes filled with peat moss, sawdust, perlite or coarse vermiculite.

I love the large, showy dahlias, but I have always found them difficult to resurrect after winter storage. They rot or become totally dehydrated over the winter months and rather than be disappointed for yet another season, I have come to treat them as annuals. A gardening friend who specializes in dahlias has offered me a couple of tips to improve their survival. Once dahlia foliage has been blackened by a hard frost, cut the stems back to 4 to 6 inches and cover the cut ends with aluminum foil or plastic wrap to prevent moisture filling the hollow stems. She tells me this helps the tubers to form strong "eyes" for the following growing season. Carefully dig and loosen the clusters of fleshy, tuberous roots from the surrounding soil with a digging fork 4 to 8 days later. Wash remaining soil from the tuberous roots and allow them to dry completely but do not allow them to become shriveled. Store the tuberous cluste! rs in a plastic produce bags that breathe; these are available in most grocery stores. Fill the bags with coarse vermiculite, sawdust or peat moss. Bags should be stored in the dark between 40 and 50 degrees and should be checked periodically during the winter months for any evidence of rot and discarded if spoiled. I found detailed illustrations and information about dahlia culture and storage on-line at www.dahlias.net.

power there must also come... great responsibility." While Follenweider isn't out ridding the world of evil like the fictional hero he depicts onstage, the actor acknowledges that sense of duty toward his audience.

"When I'm onstage battling the Green Goblin, the kids in the audience are so excited and involved," he says. "And meeting them backstage, still dressed in the costume, is really something. Most of them are a little shy at first, but they generally warm up quick. I remember shaking one boy's hand, and he said, 'I'm never washing it again.'

"It's nice, for me, to see them so taken with the show," Follenweider says. "For most of them, this is their first theatrical experience. And I definitely feel a great responsibility to make them enjoy it."

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

NOISE HURTS MORE THAN KIDS' EARS

It is already well documented that Baby Boomers and their children and grandchildren have been subjected to more environmental noise than any previous generation. As a result of this accumulated noise exposure, we put ourselves at increased risk of hearing loss. This is not the only risk posed by living with too much noise, however. According to new research, the clatter and racket from roads, railways, and other loud neighborhood noises can harm children's mental health. Environmental noise was found to significantly affect how all children behaved in class, their academic performance, their social behavior, and how easily they were distracted. The higher the levels of environmental noise the greater the impact on the children's mental health.

Put your child's hearing future, or your own, in the hands of a caring professional. It is the job of the hearing instrument specialist to find the perfect match between instrument and patient, regardless of the wearer's age. He or she will take into consideration all the many factors that will affect the success of wearing a hearing instrument. Let us do what we do best – call on FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER for testing, evaluation, fitting, a full range of hearing aids, and follow-up support. We're here for you at 80 North Avenue, Rt. 139, North Medical Building, Abington. Call 781-878-9723. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits, and Mass Health.

P.S. High levels of environmental noise seemed to have the greatest adverse effects on children who were premature or underweight at birth.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 30

A lunar opposition to Uranus at 10:19 a.m. can make for a hectic morning. Stop, look and listen. Allow yourself extra time. You can be most productive this afternoon. The Leo moon interacts with Mercury and Saturn until 4:51 p.m., when it becomes inactive. However, a 90-degree alignment of Venus-Neptune warns against making major purchases or decisions. You may not have all the facts. The moon enters Virgo at 6:59 p.m. A harmonious alignment of Mercury and Saturn makes this evening ideal for catching up on work or study projects, signing contracts or making practical decisions.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 31

A Virgo moon urges you to plan a busy, productive day. Tackle jobs you have been putting off; follow through on unfinished projects. Postpone launching major new enterprises for a few days. A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Neptune may blur the lines between fact and fiction. On the other hand, this planetary influence is prime for fun and games, tricks and treats. Mercury moves into Scorpio at 5:43 p.m., remaining there until November 19. FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 2002

The planet Uranus is slowing its rate of motion, preparing for direct travel November 4. That means that the first few days of November may bring unexpected surprises, discoveries or upheavals. Today a Virgo moon continues to place the focus on hard work. Instead of worrying about situations that are out of your control, keep your mind and hands busy with practical projects. Clean out, reorganize, get rid of items that are no longer useful or valuable. This moon aligns with Saturn at 6:19 p.m. and becomes inactive until 8:28 p.m., when it enters Libra.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 2

The moon remains in Libra throughout the day. However, Venus, the planetary ruler of Libra, travels in retrograde motion. This is an excellent time for renewing friendships or repairing relationships that have broken down. Get in touch with old friends and lovers. Mend bridges, forgive and forget past hurts. A lunar alignment to Jupiter sets the stage for social activities or romantic rendezvous this evening.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 3

The combination of a Libra moon and applying Mercury/Venus alignment makes this day ideal for developing creative projects, especially writing. Social and romantic activities continue to get the green light. Uranus also plays an important role in today's planetary picture, generating a restless mood. Be more spontaneous, adventurous. At 5:56 p.m. the Libra moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. The final windup to this month's new moon begins at 8:10 p.m., when the moon enters Scorpio.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 4

The dark side of a new moon is in full force and effect today. Spend time alone. The planet Uranus begins direct travel at 1:27 a.m., 25-degrees Aquarius. Mercury and Venus conjoin at 2:43 a.m., 5 1/2-degrees Scorpio. Stay busy with work projects; finish old business, handle routine chores, make repairs. The new moon culminates at 3:34 p.m., 12-degrees Scorpio. A lunar alignment to Jupiter this evening warns against overdoing on any level. Don't jump to conclusions or act on impulse.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 5

This day has its pitfalls. Slow down and use common sense. Don't makes waves. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Neptune takes center stage. Its influence enhances creativity, artistic sensitivity. On the other hand, making business decisions, purchases or signing contracts are definitely off limits. Don't take anything at face value. The Scorpio moon aligns with Uranus at 11:48 a.m. and becomes inactive. The moon enters optimistic Sagittarius at 8:01 p.m.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 6

Planetary weather turns bright and sunny. People will be talkative, upbeat and friendly. The green light is on for new starts of all kinds. However, know your limits and don't go overboard. Today's influences rate high for promoting your ideas or developing projects that need help and support from others. If you are working, it may be difficult to focus on projects that are tedious and detail-oriented. Give greater attention to accuracy.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 7

Yesterday's planetary patterns continue today. Start new activities before 1:17 p.m. At this time the Sagittarius moon aligns with innovative Uranus. At 7:14 p.m. the moon opposes Saturn and becomes inactive. This may be a lull period, when energy is deflated. The moon enters Capricorn at 9:59 p.m., evoking a serious, methodical mood.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 8

Roll up your sleeves and take on a full work agenda. This is a day to get things done. Zero in on business or career concerns, and make decisions or initiate action. A lunar alignment to Mercury makes this evening prime for working or studying. You can be most productive.

Huge wins for Hedlund, Bradley

State Sen. Robert Hedlund chats with Carl Harris of the Hingham Republican Town Committee outside the polls at Hingham High on Tuesday. Hedlund beat challenger Ted LeClair by a vote of 2438-1169 in Cohasset.

Senator takes the district in a landslide

By Jeanne M. Rideout

One by one last night, incumbent state Sen. Robert Hedlund took each town in the Plymouth and Norfolk District.

At 9:15 p.m., station WATD declared Hedlund the winner.

At 9:30 p.m., Hedlund's challenger, Marshfield Democrat Ted LeClair, conceded.

At the Red Parrot in Hull, the mood was exuberant as Hedlund saw his "biggest win ever."

"I guess this proved a lot of pundits wrong who said it was going to be close," Hedlund said to a crowd of supporters. "A lot of people put too much stock in the number of signs around. My opponent was formidable: He raised a lot of money and had a built in machine. But it is people who vote, not yard signs. We've got a lot done for the district and that is what matters in the long run."

"This is a very, very good night," Ted Langill, Hedlund's campaign manager said. "Bob's won everything."

Bradley rakes in the votes

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

With his daughter Amanda on his hip, and his wife Heather and daughter Emma in tow, Garrett Bradley stepped into the Sons of Italy in Hingham at 9:15 p.m. Tuesday night to a hall packed with of supporters and bedecked in red and white.

The crowd promptly erupted into cheers at his arrival, already aware that he had won a second term as the Third Plymouth District State Representative after taking nearly 68 percent of the district-wide vote.

Republican Nathaniel Palmer — who beat Bradley to his own party — immediately strode over to the winner and congratulated Bradley on his victory.

"Nathaniel came over here which was an extremely classy thing to do," said Bradley. "He said, 'Great race' and I really appreciate that. His campaign took a lot out of their personal lives to run, and they raised the level of debate and we had a good debate on the issues."

Bradley saw this race as a referendum on his performance during his first term.

"I ran on my record," said

Businessman being run into the ground

Service station owner inherits contamination

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

"I tried to do it the proper legal way, but I found out the hard way that the legal system doesn't work."
— Frank Scarpino

Francesco Scarpino is a mechanic's mechanic.

His fingernails are black with grease and he punctuates many of his sentences with profanity. He wears blue coveralls with his name "Franc" stitched on to the right chest and appears proud of the cuts and scrapes that mark his hands and forearms — battle scars from his tussles with rusted bolts.

But since he bought the service station at 151 South Main St. 15 years ago, that work — which he obviously loves — has been tinged with things other than tune-ups and oil changes.

"I bought this place to be my retirement," said Scarpino, as he surveys the land through the windows of his cluttered office. "Right now, I am just trying to make a living, which is something I am going to be forced to do well into my old age."

The reason why? Contamination.

In 1987, Scarpino began to search for a new location for his Hingham-based auto repair business. He came across the property owned by former Cohasset resident Francis J. Marks, who lived on Sohier Street. The site had been used as a gas station since at least the early 1950s, with some records suggesting that it was used in this capacity as early as the 1920s.

"I was told that when you buy a commercial property, you always have to do a 21E, which is a testing of the grounds," said Scarpino. "This document was presented to me, I let an attorney take a look at it. If the document says the place is clean, that is it the place is clean."

At this point the only thing all sides can agree on is that it is no longer clean.

This week, the Department of Environmental Protection has served Scarpino with notice that his non-compliance with the clean-up has forced the DEP to the take over the project. The result: Scarpino could be liable for damages triple the actual cost of the clean-up, which is estimated at $900,000. Scarpino says he is broke. He provided the Mariner with a copy of a mortgage denial from the Hingham Institution for

ConComs want communication

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Hingham and Cohasset conservation commissions weren't laughing Monday night when they scolded the MBTA for not notifying them before moving ahead with limited brush clearing in the wetland buffer zone along the old railroad bed.

Although Cashman-Balfour Beatty, the construction company under contract with the MBTA to build the Greenbush line, notified abutters, local newspapers, cable-TV and the selectmen's offices in both towns about trimming brush back 10 feet on both sides of the tracks – the conservation commissions were left in the dark.

Joseph M. Fisher, chairman of the Hingham Conservation Commission, said he was surprised to see trees being taken down and wood chips flying all over during the brush cutting a few weeks ago along the right-of-way.

"There should be some communication, so we're not trying to second guess," he said.

According to Fisher — under state Department of Environmental regulations — only minor work for planning and design purposes can take place in the 100-foot wetlands buffer zone until the MBTA receives a variance from the

Assessors, Haddad meet on hiring issue

Elsa Miller, the chairman of the Board of Assessors, said she is now satisfied that the board's concerns have been addressed regarding Town Manager Mark Haddad's process for hiring a new Deputy Assessor.

The issue had reached a breaking point during the public comment period of the last selectmen's meeting when Miller accused Haddad of moving the process ahead "too fast" without properly considering the board's input.

But after an hour and fifteen minute meeting Tuesday, the communication problems between the board and Haddad were resolved and the process is moving forward again.

"I think it was a good meeting," said Haddad. "I believe that we addressed all of their concerns."

Design firm may solve flooding problem without disrupting village

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The Village Revitalization Project could have a big impact on village life during construction.

But thanks to the Waterfield Design Group that effect may be a lot less than initially thought.

Charged with adding a sister culvert to aid the flow of James Brook to cut down on flooding problems in the village, the Waterfield Group — which was awarded the contract last summer for both the village revitalization work and the James Brook Flood Control Project — commissioned a study on the water flow in the area. It was during this due diligence period that the company discovered fixing small problems in the current structure could be as or more effective than installing a sister culvert.

"I think they should be commended for coming in and drawing up a very innovative way to solve the situation," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "It's going to give us more bang for our buck and improve the whole situation even more than the initial plan."

The major problems with the current set-up are the build-up of sediment in the 60-inch pipe that runs under the village itself, and other obstructions in that pipe, most of which are other pipes which cut through. There is also an area of constriction that runs through the back of the town parking lot, where the pipe goes from 60 inches to 57 inches and back up to 60 inches again through the village. By alleviating these problems and some of their causes, the Waterfield Group believes that it can solve the issues identified, while attacking other areas that would still be problematic, or were overlooked. The best news for the town is that it will cost the same amount of money as the original plan, if not less.

"It's going to give us more bang for our buck and improve the whole situation even more than the initial plan."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

"It is potentially a lot less disruptive," said Craig Miller of Waterfield. "The prior direction was basically to install a new culvert in the downtown area, so what we are proposing now is not nearly the disruption to the downtown village and will actually take place in areas much less susceptible to public use. It really is a good solution from all points."

Based on computer models, the dredging of the current culvert, along with the other improvements in the plan, would allow the area to handle a 75-year rain event. The model used was the March 21-22, 2001 rain storm. That storm was actually a 25-year event, but because of the frozen ground and snow already on the ground, it behaved as a 75-year event. The converse is that it would only take a 10-year coastal event to force back-up up the pipe from the Harbor, but that problem would not be improved by the initial plan either. More detailed research will further clarify the problems, causes, and costs, but the Waterfield Group wanted the selectmen's go-ahead before proceeding.

Village revitalization is being paid for by a $1.5 million state grant and the James Brook project will cost about $1 million, which will be reimbursed by the MBTA as part of the town's mitigation agreement on the Greenbush project. Since the project is being paid for by the $1 million MBTA mitigation agreement, Selectman Fred Koed expressed reservations about going with a cut-back plan, feeling that if the money is there, it should be used for a new structure. But after being told that the Waterfield Group was no longer comfortable with the initial plan because of its studies thus far, the board voted unanimously last week (Michael Sullivan was not in attendance) to approve a "30 percent investigation" of the new plan. That plan will then be brought before the board in six weeks.

Flag depository at American Legion

The American Flag Code adopted by the United States Congress in 1942 says, "When a flag is in such condition that is no longer a fitting emblem for display, it should be destroyed in a dignified way, preferably by burning."

The American Legion, George H. Mealy Post 118 in Cohasset now has a way for the public to be able to bring them their tattered and worn flags so they may be properly and ceremoniously destroyed. Their new Flag Depository, located in front of the legion post at 98 Summer St., has the look and shape of an American flag. This solid metal Flag Depository protects the flags until they are removed for storage and kept until the time of the desecration ceremony. The Herb Chambers Automobile Dealerships made this new service possible through a donation to the post. Everyone is invited to bring his or her retired flags to the depository.

Halloween night a success

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

"I've been on the department for 24 years and it was definitely the quietest one we've had.'
— Police Chief Robert Jackson.

Halloween night has earned a rather rowdy reputation in Cohasset in the past few years, but this year's celebration was quiet, orderly, and a lot of fun according to Police Chief Robert Jackson.

Jackson credited a strong parental presence and community-wide cooperation, as Oct. 31 came and passed with lots of treats and very few tricks.

"I've been on the department for 24 years and it was definitely the quietest one we've had," said Police Chief Robert Jackson. "I think the parents supervised the younger children very well, they communicated with the teenagers, everybody was very well behaved and I am pleased."

Jackson said that the quiet night was something that the entire town should take pride in.

"The town should be commended," said Jackson. "It was a very positive evening, it's always good to hear good

Service station owner inherits contamination

Savings to back up that claim, but the DEP disagrees. The financial inability status that he has held since 1991 was not renewed, and his refusal to start work has left all of his assets vulnerable to seizure by the DEP. The town has put pressure on the DEP to have the area cleaned up, though its role in the operation is limited.

But the current situation – with the DEP and Scarpino on opposite sides – is in stark contrast with the way it started.

In 1991, when Scarpino's contract with Sunoco (he assumed Marks' contract) expired, he decided that he was no longer interested in operating a gas station ("I saw that there was no profit in gasoline,") and decided to pull up the tanks.

During the process, though, workers observed product (fancy environmental word for gasoline) on the groundwater table. Construction stopped and Scarpino's nightmare began – a nightmare that eventually cost him his house.

The discovery of contamination led to a literal unearthing of history.

Scarpino – in compliance with state environmental laws – commissioned a Phase I investigation of the site costing approximately $64,000. He also stopped making payments on his mortgage, which was still held by Marks. Marks sued and Scarpino counter-sued. Scarpino also sued Carr, the company that conducted the 21E.

The legal battle dragged on for several years – which cost Scarpino $240,000 by his estimate – and ending in a settlement when Scarpino ran out of money. Scarpino was credited with money toward his mortgage and paid Marks a lump sum to end their relationship. Scarpino was awarded more than $200,000 in damages from Carr Associates, but the company never showed up in court and was soon out of business.

"I spent about $64,000 to satisfy all of the bureaucratic paperwork," said Scarpino. "That covered taking things out, doing the Phase I, and removing contaminated soil."

But part of that money had an unintended effect, because the Phase I investigation, conducted by Monadnock Environmental Services of New Hampshire, turned up some interesting information.

- The methods of the initial 21E conducted by Carr for Marks in 1986 prior to the sale and updated in 1987 was universally deemed "inappropriate/unprofessional." (Marks says he hired the company on the recommendation of Sun Oil Company).
- Searches involved in the process also found documents that reference the DEP (or previous incarnations thereof) in regards to a "minor oil sheen" on James Brook, which runs behind the property, dating back to 1981 and 1985. The DEP certified in 1993 that those documents existed in the DEP file, but only duplicates enclosed in the Monadnock study were found during a Mariner search. There was no information presented to the Mariner that date back further than the late 1980s.
- Monadnock also unearthed reports that water needed to be pumped from the gas tanks on a daily basis in the last 1970s. Marks confirmed this but said that it did not mean that there was contamination at that time. He said it was to keep the water out of the gas mixture in order to protect the cars.
- In a later study, scientist from Groundwater Technology determined that the level of decay of xylenes (chemicals that are present in gasoline) on site indicated that the contamination was "5 to 10 years old" (back in the early 1990s) and "was not Sunoco product."

But the DEP, in accordance with statute, continues to consider Scarpino as the sole potentially responsible person, despite the fact that the law permits them to seek damages from anyone on the title chain who may have contributed to the problem.

"We would look for Mr. Scarpino to go after other parties," said DEP Regional Engineer Richard Chalpin. "We have so much to do that we ask the present owner to take responsibility and hire an attorney to sue whoever they see fit to join them in paying for the clean-up."

Where that leaves Scarpino is unclear. His previous lawsuit ended in a settlement, a result he attributes to the fact that Marks had taken out insurance on his mortgage to cover the legal fees, allowing him to drag out the process.

"I'm very angry," said Scarpino. "I tried to do it the proper legal way, but I found out the hard way that the legal system doesn't work. It all depends on how much money you've got. If you have the money, then the legal system works."

Marks says the sale was conducted on the up-and-up.

"I took the mortgage myself," said Marks in a phone interview from his new home in Coral Gables, Fla. "Do you think I would be that stupid to take the mortgage myself if I knew it was contaminated?" That is positively the most asinine thing I have ever heard."

But the DEP continues to move forward.

Only two months after saying the site was "not an immediate threat to public health," the DEP has taken control of the project, threatening to charge Scarpino in triplicate after they are done.

According to Ross Edwards of the DEP, who was contacted in August, the DEP was confident that the first round of testing of basements and sump pumps at neighboring houses – completed in April and May of 2001 – proved that there was no public health threat.

Now, though, under pressure from the town, the DEP has decided to redo the tests.

"The town has prompted retesting at the site," said Joe Ferson, another spokesman for the DEP. "It isn't a duplication of efforts, it is a retesting. I will tell you though, the project manager was laid off effective Nov.1 and that will slow down the analysis of the data."

The last time the tests were conducted, the DEP picked up the tab. This time, the onus is on Scarpino. The whole situation just doesn't make sense to him.

"I'm very frustrated," said Scarpino. "I have had no cooperation from the town and no cooperation form the state and all of the sudden the state is trying to drop the law on me. I have nothing to do with the contamination. This place has been contaminated for many, many years."

Push for trails along railroad bed

By Amy Lambiaso
ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

"We're not trying to shove it down anybody's throat. Right now we just want to see if it's possible."
— PATH founder Mark Fenton

Scituate selectmen have pledged their support to the citizen's group pushing for the development of a trail corridor to run alongside the Greenbush commuter rail line.

The Scituate-based group, calling themselves People for Active Transportation and Health, or "PATH," have sought support from surrounding communities, state and local officials for its Rails-with-Trails proposal running from Hingham Square to the end of the line in Greenbush

"We're not trying to shove it down anybody's throat," said Scituate resident and former Walking Magazine Editor Mark Fenton, who has been leading the initiative. "Right now we just want to see if it's possible."

Fenton has been working feverishly to garner support from state and MBTA officials in hopes of initiating a feasibility study to determine whether such a trail would be possible. Fenton recently received word that a letter-writing campaign led by state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, has compelled Massachusetts Secretary of Transportation James Scanlan to look into such a study.

Scituate Selectmen Chairman Joseph Norton said he too would write a letter in support of conducting a feasibility study and will ask Cohasset and Hingham officials to join in the effort.

Ideally, Fenton said the plan for a trail would include a 6 to 10 foot wide asphalt or crushed gravel surface parallel to the tracks, with the tracks separated from the trail with as much space and a secured fence to prohibit trespassing onto the tracks. Such a trail would not only encourage physical activity for people with access to a walking and bicycling trail, but would cut down on tight traffic and parking patterns around the stations by encouraging people to walk, rather than drive to the rail stations.

Fenton is hoping the MBTA will design the Greenbush line to accommodate such a trail in the future — effectively shifting the tracks to one side, still within the 20 foot right-of-way the MBTA owns, but leaving enough room for a trail to exist alongside it without infringing on abutter's property.

The MBTA currently has approximately 60 percent of the commuter rail design completed, officials say, and is scheduled to begin construction as soon as this spring.

"We need to talk with abutters to find out if we have their support," Fenton said. "So far we've received a lot of positive feedback from many residents, but we want to do this right. I'm sensitive to the needs of all the parties — including the abutters."

Fenton discussed possibly holding "coffee talks" with small groups of abutters to learn about their concerns with the proposal and different scenarios for the trail. There is no rush to build the trail corridor, Fenton said, only to gain support from MBTA officials in creating an accommodating design.

Grant gives big boost to purchase of Barnes Estate

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The Barnes property took a major step toward town ownership and preservation last week when the town was awarded an Urban Self-Help Grant in the amount of $250,000.

Thanks to a team-effort led by State Sen. Bob Hedlund – who personally lobbied acting-Governor Jane Swift twice to secure the funding – and the Cohasset Community Preservation Committee, the town has moved within $50,000 of the $1 million purchase price. Due to a matching funds commitment from the Cohasset Conservation Trust, $25,000 worth of private donations would cover the cost of the purchase without impacting the town's finances.

The latest contribution represents only a piece of the maneuvering that took place to secure the 32-acre parcel that abuts Wheelwright Park. The purchase is important because its preservation would protect the deep forest habitat that exists in the area. Any development of the Barnes property would directly impact and alter Wheelwright Park.

The cross-board, cross-organizational success story has its roots in the negotiations with the MBTA in the spring of 2000 over the right-of-way for the Greenbush line.

"This has been a very friendly undertaking, and has generated widespread support. Now we just need the people to come and vote for it."
— Rich Sylvia, project proponent

"The town was about to sign an agreement with the MBTA on mitigation," said Hedlund. "I suggested to them that it wasn't as good a deal as they could get, and I suggested to the MBTA that they needed to consider the loss of open space."

Those discussions led to a revised agreement that included $500,000 for the purchase of open space, since the Greenbush corridor existing in Cohasset was zoned as open space. Hedlund said Selectman Tom Callahan told him at that time that the Barnes Property was a possible destination for those funds.

Flash forward to the August of 2002. CPC member Rich Sylvia, who had a personal relationship with the Barnes family, orchestrated a negotiation with the land's holders for a price of $1 million dollars. Sylvia brought it forward to the CPC which passed it to the Selectmen. In September, Selectmen signed a purchase and sales agreement with the Barnes, agreeing to use the $500,000 in mitigation funds from the MBTA, contingent on a Town Meeting vote.

But what to do about the remaining $500,000?

In stepped the aforementioned Cohasset Conservation Trust which offered $100,000 of cash up front as well as $150,000 worth of possible matching funds. Throw in $50,000 from the Water Commission, the $250,000 from the grant and a total of $25,000 to date of private contributions ($50,000 after the Trust match) and the price tag had been reduced to $50,000 ($25,000 if that money comes via private donation).

"When you look at our revenues, we simply don't have the money to be the sole financial source for projects," said Stuart Ivimey, chairman of the CPC. "People can't be looking to the CPC to be bankrolling their projects. This project is the ideal use of CPC money."

Namely because it uses none, or almost none. The only CPC contribution was about $10,000 for appraisals and the initial sales agreement, an amount that was taken out of the committee's administrative budget. The actual purchase will not touch CPC funds.

The town adopted the Community Preservation Act at last year's annual Town Meeting. It derives it money from a 1.5 percent surcharge on real estate tax and some level of state match. Allocations are recommended by the committee and then voted on by Town Meeting. The committee's funds must be spent on three areas: open space, historical preservation, and affordable housing.

"Right now, our biggest obstacle is just having people come out and vote for it at Special Town Meeting," said Sylvia. "The Barnes family is very enthusiastic about the deal, they want to see it preserved as a wildlife sanctuary. This has been a very friendly undertaking, and has generated widespread support. Now we just need the people to come and vote for it."

Ivimey noted that this is a chance for citizens to impact their community without having an effect on the tax rate.

"This is a great opportunity, since the Cohasset Conservation Trust is going to match private donations," said Ivimey. "It would be terrific if there were additional donations toward this, because in effect, a person's contribution doubles."

Boards irked by train work

DEP and the expiration of all appeal periods after the variance is issued.

And even then, until the variance is issued it won't be clear what work would be allowed. [The MBTA needs a variance from the DEP because the Greenbush project will disturb too much wetland area.]

Fisher also said minor activity for the purpose of test borings and surveying in the buffer zone must be temporary in nature.

"In our view, taking down big trees is not temporary in nature," he said.

Cohasset's Conservation Agent Paul Shea said he was in complete agreement, adding that the Cohasset commission "was never notified" and that all it would take was a fax or common letter.

Holly Palmgren, MBTA environmental compliance officer, said the MBTA thought notifying the town administrators was in fact notifying the conservation commissions.

"My goal was to point out the failure in communication and address that failure so it won't recur in the future."
— Joseph M. Fisher, Hingham Conservation Commission

There also appeared to be disagreement between the Cohasset commission and the MBTA as to whether the certified vernal pools were properly identified, and if the wetlands were accurately delineated along that town's right-of-way.

Palmgren said the towns had been sent specifics about vernal pools and habitat assessments.

Tom Carroll, the community outreach worker with Cashman, read the list of contacts and the time and date they were notified before the brush clearing took place.

"I can very easily add you to the list," he said, noting that Cashman also sent out 200 flyers.

He also explained that abutters were consulted about what trees were being taken down. "We didn't do this arbitrarily, not willy-nilly," he said. Carroll also explained that wetlands areas were marked off with tape and not cleared during the brush work.

The commissions asked that they be contacted at least 10 days before any activity that could take place in the wetland buffer zones so the boards can make a determination if an order of conditions, for example, would be required. Things like sediment barriers might be needed, Fisher said.

"My goal was to point out the failure in communication and address that failure so it won't recur in the future," Fisher said after the meeting. "I think we got their attention."

Representatives from the MBTA and its project team, Cashman-Balfour Beatty and Rizzo Associates attended the meeting at Hingham Town Hall.

John Bewick, president of the anti-Greenbush group AfTA (Advocates for Transportation Alternatives) was also present.

Schools, town still looking to save the health program

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

"The question remains as to whether they will ask town meeting to fund the $32,000 in question, or if they will try to recover the money somewhere in the operating budget."
— Supt. Edward Malvey

As the Nov. 18 Special Town Meeting grows nearer, the School Committee's request are becoming clearer, though the situation is far from resolved.

At issue is a deficit of $32,000 needed to save the elementary school health program that had its funding cut just prior to the start of the school year. Michael Gill, the school health director, approached the board asking for a temporary stay, and the board agreed to fund the program until Special Town Meeting, when money to cover the shortfall would be sought. The board added the caveat, though, that if the town meeting did not fund the program, it would have to be cut, and the School Department would have to absorb the loss of the money the two teachers were paid in the interim.

"The committee is still committed to saving the program," said Supt. Edward Malvey. "The question remains as to whether they will ask town meeting to fund the $32,000 in question, or if they will try to recover the money somewhere in the operating budget."

Chairman Rick Flynn, is hopeful that something will be worked out to save the program.

"What we are going to do is go for the extra $32,000," said Flynn. "But if we can find it in our operating budget or elsewhere, we will withdraw the request. The schools and the town are still looking for money to fund the program."

The annual Town Meeting under-funded the school budget by $100,000 — a number that will be made up at the Nov. 18 Special Town Meeting to cover operating expenses. Initially, faced with an early-retirement and the need for a new school bus on top of the health program issue, the board was set to request an additional $99,000 — which included $7,000 for the retirement, $60,000 for a new bus and the $32,000 needed to save the health curriculum.

After meeting with Haddad, the School Committee decided to withdraw the request for $7,000 (finding it within the school department operating budget) and reached an agreement to hold off on the purchase of a new bus until the annual Town Meeting next year.

Lacrosse boosters fund JV team

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

"It's really a safety issue, plus the quality of our play can only improve if we improve our feeder programs."
— David Buick, Cohasset Lacrosse Boosters

Lacrosse is growing in Cohasset – both figuratively and literally.

In 1996, there was one traveling team (under 14-year-old boys), but last year – only six years later – there were seven teams (five boys' and two girls') with 178 players.

Now the Cohasset Lacrosse Boosters have committed to funding a junior varsity team at the high school to bridge the gap between the strong youth program in town (not to mention the middle school team) and the varsity program. From 1992 to 1998 there was a boys junior varsity lacrosse team (comprised of seventh, eighth, and ninth graders, but that program was dropped after the junior high split from the high school and there wasn't enough numbers to allow it to continue.

"Unlike many towns around here, including Hingham and Duxbury, which have freshman and junior varsity programs as feeder programs, our ninth-graders are thrown in to compete against mature 17-and-18-year-olds," said David Buick, president of the CLB. "It's really a safety issue, plus the quality of our play can only improve if we improve our feeder programs."

The CLB will contribute $8,000 ($4,000 for each team) to create a junior varsity program for the boys and girls varsity programs at the high school. The CLB has also requested that the School Committee include funding for the team in the FY 2004 budget.

"There is no promise that this will become a part of the budget," said School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn. "If they cannot continue to support the program it may not continue."

Still, Flynn sees the need for the program.

"When you have freshman playing against on a varsity team it is not a good situation," said Flynn. "The seniors are much more developed physically, and the freshman are new to that level of play. It makes for a potentially dangerous situation."

Buick says he understands that the board cannot commit to funding a junior varsity program in the current fiscal climate, but hopes that it will be considered.

"The School Committee and the Athletic Director said that they could not commit to funding the program, and we accept that," said Buick. "We are willing to see how we do in the spring of 2003 and then discuss the situation again with the Athletic Director at the start of the next school year."

The level of cooperation on the school side of the process impressed Buick, particularly that of Athletic Director Ron Ford.

"Ron Ford was particularly helpful throughout the process," said Buick. "He helped us find out how much it would cost to fund it and has been a great help in terms of scheduling and coordinating the referees."

Voters to have say on burying village wires

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Voters at the Nov. 18 Special Town Meeting will have the final say whether to bury utility wires in the village as part of the Village Revitalization Project.

Although a majority of selectmen voted not to recommend burying the wires – the board still wants to gauge voter sentiment on the issue.

"It would be nice if we could do it, but I don't think that it is an expense that we can take on right now," said Selectman Tom Callahan. "But, it is an important enough decision, and a long-term enough decision to let the town decide if they want to pay for it."

"It is an important enough decision, and a long-term enough decision to let the town decide if they want to pay for it."
— Selectman Tom Callahan

The article that will be presented will call for the approval of the "medium" approach, which would cost $800,000. There have been rumblings about the possibility of private donations, but thus far the project would have to be paid for with an override.

"Basically we all agree about the plan for revitalization," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris. "The only thing is whether we should underground the wires because we don't have the funding for that particular piece. If we are going to do this project, we should do it right."

The Waterfield Group will present four options at Town Meeting, ranging from full-blown "under-grounding" to the approach the selectmen favor: leaving the wiring above ground on telephone poles.

"We have been preparing the different options for the last several weeks, and have been discussing them with the selectmen and the Town Manager and the conclusion that they have come to is to present these to town meeting for further discussion," said Craig Miller, president of the Waterfield Design Group, the private company hired to design the village revitalization project. "It is certainly a function of money. We are comfortable with all of the options, but it is all a function of money, how much money is available to do them."

Open house, market place at Art Center

The South Shore Art Center will hold a Holiday Marketplace and Open House on Saturday, Nov. 9, from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. The marketplace will feature a select number of craft artisans selling jewelry, glass ornaments, clothing, soaps, holiday soft sculpture, and doll clothing. Holiday shoppers will find Arts Festival favorites Susan Arnold of Ad Libs Designs; photography products from Sandi Smith; jewelry by ek Designs; glass ornaments by Simple Syrup Glass Studio, and children's clothing by Fleece on Earth.

The activities at the Art Center will be held in conjunction with the Annual Small Works Exhibition, showcasing the artwork of many of the Art Center's 150 Gallery Artists. All of the work is small in size and priced under $500. Highlighting the activities on Nov. 9 will be the chance for all visitors to add their own artistic creation to a creative quilt. The Art Center will provide paper and materials for artists young and old, talented and those just experimenting, to contribute their personal touch to this giant collage. Steff Noering is NESCAC Field Hockey Player of the Week

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

GO BLUE!

All right Cohasset, you did it last year, lets do it again! The varsity football team beat Canton 20-6. Cohasset's record is now 7-0 and we will be playing the Green Wave at Abington tomorrow evening (Nov. 8) at 7. Last year's game against Abington drew as many football fans as a Thanksgiving game. The excitement generated by the fans helped to propel the Skippers to a winning championship season! We will need that kind of fan support tomorrow if we are going to ride the wave victoriously! Put on your warmest clothes, parade into Abington and CHEER THE SKIPPERS ON TO VICTORY!!!! GO BLUE, YOU GOTTA GO TO WORK!!

COLLEGE ATHLETE

Williams College senior Steff Noering from Cohasset was named NESCAC Field Hockey Player of the Week for scoring twice and assisting on another in their 3-0 victory against rival Amherst College during the first round of the 2002 NESCAC Championship last weekend. A graduate of Noble & Greenough in Dedham, Steff became Williams all time leading scorer and beat her coaches record from 1993 for most career points ever at Williams. Williams will meet Middlebury in the semi finals this weekend at Bowdoin College, Sat Nov. 9, to defend their 2001 title as NESCAC champions.

In addition, the talented Steff Noering was named to the 17-member North Team for the annual National Field Hockey Coaches Association (NFHCA) North/South Senior All-Star Game to be played on Nov. 23 at Springfield College. Steff leads the Ephs in goals scored this season (11) and is currently tied with head coach Alix Rorke '93 for most points in a career at Williams (100). In her college career Steff has scored 39 goals and has assisted on 22 others. I am sure that we are going to hear a lot more about this very athletic and competent young woman.

ON THE MEND

Cliff Dickson may not be the bionic man, but he is stainless. Eighty-eight staples, many metal twisties to hold the new femur rod, and a new hip. He is holding court at Braintree Rehab and is expected home sometime in mid November. He looks great and should be back on the water in Spring. Cliff and his family want to thank everyone who has helped out in his absence. The visits, cards and well wishes have been wonderful.

PUMPKIN EXHIBIT

American History Pumpkins, created by students from Ms. Henry's and Mrs. McNamara's fifth-grade class at Deer Hill School, will be on display at Pilgrim Cooperative Bank, South Main St until Nov. 9. Stop by and vote for your favorite pumpkin. Prizes will be awarded to the top bananas, I mean pumpkins!

BOARD OF TRUSTEES

Bourke Corcoran of King Street has been elected to the Endicott College Board of Trustees. Bourke is currently a therapist at the South Shore Educational Collaborative where he provides therapeutic and guidance services for students in grades nine-12. Prior to this position, he was an adjustment counselor for the Stoughton Public Schools and had worked as a clinician in the Department of Child Psychiatry at New England Medical Center for 20 years. Bourke is licensed as a mental health counselor, marriage and family therapist, certified social worker and certified school adjustment counselor. He has served as a member of the Massachusetts Association of School and Adjustment Counselors, Coastal Area Board of DSS, and the Coastal Area Mental Health and Retardation Board of DMH. He received his a master of education from Bridgewater State College and a bachelor of arts from Curry College.

Bourke and his wife, Merlyn, have been very active at Endicott College over the past four years. They have been involved in numerous fundraising and recognition activities for both the college and in memory of their son who passed away prior to entering his freshman year. Bourke Lewis would have been a member of the Class of 2002. The Corcorans also have a daughter, Elizabeth, who is studying massage therapy in San Francisco.

CHIEF EDITOR NAMED

Long-time Cohasset resident Brad Ketchum, Jr., has been appointed chief editor of Maine Times magazine, a monthly lifestyle publication that will debut in May 2003. Brad joins publisher Christopher Hutchins and assistant publisher Christine Taylor of Bangor-based Maine Times Publishing Company in planning the independent publication's launch. In announcing plans for the magazine, Taylor said it will combine investigative reports and analysis; features on active Maine lifestyles, people, travel, and events; and cultural and literary reviews.

Brad contributes nearly four decades of publishing experience, including two successful magazine startups, to the venture. A founding editor of Inc. magazine in 1978, he received national recognition for the publication's annual Inc. 500 business rankings and state-by-state reports on business climate. He also launched The Inc. Advisor, a monthly newsletter for owner-managers of growing companies. Brad later became founding editor of The Walking Magazine, a national health-and-fitness publication that attracted a paid circulation of 495,000 in less than two years. He served 10 years at McGraw-Hill, Inc., and four years at Yankee Publishing, Inc.; for the past nine years, he was editorial director of Inc. Business Resources, in Boston.

A native of Bar Harbor and childhood resident of Norridgewock, Me., Brad is the author of Walking Nova Scotia, a travel guide commissioned by the Nova Scotia Department of Tourism and Culture. A frequent speaker on small business and economic development, he graduated from Trinity College in Hartford, Conn., and completed the Advanced Management Program at Harvard University's Graduate School of Business Administration. Maine Times magazine succeeds the widely respected statewide newsweekly Maine Times. Maine Times Publishing Company ended the paper's 34-year run in April 2002 to focus on developing new print and online products for Maine readers.

CLASS REUNION

1997... C.H.S. Class Reunion ! ...Attention all 1997 graduates...we are busy getting messages out everyone, In hopes you will be able to attend our class reunion over Thanksgiving Day break. We have obtained the upper room of the Legion for the evening of Wednesday Nov. 27 at 7:30 p.m. Parents and friends of anyone in the class of 1997, who we might have been unable to reach.... please pass on the news so that all may join in a night of fun and reminiscing. Contact Matt Belson if you have any further needs or questions. Hope to see you all!

IT'S A GIRL!

Thank Heavens for Little Girls.... Congratulations go out to this very busy and happy family. Suellen and Thomas Durkin, 21 Gammons Road, are the parents of a brand-new baby girl, Caitlin Sue Durkin, who arrived at 3:15 p.m., Oct. 21 at South Shore Hospital. She tipped the scales at 6 lbs., 4 oz. and measured 19-1/2 ins. long. Her siblings, brothers Thomas, 4, and Daniel, 3, and sisters Micaela, 6, and Caleigh, 21 months, are tickled pink with her arrival! Caitlin's maternal grandparents are Joseph and Mary Sue MacDonald of Weymouth and her paternal grandparents are John and Rita Durkin of Scituate.

NEW BABY BOY

Snakes, and snails and puppy dog tails, that's what little boys are made of! Christine and Thomas Powers, 25 Powers Lane, welcomed their third son, Michael Drevins Powers, into the world at 9:09 a.m., Oct. 16 at South Shore Hospital. Michael has two big brothers, Tommy and Jeffrey. A lot of fun will be had in this home this holiday season! His grandparents are Grace and Peter Drevins of Westbrook, Conn. and Helen Powers and the late Dr. Edward Powers of Madison, Conn.

KEEPING A SECRET

I hear senior parents are great at keeping secrets! It's time to start thinking about the Post Prom Party 2003! Senior parents are invited to call in ideas for a theme to Kim at 383-2702 or email us at cohassetpostprom2003@yahoo.com . Theme ideas will be presented and voted on by all senior parents who attend the post prom meeting in the high school cafeteria at 7:30 tonight, Nov. 7th. But remember...the theme is a secret...shhhhhh!

WALK IN THE PARK

Pack 38 Tiger Scouts had their first meeting Saturday, Oct. 19. Jeff Forsdick, Cubmaster, and Jane Long, Tiger Organizer, with the help of Tiger Scout parents took the Tiger Scouts on a hike in Wheelwright Park. The following Tigers participated in the hike: Dakota Achin, Derek Benson, Joe Buckley, Jack Conte, Chris Dimodica, Connor Green, Douglas Jorgensen, Jack O'Brien, Jared Pratt, Joe Sestito, and Jack Stanganelli. Tigers unable to make the hike that day were: Rocco Laugelle, Brendan O'Connell, and Daniel Tangherlini. Since Jeff is so familiar with the park he was able to point out different landmarks such as Little Tipplin, Big Tipplin, and the skate pond which is Rob Lehr is working on for his Eagle project.

Everyone had a great time! Jeff took photos of all the boys who attended and placed them on a CD for each boy. We are so lucky to have this great park in the middle of our town. I agree, it is a wonderful park and so many things can be seen and learned while walking to and around it!

PSO CALENDARS

Attention all Cohasset residents. The Cohasset PSO Calendar is available for viewing with important dates, fundraisers, activities and events on the Cohasset PSO Web site, www.cohassetpso.org. OPINION

EDITORIAL

Taking control

Selectmen's meetings should not be breaking down into gripe sessions, at best, or arenas for personality attacks, at worst.

But over the past month that's exactly what has been occurring. It's time for Selectmen to get control of the meetings and shut down those who have no other mission there but to ambush their board or the Town Manager.

We're not saying that some members of other town boards, such as the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission or the Assessors, do not have concerns that need to be addressed.

Town Manager Mark Haddad may have overstepped his bounds by installing the two park benches on the common over the objections of the Commission. But the dispute between Mr. Haddad and commissioners was on its way to being resolved when Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan attended a Commission meeting to speak to the matter. So when some members of the Commission later used the public comment period of a Selectmen's meeting to chew out the Town Manager in front of the cameras, it was purely grandstanding in our view.

And maybe some of the Assessors don't understand the powers incorporated in the Town Manager Act that provide Mr. Haddad with the power to hire and fire, now that the town must find a replacement for the outgoing deputy assessor. If the role of the Assessors is being diminished due to the powers of the Town Manager, then that concern should be placed on a future agenda, when Town Counsel could be present.

We recognize the Town Manager isn't perfect and has clashed with some citizens in the past. But whether he is going "too fast" in seeking to fill the deputy assessor post is an issue that Selectmen should table and address after reviewing the facts. It can be embarrassing for everyone involved when Selectmen allow themselves to be pushed into a corner and then react without time to fully consider the matter.

No one ever said governing is easy, and personalities can conflict. While it's not necessary to like someone, it is critical that people in leadership roles make every effort to get along.

While we realize Selectmen are political beings who may worry about reelection, they still need to lead effectively so they can do what's best for the town as a whole. It's important they provide an openness so board members and other citizens feel they can air legitimate concerns, however, it is unacceptable to allow a small minority of disgruntled citizens to take over and disrupt the governing process.

Selectman Tom Callahan described the current state of affairs.

"This is now becoming standard operating procedure," he said. "If you don't like what's happening, don't talk to anybody about it to their face or try to work things out like adults, but rather come and just attack."

It's time for Selectmen to wield the gavel, and put these matters on a future agenda when both sides can be prepared for discussion.

Civility and mutual respect, even when there is disagreement, should always rule the day.

POLITICAL NOTES

GOP Region Five panel

Members of the press, Carolyn Ryan of the Boston Globe, Mary Ford of the Cohasset Mariner and Hingham Journal and Jack Coleman of the Brockton Enterprise, have been invited to Region Five of the Republican State Committee, which includes leaders from the counties of Bristol, Barnstable, Plymouth and Norfolk, to discuss the future of the GOP Tuesday, Nov. 19, at the John Carver Inn in Plymouth. Dinner will be at 6 p.m., meeting at 9.

The moderator, who has just returned from China, will be former Oklahoma Congressman and professor at Harvard Law School, Kennedy School of Government, Mickey Edwards of Hingham.

The meeting is open to the public but reservations are required for dinner. To RSVP call Polly Logan at 781-383-0031.

Another highlight of the meeting will be honoring State Committeeman Leo Bechand, who is resigning from the State Committee.

Chairmen of county clubs, Kathy Stacey of Plymouth County and Dave Farrag of Norfolk County, will report on future events and donations given candidates, as will town chairmen.

Chairman Larry Novak (508-581-8400) said all candidates are urged to attend and bring signs and literature for town chairmen.

Local control over affordable housing

TO THE EDITOR:

In Cohasset and towns all over Massachusetts, greedy developers with little interest in the communities they exploit (beyond revenue potential) are using the Mass 40B law to sweep aside local control and build projects far larger than the land can sustain or the towns can afford. Even state Senate President Thomas Birmingham recognizes the 40B law needs to be changed and has publicly stated that the law has been used by developers "not so much as a shield, but as a sword."

The proposed AvalonBay Cohasset project is a shining example of a project that is simply too big to be absorbed into a town that has just spent millions in overrides on new schools and infrastructure. Schools and systems that will likely be overwhelmed in Avalon's first year of operation. Our new schools are designed to accommodate 10 new families a year, not 200!

The taxes that Avalon generates (less than $1,800 per unit by their own admission) will not come close to covering the overwhelming burden on schools and other services they will demand. All this cost to the town and we still do not get the senior and affordable housing we truly need.

Recent Mariner articles and letters have pointed out the genuine need we have for senior and affordable housing. Roughly 15 percent of Cohasset citizens are over 65 and the Senior Housing study done a couple of years ago suggests that literally hundreds of them would like to downsize and stay in town, but can't find affordable options. In addition, dozens of teachers, firefighters, police and others who have lived their lives in town are being forced out by escalating prices. We owe it to ourselves and to them to support a more intelligent approach to local housing legislation and to work to take back control of our future from developers and a badly written law.

There are several things you can do.

1. Attend the upcoming ZBA Hearings on the AvalonBay 40B project to voice your concerns and understand the issues: Nov. 14: Drainage and Septic Dec. 2: Health & Environment Dec. 16: Public Safety Jan. 6: Infrastructure and schools Jan. 27: Affordable & Senior Housing

2. There are three articles on the Nov. 18 Special Town Meeting that need your support to help us wrestle control of our future back from the state and the developers. I urge you to vote in favor of the Senior Overlay district and the two 40B articles to help get us the housing we need that is the right size and scale and is integrated into the community...not 254 luxury apartments stuck on our last big commercial lot where it will only add traffic, water and safety hazards, not to mention the nearly 10 percent population increase that comes with it.

3. Join us in raising awareness and funds to support the fight to give local control back to communities, not to state sponsored developers.

Heartfelt thanks

TO THE EDITOR:

To the Cohasset Fire Department

Dear Chief Lincoln:

My daughter was one of the passengers in the automobile accident on Beechwood Street on the night of Friday, Oct. 25. I am writing this letter to thank you and your department for your magnificent response to that emergency.

When the auto finally came to a stop, my daughter had broken her rib and had sustained multiple lacerations, bruises and sprains. She was bleeding profusely, lapsing in and out of consciousness, and trapped in the wreckage of the car.

Sergeant Quigley of the Cohasset Police provided me with a copy of the Emergency Call Transcript. Cohasset's Ladder One was dispatched at 9:47 p.m. and arrived at the scene in two minutes. Engines One and Three were on the scene within three minutes. The EMS Unit, returning from another call, was on the scene within five minutes.

At the crash site, your men used the jaws-of-life to rescue my daughter and another passenger from the wreckage. I also know that they were prepared to respond if the automobile gas tank or other engine fluids had erupted in flames.

After the passengers were taken out of the wreckage, Paramedics Hugh Devlin and Laura Morrison stabilized my daughter, attended to her injuries and delivered her to Dr. Michael Hughes and his team at South Shore Hospital.

I don't know the names of the many other people involved in my daughter's rescue but I am told that Captain James Rooney, Frank Mahoney, Paul Bilodeau and Randy Rosano were on the scene. Please express my most heartfelt appreciation to all of these men as well as the rest of your superb team.

The bravery, speed and professionalism demonstrated by the Cohasset Fire and Rescue personnel that night was outstanding. I have no words adequate to express the gratitude that my family and I feel.

Editor's note: Mr. McKenney provided The Mariner with a copy of his letter for publication.

Halloween fair

TO THE EDITOR:

The Halloween Fair on the Common has been both a fall tradition and the South Shore Community Center Nursery School's single largest fund-raiser. It was wonderful to see the children in their costumes with their parents in tow, eager to participate in the activities and games. Although the previous day's weather was cold and rainy, the day of the fair could not have been better, the blue sky and sunshine making it a perfect fall day.

On behalf of the South Shore Community Center Nursery School, we would like to thank the people and the businesses for their support and generosity which made the fair such a success. Many thanks are due to Atlantic Bagel, the Village Butcher & Deli, the Silver Spoon Café, Fiori's, Maggie's Corner, the Red Lion Bakery, Dunkin' Donuts, Stop & Shop and Shaw's for their generous donations.

We would also like to thank the students of Deer Hill Middle School and high school who, through their affiliation with community service, student council, churches and scouting, volunteered their time and enthusiasm to help run the multitude of games and activities.

And finally, a thank you to our nursery school parent volunteers who banded together to make our Halloween Fair a reality. We are overwhelmed with gratitude. The time and energy contributed by all symbolizes true community spirit. Thank you.

A small world

TO THE EDITOR:

Having milked all that we could out of our 50th anniversary, we ended up with a trip to Bermuda in October; and on our only cloudy day we took a mini-bus to see the British Maritime Museum.

We chatted with Kevin, our Bermudian driver about this and that, airline problems, the Bermudian downturn and 9/11. We asked him why he went to the U.S. so frequently and learned everyone does because no one can afford the prices in Bermuda and that they all go to the malls in the U.S.

He asked where we were from and after saying "Cohasset, a tiny town in Massachusetts," he stopped the van saying "I just don't believe it" and proceeded to tell us his tale.

Kevin Hughes was in Logan Airport with his three very small children without his wife, whom he was meeting in North Carolina, when 9/11 hit, and like thousands all over the country, was marooned with little money and no place to go.

The airport took over and they were driven to Kimballs-by-the Sea, where they stayed for practically nothing for more than a week. They all ate every night at Atlantica for free and during the day, they wandered the town of Cohasset. They discovered the beach, the Strawberry Parfait, played on the Common with dogs and kids, and met many of the citizens of Cohasset. People gave them extra clothes for the children and commented how polite they were.

He told us that he and his children will never, never, never forget the kindnesses of the people, the beauty of the town and the experience of being here with his children with nothing to do.

Kevin asked us to please tell whomever we could that his family will never forget Cohasset, and this seemed the best way to do it.

Some good news for taxpayers

Can apply for state rebates

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It has come to the board's attention that many are not aware of the fact that State income tax rebates are available for both septic system upgrades and new sewer hookups. These rebates come directly off of your earned income and, according to those who have applied, are appreciable. The size of the rebate is based on the cost of the installation, and if more than a specific amount cited in the regulation, can be carried over to the next year for a period of five years. Provisions of the law are complex but are outlined in instructions given in the application for abatement which can be obtained at the Board of Health. Call us there for details.

In order to take the tax deduction on your State income tax, it is necessary to receive a verification letter from the Board of Health for either a septic system Title 5 upgrade or a sewer connection. The rebate is for up to $6000 or 40 percent of the cost of the septic installation or sewer connection up to $15,000. The a five-year carryover of any unused credit is allowed. The maximum allowable credit for any year is $1500. Instructions and forms for taxpayers are available from the state Department of Revenue, Division of Local Services, Telephone 617 626-2300.

The rebate is for up to $6,000 or 40 percent of the cost of the septic installation or sewer connection up to $15,000.

In addition, loans to finance repairs to failed septic systems are available to homeowners through at least 15 lending institutions throughout the Commonwealth. The program provides for loans at 0 percent, 3 percent or 5 percent depending on the homeowners income and market area. The minimum loan is $1,000; the maximum is $25,000. Homeowners with questions may call the Mass. Housing Finance Agency at 617 854-1020 or 854-1333.

Sewer hookup and septic system upgrade provide real environmental benefits. According to Carl Sestito, DPW manager, the hookup of homes to the central sewer plant may have noticeably cleaned up the pond at Ellms Meadow. We are not always aware of improvements in our environment because of improvements in our infrastructure, but those working in the area sometimes see things the rest of us miss. If you happen to know of locations where there may be conditions which should be brought to our attention, please don't hesitate to call the board of health and let us know.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

Too much baggage

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Well, another election has come and gone and I have a confession to make to you folks.

I voted for Barbara Johnson, the independent candidate.

It's not that I have any beef with the positions espoused by the so-called major candidates — in those rare moments during the campaign that they chose to espouse them.

They were just carrying too much baggage to suit me. In fact, after reading the Herald and the Globe and listening to the talk shows on radio, I'm surprised that they have been able to stay out of jail all these years.

Take Mitt Romney, for instance.

He's a known "sexist," of course. Didn't he tell Shannon O'Brien in their last debate that something she did or said or whatever was "unbecoming?" When is the last time you heard someone tell a man that the tie or the vest he was wearing was "becoming?" Clearly, a violation of the 19th amendment.

He's probably a racist, too, although that charge didn't appear in the papers and was brought up only rarely by callers to talk shows, most of whom were hung up on forthwith. Seems Mitt's a Mormon and didn't that church for a long time refuse to accept blacks . . . er, African-Americans as church elders?

Didn't Mitt brag how he saved the Salt Lake City Winter Olympics and turned them into a success when the only things that people will remember of the 2002 games was that the figure skating was fixed and Steve Harris, the Herald reporter, was denied entrance to a venue despite his valid credentials?

Shannon O'Brien didn't escape with the muck raked up from her past, either.

Isn't she married to a lobbyist named Emmett, who will known forever as "Enron Emmett" because he once lobbied for Enron, the energy company that went belly up, taking with it the life savings of its employees as well as their pensions? And Shannon, who invested state funds in Enron, did nothing about it.

As state treasurer, didn't she invest $2.4 million in a capital fund that was part owner of a steel company that went bankrupt, leaving more than 2,000 employees jobless? Didn't she invest $75 million in state funds in a group that owns an electronics company that laid off 800 employees? And Shannon did nothing about that either.

Of course, those laid off are not just employees or even workers. They are, in political parlance, "hard-working (fill in the name of the state) families." But I digress . . .

Both candidates are guilty of accepting endorsements and visits of support from men of less than honorable character. Didn't Mitt's pal Rudy Giuliani, the former mayor of New York, entertain a woman who was not his wife in the mayor's mansion until a judge told him to stop? And didn't Shannon's friend Bill Clinton . . . well, at least he didn't bring Monica with him?

Barbara Johnson? I don't have the foggiest idea where she stands on anything. But at least the papers and the talk shows haven't got anything on her.

Confusion over senior housing issue

LOCAL VIEW

TERRY MCCARTHY

As a senior I have been following the proposals for affordable senior housing with great interest. I believe, as the Elderly Affairs Council and the Senior Housing Committee believe, that there is a need for affordable senior housing in Cohasset. The problem I'm having is that nobody has defined that need. I feel this lack of a clear, specific need (based on real data) is partly responsible for the confusion, misunderstandings and misinterpretations that exist in the public's mind. Here are some reasons why.

Anecdotal presentations. In a Senior Housing Committee (SHC) meeting there was a very enthusiastic presentation about the town-owned site behind the Stop & Shop. This meeting was to decide whether to pull the Overlay District article from the November warrant. No vote was taken at that meeting but there appeared to be a sentiment to shift focus from a generalized Overlay concept to a specific plan to use the site mentioned. During this meeting a hypothetical senior homeowner with an $800,000 property who was house rich and cash poor was advanced as a typical Cohasset resident.

Subsequently, at the Community Preservation Committee (CPC) meeting to consider a $10,000 funding request for financial planning from the SHC, there were more anecdotal stories with a new potential beneficiary of the affordable senior housing efforts. This was the "Cohasset connection." This hypothetical situation involved the mother-in-law, recently widowed, of a senior resident of Cohasset. The thought was that the mother-in-law could be moved into Cohasset Senior Housing allowing her family to be close and to care for her. As sympathetic as I am to these specific situations, I believe the hypothetical stories of potential uses of the senior housing coupled with the lack of a stated specific need inclined the CPC to deny the funding request in a very close vote.

You got my attention! I also learned that the SHC's funding request for $10,000 from the CPC was only stage one of a two stage request: the second stage was for $2 million. When the order of magnitude goes from $10,000 to $2.01 million, everyone in the room paid closer attention. And let's face it, anecdotal information and hypothetical situations might get $10,000 but probably never achieve another $2 million.

The problem I'm having is that nobody has defined that need

"Permitting data." In the two meetings above there was much quoting of what I'm calling "permitting data." Permitting data is secondary source data that sets restrictions on various applications. In other words it is what is permitted by law for the circumstances presented. For example, the SHC received an engineering study done in March of 2002 by Coler & Colantonio of Norwell. The study produced two conceptual uses of the town land behind the Stop & Shop for senior housing. One concept was for town homes; the second was for two larger buildings. Land use restrictions on the site when applied to the concepts, "permit" 40 units of town homes and 60 units in the two larger buildings. To my knowledge there has been no correlation between the number of units permitted by land use restrictions and the need for senior housing units. In other words, how many of the total senior housing units needed in Cohasset does this project provide?

Another use of "permitting" data presented in the two meeting I've attended and are now embedded in Art. 8 on the November warrant, is the language of the "Senior Multi-Family Residence Overlay District." The irony is that this language is a 40B look alike. It is language that permits certain limit and use percentages for (1) market rate and (2) affordable rates, then splits (2) affordable rates into (2a) affordable moderate income, and (2b) affordable low-income. And it does a lot more. What seems important is these are numbers and formulas created as a generic model for every city and town in the Commonwealth. The question ought to be does it fit Cohasset? I don' t see a need for an Overlay District. I do see a need for senior housing, sooner rather than later.

Outside Models. The SHC has done yeoman work in visiting senior housing programs in the South Shore area. Programs in Duxbury and Hingham are most frequently mentioned as possible models for Cohasset. While these visits have been woven into the presentations it is tough to come to conclusions without that "specific need" for Cohasset senior housing.

"Always mentioned, never quoted." Every presentation I've attended has mentioned the survey done of Cohasset seniors by The Center for Social Policy at the McCormack Institute at UMass. I have never heard any of the statistics quoted to support a point. A review of the executive summary shows why. The data are too generic to build a compelling argument upon or to establish a set of goals based on the specific needs of Cohasset seniors.

The end, almost. I am not opposed to affordable senior housing. I am opposed to what appear to be blank checks or redundant expenditures particularly in today's economic climate. I am in favor of affordable senior housing but I need to understand what my taxes are paying for.

Power of the Hull lawsuit

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

How does the South Shore get to the tables of power in Greater Boston? When Judge Hely dismissed the Hull lawsuit against Massport in October, the case had already advanced the towns many moves on the game board. In an update this week, Attorney Bill Golden said the Hull case was given an expedited schedule. To meet the court date, the team concentrated on taking depositions of Massport insiders and aviation experts. The South Shore towns now own a rich library of evidence to use in an appeal and every future venue.

When Massport started pushing a runway aimed right at the South Shore, the victim towns weren't in on the secret. If they had been at the table, the fight would have begun right then. Maps of the South Shore blanketed in jet traffic popped into view in Massport's Draft Environmental Impact Statement, and the South Shore has had a crash course in clawing its way to the political table where such nightmares are handed to the absent.

Massport says its routing of jets has to do with the winds. Draw a line from Houghs Neck to Cohasset. Most of the jet traffic to and from Logan airport passes over that line. What winds would be causing that? The South Shore towns now know what Massport means by "which way the winds are blowing." It is the political winds.

A strong message lives in the Hull case and outlives its first phase: the proposed targets of pollution impacts are serious enough to sue for their rights. Legal action is a tough language that brings Massport face to face with people it would otherwise ignore. The South Shore Jet Pollution Council has in front of the FAA route changes that could move impacts off our neighborhoods. Co-chair Don Levi reported to Hingham Selectmen that the routes "are now on track to be an integral part of the FAA-mandated Noise Study." Without the towns' tenacity in the Hull case, he doesn't believe we would be at that table.

The clout that the towns gained by the Hull suit informs and lifts the whole advancing waves of recent actions by legislators, town officials, residents, and appointed task forces. Garrett Bradley and Bob Hedlund make common cause with the legislature's Airport Caucus, creating leverage to eventually make Massport accountable. South Shore residents feed everything they learn into public hearings and share the real picture with the media, nudging them to swing round and support the communities.

South Shore residents are getting wrongly and unlawfully dumped on by Massport. Massport won't stop dumping on us and negotiate because they suddenly realize they are in the wrong. They will only change course if there is a political reason, and our determination, for the future, is to provide it.

Assessors Office

TO THE EDITOR:

Best wishes to Cheryl Pooler as she departs Cohasset after nine years as its full-time assessor/appraiser. Everyone associated with the Assessor's Office has a tough job in a town that is so dependent on the property tax and has such a variety of housing with valuations into the millions of dollars.

I wish your article had summarized the issues that Elsa Miller and Mary Granville presented in the one-page they reportedly gave to selectmen. Although I do not know the contents of their letter, I have some concerns:

a. The ratio of assessed value to sales value for:

(1) the 17 homes sold for more than $1 million during years 2000/2001 had assessed values of 58.6 percent versus sales values (sale value averaging $698,000 more than assessed value).

(2) the 93 homes sold for between $500,000 and $999,000 during the same period had assessed values of 65.5 percent versus sales values (average difference $233,000).

(3) the 119 homes sold for between $100,000 and $499,000 during the same period had assessed values of 73 percent versus sales values (average difference $94,000).

(4) year-to-date 2002 (through 090602), has narrowed the inequities significantly. Nine million-dollar-plus sales have been at 74.2 percent of assessed value, while 33 mid-range sales have been at 74 percent and 43 $100,000 to $499,000 sales have been at 76.8 percent of assessed value.

Personally, I think it is time for the "Committee to Survey Structure and Functions of Town Government" to consider making the Assessor's Office an entirely municipal employee department.

It is my understanding that the state requires a physical inventory of all town properties at least once every 10 years. This has never happened. My personal review indicates that Assessor Cards (which drive valuations) are unacceptably inaccurate. Many home improvements are being made without building permits being pulled and costed correctly. A cyclic process should be put in place for 10 percent of town properties to be fully physically inventoried each year. If the Assessor's Department needs additional staffing — fine — the result will be assessments that are more accurate.

I also believe that the Director of Finance should establish thresholds for coefficients of dispersion (c.o.d.s) for proposed values and that the Assessor's Department should present an annual report to the Selectmen that does more than merely set the tax rate. Additionally, "non-arms length" sales to include business and trust transactions require greater scrutiny.

Project safeguard

TO THE EDITOR

I am writing to thank publicly the Project Safeguard Committee for its educational event offered to the seventh grade students and parents. As a parent of 8 and 11 year old boys, I volunteered at the workshops in order to learn about topics confronting many of our 12, and 13-year-old children.

In one of the highlights of the day, Cohasset High School students performed a play called "Jesse's Journal" in which they read journal entries of their peers' experiences. Topics covered academic pressure, athletic expectations, experimenting with drugs and alcohol, body image, college worries, fashion consciousness, sexualized relations and dealing with divorce and alcoholism. Two threads apparent throughout these topics were 1. students' misperceptions about each other and 2. students' sense of isolation from true communication.

These weighty issues contrasted sharply with the successful morning workshop, a monologue on "rules of safety" involving juvenile humor and slapstick interaction which solicited open laughter and group participation from our seventh graders. As a mom, I understood the contrast between these two workshops as a clear sign of our kids' experience, where one foot remains firmly planted in their "childhood" reactions while the other foot steps toward "grownup" challenges.

My hope is that I and we as a community, grasp that our children are dealing with tough challenges now. Most of us are aware, but may we be ever reminded of the need to be "one step ahead." I think we need to be available as listeners, mentors, models and profferers of good life choices for all of our children. I imagine that none of us presumes that we will do this successfully all of the time, but I do hope that we can count on our community for backup as each of our children goes step by step.

Again, I thank Project Safeguard for the thoughtful event on Oct. 8.

Congratulates LWV

TO THE EDITOR:

I wish to thank the Hingham League of Voters for the excellent debate between Bradley and Palmer on Wed., Oct. 30. The moderator — co-president of the State League — capably ran the evening She allowed many questions from the audience so that the voters could understand the differences of the candidates. It was democracy at its best. This should set the standard for the future.

Town follows the state

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

"It was a great turnout. I was hoping for a 75 percent turnout and I think we got about a 71 percent."
— Town Clerk Marion Douglas

When the next general election rolls around in two years, pollsters looking for an accurate gauge of how the Commonwealth will vote may want to check out Cohasset.

Of the seven races and three ballot questions on the state or county level, Cohasseters voted with the majority decision on all but two. Only the state Treasurer race, where Cohasset voted for Daniel A Grabauskas (Timothy Cahill won the state) and Question One, which asked if voters wished to repeal the state income tax (Cohasset said yes, state said no by a slim margin) did not mesh with the overall state results.

"It was a great turnout," said Town Clerk Marion Douglas. "I was hoping for a 75 percent turnout and I think we got about a 71 percent."

The increased attention to the race, between the close Mitt Romney/Shannon O'Brien race for governor, and the presence of Cohasset resident Nathaniel Palmer running for state representative, led to a busy day at the Town Hall auditorium.

"It was busy in the morning and also when people came home from work," said Douglas. "But we had a steady stream of voters all day long."

Residents voted for Romney and running mate Kerry Healey over O'Brien and Chris Gabrielli, while boosting Palmer to within 303 votes of popular incumbent Garrett Bradley (Bradley won the overall election with 68 percent of the vote).

John F. Kerry (U.S. Senator), Thomas F. Reilly (Attorney General), William F. Galvin (Sec. of State), A. Joseph DeNucci (Auditor), and William D. Delahunt (U.S. Congress) all received the majority in Cohasset as well as their overall districts.

Cohasset also voted to end bilingual education in schools on Question 2 and against public campaign funding on Question 3, again in concert with the state results.

The town voted for Republican Robert L. Hedlund (State Senator), who won, but also voted for Richard P. Schmidt (Register of Probate), who lost in the overall election to Patrick W. McDermott.

Four candidates, Christopher A. Iannella, Jr. (Councilor), William R. Keating (District Attorney), Joseph A Connolly (County Treasurer), and Peter H. Collins (County Commissioner) ran unopposed.

But Hedlund, who was making the rounds at the polls at Hingham High School at about 2 p.m., said his day started on a downbeat note, but was improving steadily as the hours passed.

"When I voted in Weymouth this morning, I saw the lady's ballot in front of me at the check out and she had voted for my opponent," he recalled. "Then when I walked out there were 10 honks and thumbs up in a row and that shifted my mood a little bit."

Hedlund said candidates for office have a "sixth sense" about the outcome. "My sixth sense tells me we'll have a comfortable margin of victory later today," he said.

That may have been an understatement judging by Hedlund's sweep of all eight towns in the district.

A well-composed LeClair conceded at 9:25 p.m. with some self-deprecating humor at his campaign party at the Weymouth Elks Hall.

"This is getting to be too much of a habit for me," he joked.

"I have just spoken to Sen. Hedlund and congratulated him," he said.

"I ran a campaign with a commitment to improve public education. Whether or not you voted for me, this campaign was about people.

" I met some incredible people during the last eight months. I can't express how appreciative I am to all of you. We made a statement and because of the campaign we ran, Sen. Hedlund will be much more focused than he was two years ago," LeClair said.

With this statement, his workers burst into applause.

"We'll do it again, Ted," someone called out from the audience.

"When you do it, do it for someone in your town who is running for the Planning Board, the School Committee or the Advisory board," he said. "I decided to run for the senate because we needed change and a new voice. We lost but that was today. There is tomorrow and another day. I'm proud to have worked with all of you. Frankly I feel we did a helluva good job. I'm proud to call you my friends. God bless you all."

LeClair said his campaign was about getting results. Hedlund said he got them.

And the voters agreed, keeping the Republican maverick on Beacon Hill.

As the results poured in, Hedlund was riding the crest. (See accompanying chart).

Record turnouts across the district had hinted at a close race for the Plymouth and Norfolk Senate seat.

"We are encouraged by the historical turnout," LeClair spokesman Bill Stanton said as the polls closed at 8 p.m. and supporters began to trickle into the Weymouth Elks to await the returns. "No matter what the outcome, we're happy the voters turned out."

Hedlund has served in the state Senate since 1995. He also served a term from 1991 to 1992.

Hedlund ran on the image of himself as an effective leader with an independent vision, often criticizing his Democrat counterparts for voting with the Senate leadership, rather than in the best interests of their districts.

As the campaign wore on, both candidates accused the other of negative campaigning.

Neither Hedlund nor LeClair had kudos for Beacon Hill, where the budget crisis seemed to worsen daily, but they differed on how the legislative quagmire should be approached.

Hedlund said the lack of a strong two-party system is part of the problem.

"The rank and file member have ceded their authority to the leadership," Hedlund said. "There are very few people like myself who will vote for their district's best interests rather than follow the leadership What I am focusing on is my independence and my effectiveness for the district. I have stood by my district rather than follow the leadership."

Bradley rakes in the votes

Bradley. "I said, 'This is what we've done.' We won and we won by a bigger margin than last time, so I think that says I am on the right track."

Bradley received 12,785 votes to Palmer's 6,108 — nearly a 2-to-1 ratio — and managed to win all four towns in the district. Palmer was closest in North Scituate, where he lost by 40 votes (692-652) and Cohasset where he lost by 303 votes (1956-1653).

Bradley received 6,707 votes in Hingham alone, and added 3,430 in heavily Democratic Hull which provided the major thrust of his victory.

Standing back-lit by the lights on the doorway to the Bradley headquarters, his breath dancing in the cold air, Palmer reflected on his first major foray into the political realm.

"There is nothing that I would really change," said Palmer. "But I think you know best how to run a campaign at this very moment."

That being said, Palmer is proud of the way he conducted himself.

"It was important to me that I run a campaign that I could live with," said Palmer. "There were moments where people came up to me and said, 'You've got to do this,' but I wouldn't want to win on that basis and I sure wouldn't want to lose on that basis."

Palmer was unsure where this campaign would lead to, but was keeping his options open.

"This is the start of something," said Palmer. "I'm not sure exactly what it is, but this process has exposed me to things that I wouldn't have had entree into otherwise."

His only regret – that he had not succeeded for his supporters.

"A lot of people were counting on me," said Palmer. "And that is the only thing that is regrettable."

Both candidates said they were glad the grind of the campaign had ended.

"I'm glad it is over," said Bradley. "My wife says it is time to get out in the yard and rake up some leaves."

491 Jerusalem Road decision is pending

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

When owners Margaret Fitzpatrick and William Shelton bought the house at 491 Jerusalem Road, they had a plan.

Take what existed there and improve it, in the process making it their own.

The only problem was that they would need a special permit for any expansion of the garage because it was a pre-existing non-conforming structure, due to the fact that it is too close to the side property line.

Their initial request – which would have doubled the square footage of the house to about 3,200 sq. ft. – included three requests: First, a permit to "Square off" the house's northeasterly corner, second, to add a second floor of living space above the garage, and third to permit the construction of a stone stairway and a wooden stairway.

On Feb. 11, the Zoning Board of Appeals approved their Special Permit, but with conditions. Namely, the board "Denie(d) a Special Permit to increase the height of any existing structure which does not conform to required setbacks."

The applicants appealed to Norfolk Superior Court in order to keep the hearing active. Under agreement of all parties, the case was remanded by the court back to the ZBA for further hearings.

That hearing finally took place on Monday, as the applicants presented a revised plans that appear to deal with all of the ZBA's issues.

Gone was the second story garage, and the only request was for a 4-5 sq. ft. area that extends beyond the building's footprint, which would be used to square off the front left corner of the house to a 90-degree angle. The overall project had been cut down to 2,816 sq. ft.

"We have tried to do what we thought was right."
— William Shelton, owner

Still, the hearing generated debate.

Several area residents arrived at the meeting complaining of issues from increased traffic to the loss of view. The biggest issue, though, regarded the a ZBA decision dating back to 1955.

That decision intoned that the building should not exceed an 18 feet, but the applicant's lawyer is confident that the ruling does not affect the current situation.

"There was an old decision that was rendered," said the applicants' lawyer Richard Henderson. "It was never recorded in the Registry of Deeds, and actually it was in the Town Clerk's office, but that is not why it is illegal. It is illegal because it referred to dimensional restrictions such as height and setback and in 1955, by-laws did not allow the town to regulate dimensional factors such as height and setback."

The homeowners feel that they have shown a willingness to work within the process.

"We have tried to do what we thought was right," said Shelton. "It appears that there are certain objections that cannot be satisfied."

The residents of 488 Jerusalem Road, who would lose part of their view of the ocean after the house is remodeled, are still concerned by the project, especially in light of the past ZBA decision.

"There was a ridge roofline that was not to exceed 18 feet," said Ellen Morrissey of 488 Jerusalem Road. "If you consider that the present roofline is 12 feet and you are talking about an eight-foot ceiling on the second floor, then this is a very aggressive plan."

Joan McAulliffe, also of 488 Jerusalem Road believes that the new construction will impact the building significantly.

"It is too big for such a small lot," said McAulliffe. "I want to register my vehement opposition to the plan. I object to them building up and taking away my view."

According to ZBA chairman Woody Chittick, the argument boils down to the validity of the old Special Permit, since aside from the 4-5 sq. feet over the footprint, the rest of the project is within town bylaws.

"The issue has to with whether the early 1956 and 1958 ZBA decisions still apply," said Chittick. "It is an issue that we will have to resolve. The neighbors also brought up other issues regarding the impact on the neighborhood that will have to be considered."

Chittick said he expects a decision to be rendered in early December.

Boys unable to scale big hill

Booters no match for powerhouse Hopkinton

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

How quickly things can change in High School sports, especially in Tournament.

The boys soccer team soared into the playoffs, riding high after big wins over local rivals Hull and Scituate. They cruised through opening round action, pummeling South Shore Christian Academy 5-0, even though the coach told them to stop scoring minutes into the second half.

With their eyes set on making a trip to the State Quarterfinals for an unprecedented third straight year, the Skippers ran into the brick wall known as Hopkinton, and were simply outplayed, 4-1.

"They were just a better team than us. They were bigger, stronger, and faster."
Cohasset boys soccer co-captain and keeper Curt Kahn, referrign to Hopkinton team

"They were just a better team than us," conceded Cohasset's co-captain keeper Curt Kahn. "They were bigger, stronger, and faster."

Kahn, a converted left forward, did everything he could to stave off a vicious Hopkinton attack, recording well over 20 saves. Hiller senior Jeff Corey proved to be too much for the Skipper defense early on, recording a nifty first half hat trick that all but seal the game for the Number 2 seed.

The Hillers improved to 17-2-1 on the year, after running away with the tough Tri-Valley League. Perhaps the Skippers can find some consolation in knowing that Hopkinton embarrassed Cape Cod Regional, 9-0, this past Tuesday in the Quarters.

The lopsided games continued around the State in the Quarterfinals, with Bourne also winning, 9-0, over Norfolk Aggie, and Medway blasting Cardinal Spellman, 4-0.

Staying on course

Golf team's prospects appear to be on upswing

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

With three of the top four players back next season, and a whole lot more who saw time in the lineup, Torin Sweeney is figuring his Cohasset High golf team could start making a move on some of the monsters of the South Shore League.

It's the year after that, though, that has the third year coach really excited.

"I've got a great group of sophomores who are really serious about golf and who work hard to get better," said Sweeney. "I'm not saying we'll be passing the Mashpees and Harwiches in the next two years, but I think we could be real competitive with them."

10 of the 16 players on this year's team that finished 2-9 (2-8 in SSL play) were sophomores. This group was led by Tim Pilczak, a second year player who flip-flopped much of the season at the number one spot with Mike Hajjar, the lone junior on the team who has already been named team captain for next year. Both players were extremely consistent this season, with average scores in the low 40s for nine holes.

"Getting Mike and Timmy back next year is huge," continued Sweeney. "They're both strong, consistent players. Knowing I'll be able to pencil them in at the top of our lineup

Skippers take bite out of Bulldogs

Cohasset gridders dominate in battle of unbeatens

SPECIAL FOR THE MARINER

A 20-point explosion in a 10 minute span, last Friday, pushed the Cohasset High football team past previously unbeaten Canton, 20-6, and kept them rolling toward a showdown for all the marbles in the South Shore League tomorrow night in Abington.

With the bye week behind them and a packed Alumni Stadium rooting them on, the Skippers cranked it up in the second quarter, the passing of quarterback Mike Snowdale led to two touchdowns before the half.

Snowdale hit fullback Ted Straughn with a 39-yard reception down the right side line to set the Skippers up deep in Canton territory.

SSL title is on the line!

The Cohasset Skippers travel to league rival Abington tomorrow night for the first of two must win games for the Skippers in their quest to repeat as South Shore League Champions. Abington has a 3-0 record in league play, while the Skippers are 2-0.

Norwell travels to Cohasset next week. If the Skippers win both of these game, they will represent the South Shore League again in the Super Bowl tournament.

Abington is coming off wins over Hull and Norwell. In both games, turnovers were the difference, as Abington's offense capitalized on each opportunity.

Cohasset remains undefeated at 7-0, having beaten all of their Div. 5 opponents, while also crushing Div. 1 North Quincy, 34-0, and this past week they pummeled Div. 3 Canton, 20-6.

The past two years, these schools have slugged it out, with Abington pulling out a late game victory in the rain at Abington in 2000, and Cohasset getting revenge last year before over 2,500 fans at Alumni Field.

This is a must see game. So cancel your dinner reservations, take an early commuter boat home, leave work early with the 3:00 flu, and line up the limo for a short drive over to Abington to support the hometown team.

Directions to Abington Junior High School

Take route 18 south. As you enter Abington from Weymouth, there will be a Trucchi's Supermarket on your right. Take a left onto Washington St. Frolio Junior High School is approximately a half mile down on the left hand side. Take first left after school for field location and parking.

A real 'clock' cleaning

Lady booters done in by Ashland Clockers

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The girls soccer team may have been eliminated from the State Tournament in last week's preliminary round, but not before leaving their mark on the South Shore. They are here to stay.

"I think they did a great job," said fifth year coach Deb Beal, who led the team to the post-season for the first time in seven years. "And I think we can come back next year."

The Lady Skippers finished with a 10 win season, earning a home playoff game last Saturday against the 9-6-1 Ashland Clockers. Ashland plays in the always-intense Tri-Valley League, and proved to be too much for their hosts with a 3-0 win.

The Clockers were clearly the superior team, holding the edge in ball control and field territory. They went up 1-0 with a Jacquelyn Jenkins score 20 minutes in. The Clockers ticked into a 2-0 advantage just six minutes later, deflating the fired-up Skippers.

With just 35 goals in 19 games, the Skippers were not a very good come-from-behind team in general this year. However, junior Jen Buckley did a tremendous job shouldering much of the scoring load, leading the team with 12 goals and four assists. Gillian Weber, with a late season scoring surge, was second with eight goals and four assists.

Still, Beal admitted that knowing they were beaten by a distinctively better team was easier to digest than if they had lost a one goal decision to a team they might have been able to defeat.

MAXLAX REPORT

Championships were settled in all divisions this weekend

By Curt Mills
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

U10 championship

Mavericks 9, Lazers 8

Both of these teams came into the playoffs after being strongly tested in the preliminary rounds, but they clearly had something in reserve as this was a "nail-biter" from start to finish. The Lazers Zach Robertshaw opened up the action on a "standing tall" goal that looked like he grew a couple of inches as he put the ball over the outreached stick of the Mavericks goalie.

While the crowd was probably expecting more fireworks, what they got was a defensive clinic, as for the next eight minutes, the game remained locked at 1-0 with play that was punctuated by shots off the post, "crunches in the trenches", and repeated double-teams that stifled any offensive drive. Goalies Chris Waterfield (Mav's) and Dylan Hahn (Lazers) were magnificent, both chalking up double-digit saves highlighted by Hahn's double-save off of a shot and a rebound close in.

The Mav's Kevin Plant finally got his team on the board when he got open in front and Matt Mariano found him with a nice sneak pass from behind. Robertshaw again scored, putting the Lazers up 2-1 on a floating dodge move which also drew a penalty that would carry over to the 2nd half.

With a man-up advantage to open up the 2nd, Robertshaw wasted no time as he streaked down the side of the field as Will Contento gained possession on the face-off and put a perfect pass on his stick for an easy score. This tandem went at it again a few minutes later to put the momentum (and the lead) clearly in hand for the Lazers as they went up 4-1, but this game was far from over.

The Mav's stemmed the tide with a goal from Chris Meighan on an assist from Matt Allen, only to be stunned again by a solo tally by the Lazers Ty Martina who was left wide open on the left side. Allen then teamed up with Cabot Noyce for his second goal to keep the game in reach at 5-3.

Sensing that the Mav's were picking up steam, the Lazers dug in and tried to put the game out of reach with two more strikes, another from Robertshaw — on an impressive end-to-end rush — and the second by Matt Entwistle, who picked the corner cleanly. With a 7-3 lead, the Lazers looked to have the advantage, but the "fat lady" wasn't ready to sing quite yet.

The Mav's went on a tear that could only be described as DOMINANT, with four unanswered goals in less than five minutes, with Noyce getting two, another by Allen, and a solo tally from Jay Lenaghan that was a rocket from midfield that tied the score with three minutes left to play.

The Mav's then carried that momentum to break the tie on a follow-up score from Plant as the result of a penalty on the Lazers, but the Lazers Entwistle came right back with what would be their last goal of the season and, for a moment, another tie.

With only seconds left in regulation and with the fans anticipating another OT finish, Lenaghan scooped up a loose ball and somehow managed to evade a furious rush of players to find the net and secure the Mavericks win (and their Championship T-Shirts).

U12 Championship

Hawks 11, Jackals 10

Like their younger peers, this group's preliminary rounds were also hard fought contests leading up to these two powerhouses locking horns for the bragging rights.

The Jackals drew first blood with an unassisted goal by league scoring leader John Fitzgerald. Minutes later, this call was answered by Fitz's closest pursuer in the stats, the Hawks Eamon Davis, who seemed to be making a statement with not one, but two goals in back-to-back possessions. (Keep an eye on this match-up as you are going to be hearing their names A LOT in this column).

Connor Thomson then took a pass from Samir David as he cut down the middle and found the back of the net to tie the score at 2-2. David then put the Jackals ahead with a solo tally, but a fluke deflection on a Jackal clear gave the only unearned goal of the season to the Hawks and another tying mark at 3-3. Davis and Justin Yeager then capped the first half of play with an exclamation point by each netting one goal to put the Hawks up 5-3.

The Jackals were just getting started though, as they came out in the 2nd half and quickly brought it back to even on two more scores by Fitzgerald, who capitalized on his team's great defense play that caused a turnover, and a Hawks penalty that set up the second strike.

The Hawks were not going to stand by and watch this show and they upped the ante with some aggressive stick checking that produced several turnovers that led to another scoring drive by Davis. Quiet in the series thus far, Joseph Mulieri picked up a point for the Jackals as the beneficiary of double-team on Fitzgerald that left him wide open with an easy shot down low.

Fitz then got his 4th goal of the night with a double dodge followed by an upper right corner burst that put them ahead 7-6. Apparently, this just stirred the competitive juices as, in a display of sheer power, Davis once again found the goal by muscling his way through the Jackals defense on a fast break and then again on a 20 yard strike off of a broken clearing pass. Hawks up 8-7.

Mulieri liked what he saw in Davis' play and decided to try his hand at it as well and with some college level roll dodges, he scored once and then twice on almost identical plays. Jackals up 9-8.

Even though both of these teams had already played a full game and the clock was winding down on a very physical outing, the two contenders reached down and brought out the reserve. In the last three minutes, the stat table didn't have to look too far, as Davis scored on a walk-in, Fitzgerald countered with a rifle shot from the top of the box, and Davis one-upped him (for his 8th and final goal of the game) on another broken play caused by superlative defense, tying the game at 10-10.

With under a minute to play, the goalies on both sides stopped scoring drives to keep the teams even until Andrew Bell found Ian Porter sneaking up from behind the Jackals net and he put the game away with a low stinger that proved to be the game winner.

U14 Championship

Talons 16, Blades 11

These two rivals appeared destined to face each other in the finale as the season contests were all explosive thrillers that showcased aggressive defense, ball control, and intelligent game play.

Unfortunately for the Blades, the Talons showed them an "A" game that was a step above what they had previously seen during the season and this contest was decided early on as the Talons controlled the ball and the tempo for most of the game.

The Talons got ahead early on two quick strikes from Nick Stella and Jack Dings. Chris Mills got one back for the Blades on a strong outside move that banged off the high post and found the back corner.

However, the Talons "control game" then came into view as they decisively "picked their opponents pockets" to disrupt repeated scoring threats by the Blades. This precision turnover strategy paid offensive dividends as well as they quickly tallied an additional three goals, twofrom Taylor Sears and another one from Stella.

With the half winding down, the Blades showed why they were in this game with a beautiful give-and-go goal by PJ McCaw with an assist from Mills.

In the waning moments, however, the Talons wanted to leave no doubt as to who would rule this day as Sears and Stella both notched their hat trick before the end of the half, leaving the Blades in a tough hole, down 7-2.

The 2nd half was more of the same as the Talons continued to display outstanding team play on both ends of the field and the seemingly unstoppable juggernaut picked up where it left off with two goals by Alex Ferris and another by Sears, both strikes from the top of the box that seemed to be turbo-charged.

McCaw got one on the board for the Blades as the result of a penalty situation, and Mike Grimm got a solo tally on a quick inside out move that left the goalie scratching his head. This momentum was short-lived though, as the Talons "3's" got going again with two more for Sears and one from Zach Gray.

With the score getting out of sight, it would have been easy to understand if the Blades let up, but it only made them play harder as they managed to contain the Talons for another six minutes while also picking up two goals through precision passing and great playmaking. This gave Grimm his hat trick with five minutes left to play.

Matt Burgess teamed up with Mills on another picture perfect example of ball movement to inch the Blades closer and McCaw notched his hat trick to give them a late game pick-me-up. The final minutes were played more for pride than for the outcome as late game goals by Ferris, Gray, and Roly St.Clair were offset by the Blades goals by Grimm, McCaw, and Burgess. The Talons put on a great lacrosse show and they clearly earned the Championship hardware for their efforts.

Junior Mike Hajjar, who has already been named a captain for next year's golf team, should again be a top two player for the Skippers next fall.

card again next year is a nice feeling."

Sweeney provided a sneak preview of the future of Skippers golf in the final match of the season when he left his seniors at home for a showdown with SSL rival Carver on the Crusaders' Southers Marsh Golf Course, and won going away, 39.5-14.5.

"Getting that one-sided a win on another team's home course showed what these kids can do," noted Sweeney. "I saw a lot of improvement from this group on the whole this year, and it will be interesting to see how they push each other going in to next year."

Pilczak and Hajjar appear cemented in to the top two spots, while ultra-steady soph Colin Magruder appears the early favorite to slide up from the number four spot to fill the big shoes of graduating senior Greg O'Brien at number three.

O'Brien actually had the best record and average score (41.5) for the Skippers this season, and was deservedly named a league all-star.

"Greg is going to be missed, no doubt about it," said Sweeney. "He really committed himself this year, and shaved six to eight shots off his average from last year. Hard work is the only way to accomplish that.

And he'll be missed for what he did off the course too.

"Greg was a great leader, and a natural captain," continued Sweeney. "Mike Hajjar has some big shoes to fill as a captain too."

The other players being lost to the caps and gowns will be Pat Reardon, a three year starter who averaged a 46 this season, frequent starters Ross Lieb-Lappen and Roh Lehr, and Trey Curry, a player Sweeney said "made remarkable improvements this year."

"All of those guys helped us this year, and they'll all be missed," said Sweeney, "but I think we've got the depth coming up behind them to fill those voids."

Sophomores Jack Carroll and Chris Simms saw regular action this season in the top eight spots, while classmates Ricky Lordan, Brendan Ford, Dan Allen, John DeWaal , Andrew Lavallo and Elizabeth Stone also flashed encouraging signs in what opportunities they saw.

Next year's incoming freshman class is rumored to have a ringer or two and there is a chance the team could get a strong player who simply missed sign-ups this year.

Sweeney also likes the character of these kids on the whole, and was proud this attribute was also recognized by his fellow coaches who voted to award the Skippers the South Shore League's Sportsmanship Award this season.

An ensuing 15-yard personal foul penalty against Canton set the stage for fullback Braun Goodson to ramble 3-yards around the right side and behind the lead block of tight end Tom Anderson in to the end zone at the 5:39 mark of the second quarter. Anderson, who also handles the kicking duties for the Skippers, added the extra point.

The Skippers defense picked up where it left off prior to the bye. Cornerback Mike Dooley recovered a fumble to halt Canton's first series, then defensive tackle Steve Davis' sack forced the first of four consecutive punts by the visiting Bulldogs. The defensive front of Cohasset — senior Nick Spirito, senior Ben Lynner, junior Sean Connolly, along with Davis — had Canton's backfield scrambling all night long, as they racked up five sacks and forced errant passes throughout the game.

The Skippers' second scoring drive started at their own 38-yard line. Snowdale hit Anderson with a 29-yard pass to move into Canton territory again. Goodson then carried down to the 19-yard line, as the offensive line of Cosimo Cambi, Davis, Matt Casey, Nick Arment, and Dan Tarpey helped clear the way for over 100 yards of rushing offense while also providing fine pass protection, which enabled Snowdale to tally 124 yards through the air.

Sophomore D.J. Silvia then hauled in a Snowdale pass at the 10-yard line and spun off two Canton defenders to cross the goal line and score his first career touchdown with 46 seconds left in the half. Anderson's kick closed out the first half scoring, with Cohasset up 14-0.

The Skippers took the second half kickoff and proceeded to march the length of the field. Silvia grabbed a 17-yard Snowdale pass over the middle and Goodson followed the line for a 27-yard gain. Senior Goodson then scored his 15th touchdown of the year (placing him third in the Div. 5 scoring race with 90 points), rambling to pay dirt from 11-yards out behind a crushing block from right tackle Cosimo Cambi. The conversion play failed, but with 5:30 left in the third quarter, Cohasset had built a 20-0 lead.

Cohasset's defense was led by linebacker Tony Truglia (8 tackles). Lynner (7 tackles) and S. Davis had two quarterback sacks each, and junior Sean Connolly accounted for Cohasset's fifth sack of the night. The backfield of Anderson, Dooley (7 tackles), M. Davis, and John Durkin held Canton to six-of-17 passing.

Cohasset's scoreless steak of 11 quarters at Alumni Field came to an end in the fourth quarter as a 47-yard burst up the middle by Canton's big back Canton set up a 14-yard touchdown pass. Tthe kick was no good. On Canton's last possession, Senior Matt Davis iced the game for Cohasset with an interception inside the 5-yard line.

Offensive statistics

Passing- Snowdale 7-of- 11 for 124 yards, 1 touchdown.

Receiving- Anderson (3 catches, 44 yards), Silvia (2 for 36 yards, 1 touchdown), Straughn (1 for 39 yards), John Durkin (1 for 5 yards).

Junior Chris Clark recorded Cohasset's lone tally in the loss, scoring in the second half off a great assist by the team's leading scorer, junior Dave Santiago. Yet, with the Hillers giving their usual supreme effort to controlling the ball, the Skippers could muster only four shots.

Clark led the way in the Preliminary Round, where offense was not nearly as hard to come by. Clark scored two goals and tallied another assist to help his team advance, as he led the offense that amassed 22 shots on net in the first half alone.

Senior captain Evan Pestone had easily the prettiest goal of the game, and possibly of the season, to open the scoring in the game's 21st minute. Junior John Andrade, who has become a very skilled passer, looped a perfect ball right to his teammate's forehead, which Pestone buried in the back of the net.

Andrade pitched in again, leading freshman Aidan Buick on one of his two goals on the day. Clarke rounded out the scoring in the second half before coach Dave Nigro finally called off the troops.

The Skippers were clearly the aggressors in this contest, racking up 14 penalties to Christians' three. Kahn faced only eight shots, and there were really only two legitimate SSCA scoring chances.

Cohasset utilized the final 30 minutes of the game to work in some of their up-and-coming talent. Once Nigro pulled Kahn from net, the line-up featured seven freshmen and two sophomores.

"They will definitely have as good a team next year, maybe better," noted Kahn, who will probably be replaced in net by freshman Prescott Busk or sophomore John Littauer.

A real 'clock' cleanin year's starting keeper, recorded 12 saves for the Ashland game, including five in the opening seven minutes to keep the game even at the start.

In an attempt to keep the potent Ashland attack at bay, Beal brought in a few defensive specialists from her nearly undefeated junior varsity team. Sophomores Christine Lovallo, Rachel Garber and Nicole Whitney did a solid job holding down Clocker sniper Lauren Kelleher.

That trio will be a solid foundation to re-build the defense, after All-Star Julie Lordan and stand-out Katherine Coyne graduate. Juniors Brenna O'Donnell and SSL All-Star Holly Graham will be looked to step up even bigger in 2003 than they did this year.

The team will have to work through many key graduations next year. Molly Flanagan was a great presence on the offensive line with a dangerous left foot this year. Maura McKenney had terrific midfielder instincts with an ability to control the field at times.

Yet, after the success the team had this year, Beal thinks she is finally over the hump, and that the team-members now have the underrated intangible of knowing how to win. She noted that her players were so accustomed to losses in years past that they did not have the same drive to succeed that the current squad exhibited this year.

"Things look good for next year and for years to come," she said.

Confident that her team will make it back to the tournament, Beal will be looking to load up her non-league schedule with some tougher opponents to prepare her team physically and mentally for a playoff run.

OBITUARIES

Nana befriended everyone, including Cher during the filming of "Witches of Eastwick.

Josephine Emily Vangel

Josephine Emily Vangel, longtime resident of Cohasset, died Monday, Nov. 4, 2002 at age 88. She is fondly remembered by her family and friends as the "Meehan's Nana." Josephine was a familiar face at community and school events. She attended them all, be it swimming, baseball, soccer, field hockey, etc.

Josephine was also very grateful for the loving care of her community, especially the police and fire departments who always treated her as their own, the school department and, Wayne Robbins, Jr. who always made sure her car was ready to go. She drew great strength from the spiritual support of her church, St. Anthony's, and its Pastor Mulvehill and Father Healy. She looked forward every year to the South Shore Music Circus and Clark, Mimi and Peter who always made sure she was well taken care of while there.

Barbara Meehan, Josephine's daughter, wants to acknowledge how important it was to her mother that the young people in town always stopped to chat, especially her neighbors, and also how much Barbara's friends' ongoing care for Josephine via meals, prayers and concern enriched her life. The friendship of Bob Sceery, pediatrician to Josephine's grandchildren, and his wife Phoebe, meant the world to her. It was said of Josephine, who worked for a number of years at the dry cleaners at West Corner, that customers came "more to bare their souls than the soup stains on their ties."

Josephine will be remembered at the regular 5 p.m. Mass, this Saturday at St. Anthony's. Friends are invited for refreshments in the church hall following the service.

Paul S. Lawrence

Paul S. Lawrence of Golden, Colo., died Oct. 24, 2002, at home of lung cancer. He was 57.

Mr. Lawrence was born in Weymouth and was a graduate of Cohasset High School, Class of 1963. He married the former Joan L. Edmonds in 1968 and was a former resident of Cohasset.

A veteran, he served in the United States Air Force during the Vietnam Conflict (1969-1970),

A resident of Golden, Colo., Mr. Lawrence worked at the Colorado Department of Transportation for 29 years.

Mr. Lawrence was an avid bicycle rider, hiker and fly fisherman.

He leaves his wife, Joan L. (Edmonds) of Golden, Colo.; two sons, David L. of Crestone, Colo., and Peter B. of Boulder, Colo.; a brother, Peter J. Lawrence of Duxbury; a sister-in-law: Bonnie Ritter of San Antonio, Texas; several nieces and nephews.

A Funeral Mass was celebrated in Saint Anthony's Church on Oct. 31.

Interment will be Cohasset Central Cemetery.

In lieu of flowers, contributions may be made to The Historic Cohasset Central Cemetery, 44 Ripley Road, Cohasset, MA 02025.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home handled the arrangements.

Gladys Harkins

Gladys (Magner) Harkins, 82, of Cohasset and formerly of Hingham, died Oct. 17, 2002 at the Norwell Knoll Nursing Home in Norwell.

Born in Hingham, Mrs. Harkins lived there 35 years and in Hull for two years. She was a resident of Cohasset for one year.

Mrs. Harkins was a veteran of the U.S. Army in World War II who later worked at the Pentagon where she met her future husband. She was employed by the Army Corps of Engineers in Waltham, retiring in 1985.

Wife of the late Thomas I. Harkins, she leaves her loving children, Thomas I. Harkins, Jr. of Weymouth and Susan H. Reagan of Cohasset; a sister, Doris Ahern of Destin, Fla.; two brothers, Robert Magner and Dr. Peter Magner, both of Hingham; her sister-in-law, Margaret Harkins of Stoneham; her beloved grandchildren, Thomas, Michael and Julie Harkins and Jessica E. Reagan; and many nieces and nephews.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at Saint Paul Church, Hingham on Oct. 21. Interment was in the Massachusetts National Cemetery, Bourne.

Funeral arrangements were made by the Pyne Keohane Funeral Home of Hingham.

Donations may be made in Mrs. Harkins' memory to the Sacred Heart Elementary School Fund, 55 Commercial St., Weymouth 02188.

WORSHIP NEWS

Parish House dedication Nov. 17

First Parish Church of Cohasset will dedicate its newly renovated Parish House at noon on Sunday, Nov. 17, following the regular service. The Parish House is located on Main Street diagonally across from the Meeting House. A joyous reception for members and friends will follow.

Church to host 'Joy of Our Faith'

The Rev. Dr. Nancy Jay Crumbine, a Unitarian Universalist parish minister, Dartmouth College professor, writer, actor, and public speaker will present an intergenerational workshop titled, "The Joy of Our Faith," on Sunday, Nov. 17 from 9-10 a.m. in the Parish House, 23 North Main St.. Crumbine encourages people of all ages to project their voices through improvisation, while engaging her audience in discussion, thought and song. She teaches the projection of voice and the art of being heard with the spiritual task of delving into the heart. Enthusiastic participation is expected and entirely voluntary!

Crumbine will also lead the First Parish worship service that morning at 10:30 a.m. All are welcome. Call 781-383-1100 for more information.

Abbey series

Glastonbury Abbey announces its second speaker in The Glastonbury Series 2002-2003, "Listening to Other Voices: Hope in a Time of Uncertainty" on Nov. 21.

Guest speaker will be Patrice Gaines, who is an author, prison reform activist, and former newspaper reporter for the Washington Post. She has been featured on "Oprah," "Dateline" and on National Public Radio. Gaines will discuss "Hope: The Power to Create a New Reality" on Thursday, Nov. 21 at 7:15 p.m. in the Conference Center of the Abbey.

The talk is free of charge and donations are always welcome. For more information, call, 781-749-2155.

Pro-life movement

Dr. Mildred Jefferson, a pioneer in the national pro-life movement will speak at the Hingham Public Library on Sunday, Nov. 10, at 2 p.m. Her topic will be, " What is the pro-life movement, and what does it have to do with me?"

Dr. Jefferson was the first black woman to graduate from Harvard Medical School. She was also the first woman to intern in surgery at Boston City Hospital. She helped found the National Right to Life Committee and served three terms as its president. In 1996 she ran for U.S. Senate.

Jefferson is currently president of the Right to Life Crusade, Inc., and a board member of the American Life League. She helped found Massachusetts Citizens for Life and now serves on its board.

Her talk will be in the Whiton Room of the library. The talk is free and open to the public, but any free will donations are welcome. The talk is sponsored by the South Shore Chapter of Mass. Citizens for Life.

The South Shore Chapter meets on the second Tuesday of each month at St. Paul's Parish House, Fearing Road, Hingham. Its next meeting will be Nov. 12, at 7:30 p.m. For information, call 781-925-0323.

Holiday Ball

This is an off year for the Community Garden Club's very popular Holiday House Tour and the first year for their Holiday Ball. A limited number of tickets are now being offered for sale to the general public.

The Holly Ball will be at "Stoneleigh", 478 Jerusalem Road on Saturday, Dec. 7 from 7-11 p.m.. Stoneleigh will be decorated for the holidays by garden club members. Included in the decorations will be many club-member designed holiday wreaths available for purchase by means of a silent auction.

Guests will enjoy a buffet supper served throughout the evening. They will be entertained by a five-piece band playing music suitable for dancing. Suggested dress is optional black tie.

The cost of admission is $75 per person. (Cash bar).

This is a fund-raising event to benefit club projects. The club maintains the gardens at three locations in Cohasset — the Lothrop House, the Lightkeeper's Residence, and Constitution Park. The club also supports local beautification projects, provides scholarships for three deserving Cohasset High seniors, and contributes to many environmental organizations.

For more information phone 781-383-9689. Make checks payable to the "Community Garden Club of Cohasset" and mail them to One Windy Hill Road, Cohasset.

Pop-up book at Buttonwood

Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset will host Robert Sabuda on Saturday, Nov. 16 from 4-6 p.m. Sabuda is an artist who has taken paper engineering to its ultimate level. A paper engineer is an artist who creates pop-ups using paper as his or her primary medium.

The term "pop-up" is a catchall phrase for all moveable and dimensional art. His newest book is a pop-up adaptation of Clement C. Moore's, "The Night Before Christmas" (Little Simon, $24.95). The illustrations are breathtaking as reindeers jump from the pages in your hand and Santa rises up the chimney. His work is fascinating to children but is also highly regarded by adult collectors. Sabuda will do a brief pop-up demonstration at the beginning of his visit.

This is a free event and the public is most welcome. Please call Buttonwood at 781-383-2655 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

Picture book on courage

Bernard Waber, award-winning author and illustrator, will present his latest book, "Courage" (Houghton Mifflin Co., $15) at Buttonwood Book and Toys in Cohasset on Friday Nov. 15 from 3:30-5 p.m. Waber, best known for his stories about a lovable crocodile named Lyle, has written a delightful new picture book about the different types of courage. Types that normal, ordinary people exhibit all the time. Such as the everyday kind; like being the first to say hi in a new group, the admirable kind; like holding fast to your dreams and the heroic kind; like a police officer or a firefighter. Powerful in its simplicity and timely in its subject matter, "Courage" celebrates the moments, big and small, that brings out the hero in each of us. Waber will give a short presentation and a book talk as well as sign his book. This is a free event and the public is welcome. Please call 781-383-2665 to order your signed book if unable to attend.

Farm hands

NRAS artist shares rural reflections in Ventress show

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

From still life to farm life, oil painter Susan Davis captures bucolic beauty on canvas in her current North River Art Society exhibit at Marshfield's Ventress Library Gallery. Davis' show "Past and Present" will run through Dec. 14.

Davis, who lives in Holliston, describes herself as an outdoorswoman and a nature lover. Much of this is reflected in the collection of 28 paintings included in show, which range from portraits of farm life and wildlife to fruit and floral still lifes to rural landscape scenes, but all with common, dominant elements of a natural focus and a painting approach known as en plain air (in the open air).

The title, "Past and Present," simply represents the exhibit works produced over the past few years and up through the present since Davis began painting professionally in 1996. She credits a lot of the improvement in her work in that time to her training at the North River Arts Society, particularly in the highly touted classes of NRAS instructors John Kilroy and Marcia Ballou. Davis emphasizes that the classes are well worth the trip regularly from as far as Holliston to Marshfield.

"The title of the show represents growth as I've been painting over the past six years," said Davis. "Art to me is always an ongoing thing. You're always learning more about it and finding ways to get better at your own work."

Among Davis' favorites in the show are a series of cow portraits she describes as "whimsical," mainly where two of the three titles reflect the moods of the bovines grazing in the field. One, "Don't Bother Me," features black-and-white patchwork livestock which may remind some viewers of the Ben & Jerry's logo; the other, "Who, Me?," is the painter's interpretation of the startled expression on the animal subject's face. The other piece is titled "Three Heifers from Maryland," denoting where Davis traveled to paint on-location —something she often does.

Cows are a favorite subject of painter Susan Davis who captures rural life in her 28 works on display at the Ventress Library gallery. The exhibit "Past and Present" runs through Dec. 14,

Most of Davis' on-location work takes place closer to home. The contrasting two-work series, "Cool September Morning" and "Warm September Morning," painted in Holliston, depicts country road and forest scenes under the varying, accompanying degrees of shadows and light. Two other unrelated pieces were painted in Sherborne, the colorful, self-descriptive scene of "Sherborne Orange Fair" and the tall-grass meadows of "Schiavi Farm," with which the painter makes a subtle statement about impending development spoilage by adding to the title "...Soon to be Houses."

Other interesting landscape studies by Davis include scenes of "Lake Winthrop" and "Fourth Cliff, Foggy Day," the latter painted in Scituate.

The Ventress Library Gallery, is located on Webster Street in Marshfield Center. Gallery hours Monday through Wednesday 9:30 a.m. to 9 p.m., Thursday to Saturday 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Sunday, 1 to 5 p.m. For more information call 781-837-8091 or visit www.northriverarts.org

A new flavor of Eminem

Controversial rapper might actually be likeable in '8 Mile'

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Watch out, America. Hey mom and dad, lock up your teenagers. Eminem is back in the spotlight. And this time it's not just his vile, hot-headed lyrics leaking out of headphones and blaring out of boom boxes. This time, with the new film "8 Mile," we get a widescreen version of the No. 1 selling rapper in the country. But all that worry might be for naught. The Detroit bad boy has been cleaned up for Hollywood.

In recent years, the release of a new album by the white rap star has caused more than a few shudders. His raps are profane, misogynist, homophobic and violent. Women rights groups, gay rights groups and even Lynne Cheney, the vice president's wife, are all united in their repulsion. Eminem loses many listeners with just his lyrics — no doubt the Guinness folks have been contacted about the number of times he's used the "f" word. Other people are mortified by the accounts of his private life — reports that he's suing his mom, punched out a man who was kissing his ex-wife and waved around what turned out to be an unloaded pistol in public.

As has often been the case in pop culture, the controversy has worked for him. His latest album, "The Eminem Show," sold close to seven million copies domestically, mostly to white, suburban teens — more than any other rapper. But when the phenomenally successful rapper (real name Marshall Mathers) decided to leap from records to film, someone must have suggested that his image could use a little toning down.

"8 Mile," which opens nationally this weekend, is being touted as a story "loosely based" on Eminem's life. Yes, he was brought up on the wrong side of the tracks in Detroit; yes, he worked menial jobs while waiting to catch his

Lori McKenna: new and improved

New label gives Stoughton folk singer a nationwide audience

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

A new CD licensing deal has given Lori McKenna the chance to revisit her not-so-distant past. And also to give it a makeover.

In 1998, the Stoughton singer/songwriter released her first independent CD, Paper Wings & Halo, initially on the Easton-based Gyro label. The disc quickly drew wide Boston area praise and attention, picked up by a larger area independent label, Whately-based Signature Sounds, earning the singer New Artist of the Year honors from folk station WUMB-FM and landing on the Boston Globe's year-end Top Ten list.

The following year, McKenna added to this breakthrough with a Boston Music Award for Outstanding Contemporary Folk Act, plus appearances at the Newport Folk Festival and Lilith Faire.

The re-release of Lori McKenna's first CD Paper Wings and Halo includes three live tracks.

Last year, Signature Sounds arranged a new licensing deal with the nationally known Catalyst Disc label, bringing first-time nationwide distribution for McKenna's CDs. The new deal has also been a higher-profile vehicle for the release of the singer's follow-up disc, 2001's Pieces of Me, plus the more recent reissue of Paper Wings & Halo, newly expanded and deepened with three additional live tracks recorded in a show at Fox Run Concerts.

"The deal with Catalyst is a 3-5 year licensing agreement, one which we hope will really open up the possibilities of making my music available to more people with the national distribution," said McKenna, now 32 and a mother of four in Stoughton.

"It's also really cool to have the live tracks added on Paper Wings & Halo. I feel like the live stuff is always good for people to have on record, along with what we're able to do with the polish of the studio, because I really feel that the live perspective is what music is all about."

McKenna emerged on the area folk/acoustic music scene in the mid 1990s as what some listeners saw as something of an anomaly — a suburban housewife and mother raising her family just around the corner from where she grew up, hitting the stages of local music clubs with songs she penned at her kitchen table. But the same listeners also took note of the unique, homespun quality of McKenna's songwriting, rich with striking lyrical imagery delivered in a ragged twang of a voice that sounded like it should have come from the rural spaces of Texas, Kentucky or South Carolina rather than from a Stoughton homemaker.

Among its debut offering of studio work from McKenna, the original issue of Paper Wings had already included two other in-concert tracks from the singer, cut from performances at Cambridge's Club Passim and Easton's Blackthorne Tavern. The added live material includes an onstage take of the disc's title song, a poignant elegy to McKenna's late mother, who passed away when the singer was only six years old, and her late grandmother, who died recently.

Be it onstage or in the studio, McKenna's songs are highlighted by that bold, distinct twang, which is most often compared to Natalie Maines of the Dixie Chicks and which the singer said her manager calls "spooky." On McKenna's two discs, the voice is capable of conveying everything from warmth and passion ("As I Am," "Pieces of Me") to harsh, withering scorn, such as the ballad lament "What's One More Time" ("I have cried your name so many times...") and the deadly ironic "Pink Sweater," which gives the racist, truck-dragging killers of black man James Byrd in Texas, 1997 what they deserve ("I'll be the one the pink sweater/Dancing around when you're gone").

"A lot of people do tell me I sound like Natalie Maines, and singers like Nanci Griffith and Patti Griffin," McKenna said. "They wonder how I ever got this sort of Southern twang when I grew

New ways with whipped cream

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

I am sick and tired of lackluster whipped cream. It's as tasteless (and common) as a bad hamburger bun, a scoop of two-day-old cole slaw, or the lifeless pickle that adorns most deluxe sandwich specials. I wanted flavor and lots of it so that whipped cream really adds something to dessert rather than being a passive bystander.

The first problem is the cream which is sold as organic, natural, pasteurized and ultra- pasteurized. I tasted them all and the differences were subtle although they all whipped into soft peaks. I enjoyed the fresh, sweet taste of the organic cream best and found pasteurized cream whipped up much lighter and fluffier than ultra-pasteurized. In fact, one cup of ultra-pasteurized whipped into 1 1/2 cups whereas one cup of pasteurized whipped into a full 2 cups. So the winner was organic pasteurized heavy cream. Of course, the cream, the bowls, and the beaters should all be well-chilled for best results. As for the sugar, I found that granulated sugar worked best for a clean, sweet taste. (Confectioners' sugar left an aftertaste.) For one cup of cream I used one tablespoon of sugar to produce a pleasantly sweet whipped cream. The cream and sugar are added to the bowl and beaten on medium until foamy and then once the cream has started to thicken, the speed can be increased to high.

Next, I wanted to add flavor by using other dairy products. Mascarpone has a sweet, creamy taste, is rich, and should be left out for about 10 minutes before whipping. Four ounces added the right amount of flavor but I needed to up the sugar by one teaspoon to compensate for the added cheese. Mascarpone should be added at the beginning of the whipping process or it will turn out grainy. This combination is wonderful with baked or poached fruit.

Sour cream was a nice partner with whipped cream, turning out a very light but brighter tasting mixture. I added one-third cup sour cream to the heavy cream. As with the mascarpone, the sugar needed to be increased by one teaspoon. I also found it best to add the sour cream to the heavy cream at the beginning of the recipe instead of folding it in at the end. This variation was delicious with fresh berries, apple crisp, or blueberry cobbler.

I was prepared to dislike yogurt as an additive but ended up loving it. I added 1/4-cup whole milk plain yogurt for best flavor. As with the others I found I needed to increase the sugar and the best way to combine the ingredients was to mix them together at the outset. I liked this version with all of the serving suggestions above. Finally I tried adding buttermilk and cream cheese to the heavy cream. The buttermilk was too watery and sour and the cream cheese added little in the way of flavor.

As for specific flavorings, the winners included vanilla, orange liqueur, rum, brown sugar, and dark amber maple syrup. Losers included cocoa, instant espresso, and spices.

DELUXE WHIPPED CREAM

Try to find pasteurized rather than ultra-pasteurized heavy cream for this recipe. Organic cream has the freshest sweetest taste and should be used if available. If making the sour cream or yogurt variation they do not have to sit out for ten minutes at room temperature—they may be added directly from the refrigerator. The mascarpone is rich and sophisticated and is terrific with baked or poached fruit. The sour cream variation is lighter and great with fresh berries, crisps and cobblers. The yogurt whipped cream is the lightest and lends itself to any fruit dessert.

1 cup heavy cream (organic pasteurized, preferred)

4 ounces mascarpone cheese

1 tablespoon plus one teaspoon granulated sugar

1 teaspoon vanilla extract

Allow the mascarpone to sit at room temperature for ten minutes. Chill a medium mixing bowl and beaters for a handheld mixer in the refrigerator for ten minutes or in the freezer for five minutes. Add the heavy cream, mascarpone and sugar to the chilled bowl and mix on medium speed until foamy and beginning to thicken, about 45 seconds. Increase the speed to high and beat until smooth and shiny and forms soft peaks, about 30 seconds to one minute longer. If the cream becomes over beaten and grainy gently beat in a tablespoon of heavy cream to smooth it out.

Makes 2 1/2 cups.

Sour Cream Variation

Substitute 1/3-cup sour cream for the mascarpone.

Yogurt Variation

Substitute 1/4-cup whole milk plain yogurt for the mascarpone.

Flavor Variations

Decrease the vanilla to 1/2 teaspoon and add one tablespoon dark rum in place of the vanilla to the mascarpone variation.

Decrease the vanilla to 1/2 teaspoon and add one tablespoon orange liqueur to the mascarpone or sour cream variations.

Decrease the vanilla to 1/2 teaspoon and substitute brown sugar or dark amber maple syrup for the granulated sugar in the sour cream or yogurt variations.

big break in music. Yes, he had a terrible relationship with his mother — all of this is in the script. But it's far from a straight biography.

The film's director, Curtis Hanson ("L.A. Confidential," "Wonder Boys"), says he didn't want to make a bio-pic of Eminem. Neither did Eminem, Hasnson says, "because that could have been a trap. There are a lot of fans out there that know the specifics of his life. So if you were trying to represent them, you'd be taken to task for accuracy in the little details. It was more of a case of trying to capture the truth of the world from which he came."

That world, according to the film, is far from an easy one. Set in 1995, Detroit is accurately presented as a shell of the city it once was, and the young characters in the film are portrayed as men and women who are sitting around waiting for something to happen. They're dreamers without plans. They want to become part of the burgeoning hip-hop scene, but can't find their way out of the decrepit old club where contestants go one-on-one with only a microphone in their hand and a recorded beat behind them in a battle of the rappers. The words they throw at each other may be ugly, but they pretty much take the place of guns in the film.

The 30-year-old Eminem plays Jimmy, the only white boy to compete in the all-black club. And — surprise! — he and his pals are the heroes in the story. Jimmy has violent tendencies, and he's quick to curl up his fists and use them if someone does him or a loved one wrong. But it's clear right at the start that he's got a good heart, that he'll always be there to protect his young sister from his inept drunkard of a mom (Kim Basinger), and that we, the audience, are to root for him. Squeaky clean Eminem? Not quite, but he's definitely one of the good guys.

The movie is well-made, if somewhat formulaic. But Eminem, stepping up to the acting plate for the first time, hits it out of the park. Credit the rapper's raw talent... and his director.

"Because he had never done it before, I built a six-week rehearsal period into his deal," says Hanson. "It started out with just the two of us, then I brought in the guys who play his buddies. I thought that would help him to bond with them so when he was interacting with them later, he wouldn't have to be acting familiarity; they would've already established it."

And it turned out that Eminem, who Hanson always addressed as Marshall, also helped out the director.

"He had input on the film, and I very gratefully accepted it," says Hanson. "When I first was sent the script, the questions I had in mind were, one, 'Could it be developed sufficiently to deal with the potential themes?', and two, 'Could Marshall play a part in which he's in literally every scene of the movie?' So I went to Detroit to spend time with him to get to know him so I could make an educated guess. And once I became committed to doing the project, I tried my best to give him a helping hand into my world. But he very much gave me a helping hand into his world. He became my touchstone for the truth, in a sense. I asked him a thousand questions, and he introduced me to his friends, and I went to places he used to go. So he became a source of invaluable information."

So Eminem makes his acting debut with a soulful, often humorous, performance. But who's going to go see it?

Hanson admits that he doesn't know. But he has hopes.

"In terms of the audience, I was trying to thread the needle and make a picture that on the one hand, what one would think of as the core hip-hop audience, would enjoy it. And at the same time, it would be a movie that people who didn't care about or even like hip-hop might go to and get into that world. And when the movie ended they would at least understand a little better where it came from and what it was giving voice to."

"8 Mile" opens nationally on Nov. 8.

up in Stoughton. For me, it's just how my voice comes out. I remember when I was a lot younger I was afraid to sing because I thought I had this really ugly, creepy voice. Of course, I feel a lot different about singing now."

"I don't necessarily call myself a folksinger, because I know that certain listeners won't agree with that. The people who know folk music tend to know it really well. I just say that I'm a singer/songwriter. I like to blend all kinds of musical styles, from rock to country to folk," McKenna said.

A fall farewell to the growing season

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Scattered frosts, brisk breezes and intermittent rainfall have undressed many of our trees and shrubs, their silhouettes a stark contrast to those which still display their colorful autumn garb. The brilliant leaves of our native swamp and sugar maples flutter to the ground creating a multi-colored blanket on the lawn and gardens beneath their pewter gray branches while their cousins, the Norway maples, have only just begun to don their vivid yellow fall attire. Beech, willow, oaks, pears and dogwoods provide temporary splashes of glowing reds, golds and rich, lustrous mahogany tones to the autumn landscape. Burning bushes light up the landscape with fiery red foliage and oakleaf hydrangeas display elegant burnished bronze leaves on decorative peeling branches coated in orange-brown suede.

As leaves shrivel, curl and fall to the ground, fall fruits become more evident, the color of the berries often intensifying as temperatures drop. Ornamental crabapples produce bountiful fruits in shades of vibrant orange, red, yellow or purple. Crabapple cultivars bearing smaller berries appeal to many species of birds and flocks of robins, finches, and cedar waxwings often strip these trees of their flavorful fruits before winter arrives.

American dogwoods (Cornus florida) glow in the afternoon sun, their dwindling scarlet foliage accentuated by clusters of brilliant, shiny red berries, many of which have already been consumed by voracious squirrels, robins, mockingbirds and flickers. Nearby, the vibrant russet autumn leaves of the Korean dogwood (C. kousa) create an attractive backdrop for its dangling, fleshy red fruits resembling large raspberries.

The adaptable members of the Viburnum family offer many carefree varieties that display handsome foliage in fall and fabulous clusters of fruits in a variety of colors including yellow, blue, red and black. Among the most ornamental Viburnums are the European cranberry bush (V. opulus) and the American cranberry bush (V. trilobum) both demonstrating fabulous red foliage in fall and bunches of shiny, bright red berries that remain through much of the winter.

The stunning red fruits found on female members of the holly family (Ilex spp.) are well known to all gardeners. Evergreen varieties are popular landscape shrubs, their lustrous blue-green foliage a handsome addition to foundation plantings and shrub borders. Winterberry (Ilex verticillata), a native, deciduous holly commonly found in our wetlands, produces spectacular berries that persist through the winter months and are ideal for holiday decorations. I grow a large specimen of a winterberry cultivar named 'Sparkleberry' in my foundation planting. With the coming of spring, its abundant, small, brilliantly colored fruit quickly disappear, however, courtesy of returning bluebirds who spend days devouring the ripened fruits. To ensure bountiful berries, suitable male pollinators should be grown in relatively close proximity to female plants.

Perhaps the most unusual fall fruits belong to the beautybush (Callicarpa). The startling, purple berries of this small, deciduous shrub are a unique addition to the shrub border. In late summer, bundles of tiny amethyst-colored flowers appear followed by tiny violet beads in dense clusters along the woody stems that become most evident once the leaves have fallen.

As these decorative trees and shrubs shed their leafy robes, be sure to rake your leaf litter as often as time and energy permit. Wet, soggy leaves, particularly the large leaves of maples, can quickly suffocate lawns and if left over the winter on perennial borders, may lead to decay and diseases as well as encouraging destructive rodent and slug populations. Although it is tempting to wait until all the leaves have fallen, frequent removal will better serve the plants and lawn, allowing them to soak up the sun and breathe.

Due to the unseasonably chilly temperatures, many little critters have been scurrying about looking for food and suitable cozy spots to hibernate for the winter. Evidence of tunneling mice, moles, voles and chipmunks is everywhere. A tarp of debris and leaves left on the lawn for a day or two served as cover for a couple of squealing rodents who scattered when I finally found time to drag it to the compost pile. Although many gardeners consider leaves and dead foliage a natural mulch for their gardens, I prefer to remove the majority of brown, crispy, decayed refuse and add it to my mountainous compost heap. Once several killing frosts bring the growing season to an end, a sturdy hedge shears becomes my weapon and nearly all perennials are clipped to a few inches tall. Most perennials will easily survive our winters without a cover of mulch although fall plantings will often benefit from a light application of shredded bark, pine needles or chopped leaves around their root systems once the ground freezes. Be on the lookout in the coming weeks for plants that may have heaved due to alternate freeze-thaw cycles.

Evergreen perennials, ornamental grasses and a select group of plants that provide winter interest are the only plants spared from a close-cropped haircut. Ornamental grasses, particularly members of the Miscanthus family that display gracefully arched foliage and fuzzy plumes, will provide motion, texture, sound and an attractive visual presence in the winter landscape. The domed heads of Sedum are delightfully decorative topped with mounds of snow. The seed heads of fall-blooming asters, goldenrod, and coneflowers, including Rudbeckia and Echinacea, offer textural interest and are irresistible to goldfinches, chickadees and tufted titmice all winter long.

Ongoing

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 6

Planetary weather turns bright and sunny. People will be talkative, upbeat and friendly. The green light is on for new starts of all kinds. However, know your limits and don't go overboard. Today's influences rate high for promoting your ideas or developing projects that need help and support from others. If you are working, it may be difficult to focus on projects that are tedious and detail-oriented. Give greater attention to accuracy.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 7

Yesterday's planetary patterns continue today. Start new activities before 1:17 p.m. At this time the Sagittarius moon aligns with innovative Uranus. At 7:14 p.m. the moon opposes Saturn and becomes inactive. This may be a lull period, when energy is deflated. The moon enters Capricorn at 9:59 p.m., evoking a serious, methodical mood.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 8

Roll up your sleeves and take on a full work agenda. This is a day to get things done. Zero in on business or career concerns, and make decisions or initiate action. A lunar alignment to Mercury makes this evening prime for working or studying. You can be most productive.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 9

At 3:22 a.m. the Capricorn moon becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. New starts are off limits. Instead, tackle projects that have been left hanging or that you have been promising to get to. Now is the time to follow through and get chores or old business out of the way. Alignments of the sun-Jupiter and Mars-Pluto generate enthusiasm and ambition.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 10

The moon enters freedom-loving Aquarius at 3:27 a.m., remaining there for the next 2 1/2 days. Take a vacation from routine and responsibilities. Go with your adventurous side. This is a day for new beginnings of all kinds; meeting people, undergoing new experiences, experimenting with new ideas. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 11

Yesterday's planetary influences continue. The combination of an Aquarius moon and Mercury-Mars-Jupiter alignments set the stage for a fun day. Pursue favorite sports, hobbies; spend extra time with family, close friends. Kick back, relax and recharge your batteries. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 3:52 p.m. A full moon/lunar eclipse is building up and will culminate November 19.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 12

It is okay to launch important activities before 9:06 a.m., when the Aquarius moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. The moon enters Pisces at 12:42 p.m., bringing a change of pace. A lunar alignment to Venus this afternoon urges you to go with your creative side. Beautify your home or work space; make new purchases or remodel. Kick back, relax and unwind this evening.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 13

A Pisces moon continues to set a laidback pace. You can make gains developing projects that require your imagination and creativity. An alignment of the sun and Mercury promotes communications; write letters, send e-mails or faxes, make phone calls. On the other hand, there is one rough spot in effect between 7:25-10:25 p.m., when the moon interacts with Pluto. Take time out for yourself. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 14

An easygoing Pisces moon remains in effect today. Art, music, photography, dance projects continue to get the green light. Follow your intuition; your instincts are on target. The moon aligns with Saturn at 8:38 p.m. and becomes inactive. Get extra rest tonight. Pay attention to your dreams.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 15

The next few days will be action-packed. A full moon is building up and will culminate next Tuesday, November 19. Take it slow and easy. Don't take risks or act on impulse. Today the moon enters fiery Aries at 12:38 a.m. An applying alignment of Mercury-Uranus places all important signings or decisions off limits. It may be difficult to focus on projects that require mental concentration and attention to detail. Instead, tackle jobs that need physical labor and exertion.

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127
SOLUTIONS FOR PERMANENT LOSS
Sensorineural hearing loss typically stems from damage to the tiny hair cells in the inner ear that alert the brain to sound. That kind of loss usually results from a natural age-related decline in hearing, as well as from decades of exposure to noise pollution. In fact, people exposed to excessive noise at work or at play can find their hearing declining prematurely. Fortunately, hearing instruments are appropriate for the majority of people with sensorineural hearing loss. Selecting a hearing device, however, should not be their first consideration. It is important to first find a licensed hearing instrument specialist who can properly evaluate hearing loss, recommend and fit appropriate devices, and provide strong follow-up support.
It is often difficult for people with sensorineural hearing loss to hear certain consonants (th, sh, p, s & f) or the comfortably loud sounds of normal conversation. At the same time, loud sound may be heard the same if no hearing impairment were present. Fortunately, there are wonderful advancements available in today's hearing instruments to provide the proper amplification for each situation. FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER invites you to see them soon at 80 North Avenue, Rte. 139, North Medical Building, Abington. Phone: 781-878-9723. We offer FREE hearing evaluations, FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased, and FREE repairs of any make of hearing aid.
P.S. The first hair cells to succumb to the effects of sensorineural hearing loss are those closest to the outer ear, which are sensitive to high frequency sounds like "t," "s," and other consonant sounds.

'Babes in Toyland' performed

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library will host the Cohasset Dramatic Club on Thursday, Nov. 14 at 4:30 p.m. in the Children's Room. It is a great opportunity to see and hear children from the area perform selections from their upcoming performance, "Babes in Toyland." This event is suitable for all ages and will last about one hour. At the conclusion of the performance, light refreshments will be served courtesy of the Friends of the Library.

Counting Beans

Summer reading is over and the beans have been counted! During July and August, the children participating in the *Star*Spangled*Summer at Your Library kept count of the books they read by putting a red, white or blue lima bean in a jar in the Children's Room of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The total number of books read during the summer was 2,869. What an impressive feat! All the children contributing to the bean count should be very proud.

The winners of the Bean Estimation Contest were Ben Masotta with an estimation of 2,600; and Alex Way with an estimation of 2,553. Congratulations to both boys for putting their thinking skills to work.

HAPPENINGS

Holiday Ball

This is an off year for the Community Garden Club's very popular Holiday House Tour and the first year for their Holiday Ball. A limited number of tickets are now being offered for sale to the general public.

The Holly Ball will be at "Stoneleigh", 478 Jerusalem Road on Saturday, Dec. 7 from 7-11 p.m.. Stoneleigh will be decorated for the holidays by garden club members. Included in the decorations will be many club-member designed holiday wreaths available for purchase by means of a silent auction.

Guests will enjoy a buffet supper served throughout the evening. They will be entertained by a five-piece band playing music suitable for dancing. Suggested dress is optional black tie.

The cost of admission is $75 per person. (Cash bar).

This is a fund-raising event to benefit club projects. The club maintains the gardens at three locations in Cohasset — the Lothrop House, the Lightkeeper's Residence, and Constitution Park. The club also supports local beautification projects, provides scholarships for three deserving Cohasset High seniors, and contributes to many environmental organizations.

For more information phone 781-383-9689. Make checks payable to the "Community Garden Club of Cohasset" and mail them to One Windy Hill Road, Cohasset

Bird walk

The Straits Pond Watershed Association will host a Bird Walk led by Sally Avery on Saturday, Nov. 9 from 8-10 a.m. at Atlantic Avenue, Hull (at the foot of Summit Avenue).

Community center fund-raisers noted

The South Shore Community Center is having a raffle for a weekend for two at the Jared Coffin House in Nantucket. Reservations can be made from Dec. 1 through March 31. The package includes two nights lodging, full breakfast each morning, lunch one afternoon and dinner one evening. The drawing will be Nov. 21, at 2:30 p.m. at the Jingle Bell Walk in the gymnasium. You need not be present to win. Donation one chance $25 or five chances $100. All proceeds benefit the South Shore Community Center.

The South Shore Community Center is going to have a Ski, Skate and Sports Equipment sale on Nov. 16, from 9 a.m. to noon.

If you have any ski, skate or sports equipment that is cluttering up your garage or basement then why not put it to good use and for a good cause. Donate it to the South Shore Community Center. You can drop off equipment from Nov. 13 through 16, at the South Shore Community Center, 3 North Main St., Cohasset, Ma. 02025

All donations are tax deductible.

Jack DeLorenzo is ahead of the pack

Named state's top assistant principal

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

There was a time when Cohasset Middle-High School Assistant Principal Jack DeLorenzo had second thoughts about being an educator.

He even tried 10 months in the private sector, working as a businessman.

But now, after 37 years in education — 17 in Cohasset — DeLorenzo's decision to return to working with kids has been validated.

On Oct. 28, DeLorenzo, 60, received notice that he had been picked by the Massachusetts Secondary School Administrators' Association, Inc. as the top assistant principal statewide for 2002.

"I got out of education some 20 years ago and went to work for a friend of mine in business," said DeLorenzo, reminiscing about the decision while standing in the hallway of outside the CMHS library. "I lasted about 10 months and said, 'This wasn't for me.'"

What was for DeLorenzo was and is working with kids. By all accounts he is a nearly ubiquitous figure at school events. But then again, that is his favorite part of the job.

"The students here in Cohasset are great," said DeLorenzo. "I've always loved working with kids."

DeLorenzo began his career at Morris Knolls High School in New Jersey and was at Silver Lake Regional High

Town Meeting issue-packed

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Special Town Meeting is traditionally a time to vote on expenditures that arise during the year.

But this year in Cohasset, that characterization couldn't be more wrong.

A bevy of divergent, important issues are before the town at the meeting, which will take place in the new Cohasset High School gymnasium on Nov. 18 at 7 p.m.

"I expect quite a turnout because there are a lot of important issues that require the attention of the town's residents," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "We have the senior housing overlay district, the purchase of the Barnes property, which I can speak highly enough about, the downtown revitalization."

Leading the way, both figuratively and literally, are the two citizen petition articles aimed at curbing Chapter 40B.

They are listed as Articles 3 and 4 and are a direct response to the arrival of AvalonBay's 40B project in Cohasset. The issue has been quieter than others of late, but the debate on these articles will set the tone

Barnes won't tax residents' wallets

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

There were many obstacles in the way of the town's attempts to acquire the 32-acre parcel known as the Barnes property, but now there is only one.

The Community Preservation Committee, flexing its fledgling muscles, has managed to fund the $1 million price tag without asking for additional support from the town — or impressively — from its own coffers aside from $10,000 in earnest money to do appraisals for the project.

But before the wooded parcel that abuts Wheelwright Park can become town property, it needs to pass by a two-thirds vote at the Special Town Meeting on Nov. 18.

The town will be asked to borrow $1 million to pay for the project, which will then be paid back with the money that the CPC has gathered.

"The agreement with the Barnes is that we have to close by Dec. 31," said Stuart Ivimey, chairman of the CPC. "So this is our only town meeting between now and then. If the town for some reason declines to take this land, it will be sold to a developer."

The CPC generated the funding from myriad sources:

• $500,000 from the MBTA mitigation agreement that was set aside for the purchase of open space.

• $250,000 from the Executive

School official faces attempted murder charge

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

School Department Business Manager Ivan Klimko was arrested and charged with attempted murder and assault an battery on his wife on Nov. 4.

Hull police were notified that a woman was attempting to flag down cars on George Washington Blvd. at 10:18 p.m. on Nov. 3. The woman told police her husband had tried to "strangle her" and "pushed her head to the ground." Allegedly he also told her he was going to kill her during the attack.

"This is a total shock"
— Supt. Edward Malvey

According to arresting officer Robert C. Cassagrande's report, there were "fresh scratches and red marks on her throat."

After interviewing the woman, Klimko, 55, was arrested at his apartment at 155 George Washington Blvd. without incident.

"This is a total shock," said Supt. Edward Malvey, reached in his office on Tuesday.

Klimko has not reported to work since the incident.

"He is not working, and I don't know his whereabouts," said Malvey. "I am trying to locate him and once that happens, then I will discuss the situation with him before I take any action."

A dangerousness hearing was held on Nov. 4, and the prosecutor's request for pretrial detention was denied. Klimko was released on $1,000 bail with the condition that he surrender his passport, stay alcohol free, and stay away from the alleged victim.

Klimko, who makes $80,000 as the business manager for the schools, was granted indigent status but able to contribute $150 toward legal services.

Signs of the times

Some campaigns littered roadsides

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Once upon a time in Hingham election signs actually turned voters off. Placards littering yards along Hingham's historic Main Street or other roadways in town were a blight on the landscape. So smart candidates just didn't do that for fear of committing political suicide.

"We ought to have some policy."
— Selectman Merle Brown

But even staid Hingham and its tony neighbor, Cohasset, had a proliferation of campaign signs this election season that started well before the Sept. 17 state primary. In fact, communities from Weymouth to Duxbury, were riddled with signs, with what seemed, at times total disregard for the different towns' sign bylaws. Signs of various sizes and shapes appeared on front lawns, side lawns, in the town-owned right-of-ways, on vacant land and along state highways, in short — they were everywhere.

"I've never seen it as bad as it was this year," says Hingham's Building Commissioner Dick Morgan. "Every town got inundated with signs."

Election Day in Scituate became a free-for-all outside the high school. A sea of free-standing O'Brien-Gabrieli signs along the driveway to the high school led to a Scituate Republican Town Committee fire truck plastered with dozens of campaign signs that was stationed next to a 60-foot crane from which hung several 8 ft. x 12 ft. banners touting Republican candidates.

Morgan explained in the past, he'd collect the signs that were in violation along the roads in Hingham and would have the candidates come pick them up. But this time, the number was overwhelming and there wasn't enough time to tackle the problem with all the other duties of the building

Harbor committee recommendations

The Cohasset Harbor Committee held its reorganizational meeting Tuesday evening. John Bertolami was elected chairman. Scott Herzog and Lorren Gibbons were selected as vice chairman and secretary, respectively.

The committee vote to recommend to the Board of Selectmen that the white fence at the harbor remain as it is. The committee also voted to recommend to the board that a third bench be added at Lawrence Wharf. It would be placed next to the bench adjacent to the fisherman's dock.

Anti-runway meeting

South Shore Jet Pollution Council will hold a quarterly general meeting from 7-9 p.m., Tuesday, Nov. 19 at the Hingham Library in the Trustees Room. Volunteers are needed to join various committees to help us protect the quality of life on the South Shore. Please attend to learn more about current efforts or if you wish to help. Contact Marita King Hunter at 781-925-9010 for details, or visit www.southshorejetpollution.org.

The Hingham Library is located off Route 228 at 66 Leavitt St.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall:

Town Meeting Monday, Nov. 18, 7 p.m., Cohasset High School gym.

Zoning Board of Appeals, Nov. 14 (Avalon - Drainage and Septic), Dec. 2 (Avalon-Health and Environment), Dec. 16 (Avalon - Public Safety), Jan. 6 (Avalon - Infrastructure), and Jan. 27 (Avalon - Local Preference and Affordable Housing needs), all at 7:30 p.m. All Avalon meetings will be held in the selectmen's office and will be televised.

Conservation Commission, Nov. 14 at 7:30 p.m.

Advisory Committee, Nov. 14, at 7 p.m. (at Special Town Meeting, Nov. 18 6:30 p.m.).

Library Trustees, Nov. 20, at 7:30 p.m.

Sewer Commission, Dec. 2, at 6 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise indicated.

Telephone pole a go for Elm St.

The Board of Selectmen approved the installation of a new telephone pole on the street between 42 and 44 Elm Court.

The pole will provide service to a residential home being built that fronts to Atlantic Avenue, but Massachusetts Electric Company does not have the easements to install it there, because that road is a private way.

"All of the abutters were notified," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "One of the abutters did arrive late, but the board talked to her after the meeting."

Rails trails to become reality?

The Board of Selectmen voted to join Scituate Selectmen in petitioning Secretary of Transportation James Scanlon to investigate a possible Rails with Trails program.

There is grant money available to fund a bike path, that would run along the MBTA right-of-way. The bike path would be separated from the tracks by fencing.

"I knew that they were in support of this because we had talked about it before," said Town Manager Mark Haddad about the selectmen's vote. "But it is always nice to reaffirm that support."

Free legal clinic

Do you have a legal question or are you confused about a legal issue? The Bar Association of Norfolk County is sponsoring free legal clinics as a public service to the community. A panel of attorneys experienced in all areas of the law will be available for a one on one consultation with you to discuss your legal questions.

All consultations are strictly confidential. The evening legal clinics will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. on Tuesday evenings at the Quincy District Court on the following dates: Dec. 3, Jan. 7, Feb. 4, March 4, April 1, June 3, July 1.

For further information, contact Adrienne C. Clarke, Bar Association of Norfolk County at 617-471-9693.

Foreign objects clogging pumps

There are still many cases of foreign objects clogging sewer pumps, and this is to remind customers that only normal toilet and garbage disposer waste should be discharged. As the sewer department previously advised its users, it is necessary to charge for the Town's $85 ($100 on weekends) cost for service calls to remove foreign objects.

The following objects have caused repeated service calls: tampons, dental floss, baby wipes, Q-Tips. In addition, the following objects will also clog the pumps: bones, diapers, cloth, glass, metal, nuts, plastic, rags, rope, rubber, sand, sanitary, napkins, shells, towels.

Winter guidelines

The public works department has issued the following winter guidelines for residents:

- Do not rake leaves or other debris into roads.
- Uncover storm drains blocked with leaves, snow or other debris.
- Do not plow or throw snow from private property onto the street or sidewalk.
- Do not block sidewalks with plowed snow or motor vehicles.
- Overnight parking is prohibited from Nov. 15 through April 15. It interferes with snow removal and is prohibited by town bylaws.
- The town is not responsible for damaged lawns, fences, steps, shrubs, trees or mailboxes within the town layout.
- Sand for resident use only will be available behind the downtown parking lot.

Grant pays for expert on 40B

The Massachusetts Housing Partnership Fund has granted the Town of Cohasset up to $10,000 to pay for 40B expert Mike Jacobs.

Jacobs will work in conjunction with lawyer Mark Bobrowski to advise the town throughout the AvalonBay process.

"We are very excited," said Haddad. "The Massachusetts Housing Partnership Fund has given us $10,000, which will enable us to hire a guy like Mike Jacobs, who has a wealth of experience in these matters."

T-Day breakfast at Legion Hall

The Sons of the American Legion are hosting an all-you-can-eat breakfast from 7:30-9:30 a.m. on Thanksgiving Day at the Legion Hall on Summer Street. The cost is $5 and the event is open to everyone.

Some behaviors put Cohasset students at risk

Nov. 20 CMHS forum planned

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset teenagers aren't very different from their counterparts across the state and nation in that some of them drink alcohol, smoke cigarettes and experiment with drugs.

The good news is alcohol, cigarette and "violence" behavior are actually down from two years ago at the middle school, according to Michael Gill, health education coordinator for Cohasset schools.

In the high school, alcohol use remains above the state average, he says, while marijuana use is about equal to and cigarette use is slightly below the state average.

Statistics on these and other "youth at-risk behaviors" are the results of a survey conducted last spring in grades 7-12. The key findings have been compiled in a newsletter that is being mailed to parents this week, and a forum addressing these issues will be held at 7 p.m., Wednesday, Nov. 20, at the high school cafeteria.

"They're great kids who do a lot of wonderful things for the community. But some are engaging in activities that concern us."
— Mike Gill, school health coordinator

Gill gets a picture of what behaviors local teens are engaging in by conducting a "Youth Risk Behavior Survey" every two years that puts Cohasset in context with the state and nation. The survey is paid for through a state grant from the Massachusetts Tobacco Tax.

The results are aimed at helping design a curriculum to keep the students stay safe and healthy, Gill explains.

Teen drinking is nothing new in Cohasset, however, this fall the problem seems to have reached the breaking point. Some teens arrived under the influence at the Homecoming Dance where an altercation with administrators subsequently occurred, and in an unrelated incident, three students were injured in a car crash where alcohol was involved

"At the high school level we have an issue with our students with alcohol and marijuana that is consistent with other communities similar to ours," Gill explains.

According to the results, 62.3 percent of Cohasset High School students reported having an alcoholic drink in the month prior to the survey, as compared with 53 percent in the state and 47 percent in the country.

Although he concedes a few students may lie on the survey, the overall results reflect accurate trends, which are consistent when compared with other school districts and prior years.

Gill said the schools have an obligation to share the survey results with parents.

Smoked at least one cigarette in last 30 days		Rode with a drinking driver in past 30 days
Cohasset High	26 percent (75 students)	Cohasset High	36.4 percent (104 students)
Mass.	26 percent	Mass.	31 percent
U.S.	34 percent	U.S.	30.7 percent
Had an alcoholic drink in last 30 days		Had driven a car while they had been drinking alcohol in the past 30 days
Cohasset High	62.3 percent (178 students)	Cohasset High	18.5 percent (53 students)
Mass.	53 percent	Mass.	12 percent
U.S.	47.1 percent	U.S.	13.3 percent
Binge drinking (5 or more alcoholic drinks in a row in the past 30 days)		Used marijuana in the last 30 days
Cohasset High	43.7 percent (125 students)	Cohasset High	30.8 percent (88 students)
Mass.	33 percent	Mass.	30 percent
U.S.	29.9 percent	U.S.	23 percent

"Why deprive parents of those results when they can have the greatest impact of affecting behavior in a certain way?" Gill asks.

In addition to alcohol, drugs and tobacco, the survey also addresses violence-related behaviors, such as carrying a weapon; suicide; sexual behaviors and dietary behaviors.

Gill says while the results may sound negative, there are a lot of reasons to remain positive about today's teens.

He said Cohasset teens volunteer hundreds of hours for everything from working at the teen center to food shopping for the elderly to building homes for the poor in Appalachia.

"They're great kids who do a lot of wonderful things for the community," he says. "But some are engaging in activities that concern us."

In the newsletter being sent to parents, Gill talks about the feelings teens have about invincibility and the danger of alcohol poisoning, among other issues.

Although he realizes some teens will continue risky behaviors no matter what, Gill says the effort must be made to help teens make good choices.

"We have to continue the good fight," he says. "We have to continue to educate kids although that doesn't always translate into good decision making."

Gill said parents should be vigilant and talk to each other about what their children are doing.

Sports meeting to spell out alcohol penalties

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

In response to the rash of alcohol related incidents involving students from Cohasset High School, Athletic Director Ron Ford will hold a pre-winter sports sign-up meeting regarding the issue.

Many parents and the students, who have been involved, were unaware of the stiff penalties that resulted from being caught with, or being under the influence of, alcohol, particularly on school grounds, school officials say.

"In a hope to make both the student-athletes and the parents more aware of the consequences of actions such as drinking on school property and so forth, Ron is going to require all athletes participating in winter sports attend a meeting with at least one of their parents," said School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo. "He will run the meeting and will basically go over, very carefully, what the consequences are, what the MIAA rules are and so forth."

A secondary, and perhaps more important motive, is to open a dialogue between students, their parents and the administration.

"I hope that it will prevent some of these incidents."
— Mark DeGiacomo, School Committee

"Not only will everybody know (about the regulations), but hopefully that will also lead to some discussions between the athletes and their parents," said DeGiacomo. "They hope to bring in a speaker who will talk about these subjects."

Ford says that the meeting will serve as a good launching point for the season.

"We want to go over everything with the parents and the kids," said Ford. "It's a good way to get all of the information out about the upcoming season."

The meeting will deal with rules, but will also provide the opportunity for parents – particularly those of the large freshman class – to meet the coaches.

"We'll start with the overall athletic department rules, and then go to the MIAA rules," said Ford. "Then we will break it down into other individual sports. Parents will have the opportunity to meet coaches and put a face with a name."

Ford emphasized that the meeting is for the parents and student athletes in Grades 9-12, not middle school students, who have a different program that will run in December.

DeGiacomo hopes the event will make a difference.

"I think it is a good idea," said DeGiacomo. "I hope that it will prevent some of these incidents."

Supt. Edward Malvey was also in favor of the meeting, noting that an additional school-wide forum has also been scheduled.

"I talked to Dr. Jones and to Mr. DeLorenzo and as a follow up to these incidents, they are planning a health forum to be held on Nov. 20," said Malvey. "And that issue will be dealt with as well."

Town Meeting issue-packed

for the evening, or evenings. Article 3 intends to direct town boards to come up with a plan of action to deal with the affordable housing shortage, while Article 4 seeks to declare a moratorium on any new 40B projects.

The next major issue faced will the purchase of the Barnes property (see related story). The Community Preservation Committee has tracked down $1 million in funds to cover the purchase of the property, but Town Meeting must approve the measure by a two-thirds vote. If it doesn't, the town's agreement with the Barnes family will expire on Dec. 31 and it would open the area up to development.

Article 8 will also be a hotly contested item, as many of the town's boards are split over the proposed creation of a senior-housing overlay district. The selectmen voted at Tuesday night's meeting to approve the measure 4-1, but there are many who are concerned that it would open the door to unwanted development.

"I expect quite a turnout because there are a lot of important issues that require the attention of the town's residents."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

The proposed sidewalks on Forest Avenue are again on the warrant, as Article 11, this time in search of an additional $250,000 to fully fund the project. Last year's town meeting appropriated $100,000 towards the project.

The Village Revitalization Project is also before the town (Article 13), in effort to establish whether to bury the electrical wires as part of the project. The sentiment of the selectmen appeared to be against the issue, but given the scope of the project, it was sent forward to the voters to decide. An approval of this measure would necessitate a special election to override Proposition 2-1/2.

The final major issue of the evening is the second-to-last article, Article 17. It asks residents if they are in support of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's plans for improvements to the Harbor. The vote only expresses support of the concept of the article, allowing the CRC to move forward with engineering and feasibility studies. If the article passes, Article 18 would be withdrawn, because the CRC would conduct the seawall study in the Harbor area.

Haddad asked for the public's patience in the early going, as this will be the first time that Town Meeting will be held in the new gymnasium.

Some Town Meeting Notes:

A quorum of 100 is needed for the transaction of business. A quorum is assumed once it is established, unless a point of no quorum is raised and a count proves that there is not 100 people. In this case, the meeting will be continued at a later date.

Moderator George L. Marlette is expecting to continue the meeting until at least 11 p.m. on Monday night. If there is not sufficient time to complete business, Marlette will continue the meeting to Tuesday, Nov. 19.

Barnes won't tax residents' wallets

Office of Environmental Affairs "Self-Help Grant"

- $100,000 cash contribution from the Cohasset Conservation Trust
- $65,000 in private donations
- $65,000 in dollar-for-dollar match by CCT of private donations.
- $50,000 cash contribution from Water Department
- $1,000 in earnest money from the CPC
- For a grand total of $1,031,000.

"We have proven our theory that a major project can occur if the supporters of the project generate a creative funding plan," said Ivimey. "Proponents need to look at the CPC not as a bank, but as a funding partner that makes the project come together in its formative stages."

Ivimey then came up with an even simpler explanation for the process: "We are the grease that allows the machine to work."

The town adopted the Community Preservation Act at last year's annual Town Meeting. It derives it money from a 1.5 percent surcharge on real estate tax and some level of state match. Allocations are recommended by the committee and then voted on by Town Meeting. The committee's funds must be spent on three areas: open space, historical preservation, and affordable housing. The CPC can use a small percentage of their budget as earnest money for administrative tasks, such as appraisals.

Despite all the work, the CPC is still concerned that the measure will not receive support. The committee wants the public to know that the funding is all in place – and a representative from the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs will be at the Town Meeting to vouch for the $250,000 state grant.

"I think there is a very real chance that this won't pass Town Meeting, because we need a two-thirds vote," said Rich Silvia. "The bottom line is that this purchase will not affect the tax rate at all. If the town doesn't scoop this land up, a developer quickly will."

The Barnes property is important because it is part of the same deep-forest habitat as the Wheelwright Park. Any changes to that land, especially development, would have drastic impact on the overall forest area.

Silvia will be at the Social Service League's Art Center at noon on Friday to speak about the property.

"I will be there to talk to people about the project," said Silvia. "I will be available to answer any questions or explain anything that anybody wants to know about the whole process."

Alzheimer's support group meets

Dr. Kenneth Kosik, professor of neurology and neuroscience at Harvard Medical School will be the featured speaker for Alzheimer's Disease Awareness Month on Wednesday, Nov. 20 at 7:30 p.m. at the meeting of the Alzheimer's Support Group of the South Shore, Inc. Dr. Kosik's topic will be "From Current Research to Treatment."

Kosik received numerous awards for his research from the National Institutes of Health, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the Metropolitan Life Foundation and the Alzheimer's Association. He has served on the Medical and Scientific Advisory Board of the Alzheimer's Association and National Institutes of Health. He has authored more than 150 research publications and co-authored, "When Someone You Love Has Alzheimer's: The Caregiver's Journey".

Respite care for the Alzheimer's patient is available at no cost during the meeting at Harbor House in Hingham so that the family may attend this lecture. To reserve respite care, call Gervaise Haley by 3 p.m. on Wednesday, Nov. 20 at 781-749-4774, Ext. 843.

COHASSET REVITALIZATION CORPORATION

Vote YES on Article 17

at the November 18, 2002 Cohasset Special Town Meeting

Article 17: To see if the Town will vote to approve a concept for safety improvements to the sidewalk, railings and seawall along Cohasset Harbor as proposed by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, more or less as shown on plans on file in the office of the Town Clerk, or take any other action relative thereto:

A YES VOTE will SUPPORT the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's effort to help the community address public safety and access deficiencies in the Harbor Area as identified through public workshops, community surveys and independent analysis:

If Article 17 Passes the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation will commit to the following:

- ✓ Provide fiscal and administrative assistance (approximately $50,000 – $70,000) to complete the required seawall, railing, sidewalk, parking and lighting improvement design and engineering studies required to implement the safety, access, and aesthetic infrastructure improvements outlined in the CRC's Moderate Improvement Approach. The Moderate Approach received a 72% approval rating from residents that responded to a recent CRC survey.
- ✓ Work jointly with the Town to: select a consulting firm to complete the required design and engineering work; coordinate and facilitate public input to determine the improvement options and materials to be used; and formalize and implementation approach to undertake the improvements.
- ✓ Provide grant writing assistance to help the Town apply for state and federal funding that is available to pay up to 90% - 100% of the estimated $1.2 million construction costs (the extent of work needed to repair existing seawalls will determine the final grant funding percentage).

A NO VOTE will NOT SUPPORT the Cohasset Revitalization project's recommended Moderate Improvement Approach to address Harbor Area public safety and access deficiencies.

If Article 17 is Defeated the Town accepts the following:

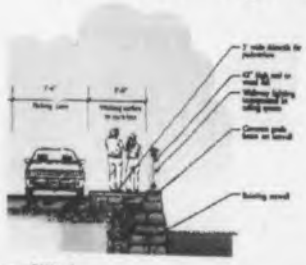
- ✓ If the Town wishes to undertake a lesser degree of safety, access and aesthetic improvements than those identified in the CRC's Moderate Improvement Approach (i.e. Keeping the existing railing system and installing a rollover curbing system) the project will not qualify for state and federal funding assistance because basic safety standards will not be met. Seawall repairs may still remain eligible for 50% grant funding.
- ✓ By undertaking a lesser degree of improvements the Town will be foregoing the contribution of the CRC to undertake a comprehensive analysis of the existing seawall and the public infrastructure above the seawall. As a result, the Town will reject the financial and administrative assistance offered by the CRC to complete the proposed comprehensive studies.
- ✓ Existing public safety and access deficiencies in the Harbor Area will continue to be a liability for the Town should an unfortunate accident occur.

Moderate Improvement Approach



Scope of Work

Moderate Improvements consist of the reconstruction and widening as necessary existing sidewalks to provide a 5' - 5'6" minimum walking area; application of a scored concrete or similar type sidewalk surface material; installation of vertical granite curbing to clearly separate sidewalks from parallel parking; new lighting as appropriate (removal of overhead utility lines is not currently part of this approach); tree planting; installation of new wood or steel railing system as required under Massachusetts design and safety standards to meet grant funding guidelines; and minor repairs of existing seawalls as needed.

Cost of Work

Estimated Project Costs	$ 1,129,275
Grant Funding Opportunities (May pay up to 90% of Project)	- 1,016,347
Private and Municipal Funding Required to Undertake Project	$ 112,928

Funding Note

Since this approach effectively addresses public safety and access deficiencies it will qualify for state and federal grant funding. However, there are no guarantees on the dollar amount and the time-frame in which the town could receive grant funding. If grant funding does not materialize as suggested, the Town will still have the option to adjust the project scope as deemed appropriate.

Level of Safety and Access Improvements

This approach provides the highest level of public safety and access improvements. Establishing curbs and sidewalks that control vehicle parking, installing a child-safe railing system, improving walkway lighting and enhancing the linkages among the public waterfront properties will provide long-term solutions to current infrastructure deficiencies.

School health budget gets a reprieve, teachers saved

But next year still in limbo

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The elementary school health program has twice received a stay of execution.

First it looked like curtains for the program due to state funding cuts. But the School Committee stepped in saying the program could be shored up through the school budget until Special Town Meeting, where voters could decide whether to throw the switch.

Now the School Committee is committed to funding the program for the remainder of the 2002-2003 school year. With no wiggle room on the municipal side of the town's budget, the committee said it will find the $32,000 for the program within the school department budget — $25,000 of which will come from special education.

"I'm hoping that if we make the move here and something were to happen with special education, then by all means we would could legitimately come back at the Annual Town Meeting for an adjustment," said Supt. Edward Malvey.

"This is great news."
— Mike Gill, school health coordinator

The committee, though, made it a point to mention this is a one-year funding decision, and there are not guarantees the school budget can absorb the cost of the program next year.

"I think that people need to realize that the $32,000 and or the health grant aspect of the program could be rejected in the following year," said Malvey. "There is nothing coming from the state right now."

The news was a relief to Michael Gill, school health coordinator, who has tried to navigate a health program for the school year, not knowing if it would exist at the end of November.

"This is great news," said Gill. "It gives us some time and it also gives us the opportunity to implement new programs like the LifeSkills Drug Prevention program, which is the number one, research-based drug prevention program for elementary and middle school students."

Since 1993, the program was funded by the state tobacco tax in the form of Health protection grants. Last year, the funding was $28,000. The money was the direct funding source for two part-time health educators, Judy Wilson (Joseph Osgood School), who has taught health in Cohasset for the last eight years, and Jane Gregory, who just completed her first year as the health educator at the Deer Hill School.. Both were expected to lose their jobs because of the new state budget cuts.

Gill says he sees the value of the health program in the actions of the students.

"The thing that we have found is that for our elementary and middle school students, risk behaviors, meaning drinking, drugs and violence, have dropped," said Gill. "You can't attribute all of that to this program, but I think that it has had a positive impact on the students."

School Committee Vice-Chairman Chartis Tebbetts agreed wholeheartedly.

"I remain convinced that these two teachers are extremely important," said Tebbetts. "Having them at least finish out this academic year with the hope of finding some way to fund the program next year. Elementary school health education is as important an item in our budget as any other."

The decision not to seek the $32,000 from the Special Town Meeting is the latest in a series of budgetary decisions by the School Committee.

The committee initially sought $99,000 on top of the $100,000 that town meeting "under-funded" the school budget last spring. But plans to buy a bus for $60,000 were postponed with the understanding that if a busing problem arose, the school department would be seeking immediate help from the town. If not, the bus will be purchased at the Annual Town Meeting.

The committee was also asking for $7,000 to cover the cost of the early retirement of janitor Kevin Soule, which it will now cull out of the current school department operating budget.

Association sends mixed message about MCAS

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

It was supposed to be a grand, decisive statement against the use of the MCAS as a graduation requirement, but considerable debate watered down the Massachusetts Association of School Council's resolution on the high-stakes test during its meeting at the Worcester Centrum from Nov. 30-Oct. 1.

In the end, the resolution passed this year merely reaffirmed the resolutions of 2000 and 2001, calling for a moratorium on using the test as a graduation requirement, asserting that schools should have the right to award diplomas. This is the first year that public school students will be required to pass the MCAS in order to graduate.

The resolution that was initially presented to the association stated that local school departments inherently hold the right to award diplomas.

"The second resolution on the MCAS was amended in several places so that the final result was presented in a somewhat less confrontational manner, somewhat similar to what was done in the past," said Tebbetts. "I put us on the record as 'very concerned' with the test as a single graduation requirement."

Still, Supt. Edward Malvey feels that the meeting provided a sounding board for issues surrounding the test.

"The concern really has been raised over the MCAS test and the one test for all concept," said Supt. Edward Malvey. "One of the speakers really hit home about how high-stakes testing has really had an impact on student achievement. If a test is going to be used with punitive results, the performance of students has increasingly decreased in other parts of the country."

Malvey hopes that that concern leads to action.

"Hopefully (this resolution) will gather some momentum," said Malvey. 'I think that there is a very strong opinion throughout the Commonwealth relative to (the test's use a graduation requirement."

"It keeps the students trying hard and the state supplying money, so there have been some very positive impacts on the schools and some students are doing better."
— Chartis Tebbetts, School Committee

Tebbetts said that the original resolution generated negative feedback from school districts who have used MCAS as a way of raising performance.

"High-stakes testing gets people to sit up and take notice," said Tebbetts. "It keeps the students trying hard and the state supplying money, so there have been some very positive impacts on the schools and some students are doing better."

But Tebbetts worries that the funding that has provided much of the improvement will be cut by the state, given the current fiscal climate in Massachusetts.

"They are doing better because there are resources being brought to bear that are helping them with their difficulties," said Tebbetts. "I was thinking all the time, though, that these are exactly the things that are going to be cut back.

The association also approved measures supporting the right to equal education aid from the state and another in favor of bilingual education (which was later voted down by a large margin in the state election on Nov. 5).

"Our committee voted to support each one of them," said Tebbetts. "And the association also voted to endorse all three of these resolutions, but it was far from unanimous."

The Association is made up of school committees throughout the Commonwealth and meets annually to discuss relevant issues in education.

Signs of the times

department.

"We're relying on the professionalism of the people working for the candidates," Morgan said.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, who easily won reelection last week, said the number of candidates had a lot to do with the quantity of signs.

But he discovered while campaigning door-to-door in the Third Plymouth District that a lot of citizens don't like the lawn signs. That prompted him to write to his opponent Nathaniel Palmer of Cohasset, to see if he'd be interested in agreeing to pull out of the lawn-sign mix.

Palmer was quick to point out Bradley had name recognition and he did not.

"Of course I did not agree to such a transparent attempt to handicap my campaign," he said, adding while not everyone wants to have signs on their lawns, his supporters would have been disappointed not to have had the chance.

"I have a very passionate group of supporters who were proud to do this," Palmer said, admitting that at the 11th hour his campaign went "a little crazy."

"But my signs were never placed in locations where there was no permission," he said.

Bradley also said his campaign was very conscious of putting his signs only on lawns or businesses where they got the OK. He agreed this year some of the candidates got carried away.

"I saw a lot of signs on tracts of land with no homes on it," he says.

While some towns have bylaws that try to restrict the size and placement of political signs, limiting the size of hand-held signs would raise First Amendment questions, according to Sarah Wunsch, staff attorney with the American Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts.

State law does not permit signs, posters, circulars or other material that might influence voters within 150 feet of the door to the polls. There are no rules about the size or quantity of signs outside the 150 feet as long as they don't obstruct voter access.

Fearing uncontrolled signage would hinder voters ability to get to the polls, Hingham Town Clerk Eileen McCracken sent a letter to all candidates asking them not to have banners or freestanding signs outside that town's two polling locations on Nov. 5.

"Movement in and out of the schools will be difficult at times," she wrote. "Therefore please limit the signs and the people holding them."

So at one point on Election Day, McCracken asked Tom LeClair to put down the 6 ft.-by-3-ft. sign he was holding for his twin brother and state senate candidate Ted LeClair outside Hingham High School because of its size. However, LeClair pointed out — with the exception of the Dan Grabauskas signs that were smaller — nearly all the political signs that day were illegal in Hingham, whose sign bylaw limits signs to two square feet without a building permit. Most political signs are about four square feet.

Wunsch of the ACLU says a town's sign ordinance would not apply to hand-held signs anyway.

"People have the right to get attention with their sign," she said. "Is there a parade in town with no banners? What's the difference?"

Cohasset's Building Inspector Bob Egan said he can't take signs off private property, but has removed them from traffic islands.

He said a few years ago, the town had a policy that candidates pay $10 to apply for a building permit and provide a list of where the signs were going to be placed. That policy ended when it was challenged, but it did have its benefits.

"The good part is that I had the name of each candidate and a number to call," he says. Egan says the town also had a "time limit" policy, which has also gone by the wayside, that stated there could be no signs until two weeks before an election and the signs had to be removed within a week after.

Cohasset Selectman Merle Brown said the plethora of signs this year has prompted him to see if the other selectmen might agree to establishing some controls.

"We ought to have some policy," he says.

Doug Cope, spokesman for MassHighway, says despite perceptions otherwise, state DPW crews tried to remove signs that infringed on the state layout of Route 3A and other state roadways. He said the rule of thumb is if a sign is closer to the road's edge than a utility pole it is likely encroaching in the state layout and can be removed. MassHighway doesn't remove signs on private property.

But all the signs this election season sprouted was good news to sign manufacturers like Printing Unlimited in Holbrook.

"There was more going on this year than in previous years, especially in this area," says owner Vincent Maroney. He explained wire framed signs were really popular this year because they were so easy to install.

But wood or wire framed; red and white; red, white and blue; or purple and yellow – signs were everywhere.

In Hingham, Morgan, the building inspector, wouldn't mind turning back the clock a little to more conservative times.

"The old adage that people would vote against a candidate who put signs out – went right out the window," Morgan says about this year's election.

Asst. Principal Jack DeLorenzo is ahead of the pack

School in Kingston for three years before coming to Cohasset.

DeLorenzo was at the School Committee meeting last Thursday to accept recognition from that committee as well as from the superintendent.

"Jack has been involved for a number of years with this particular association," said Malvey. "Not only is this award a personal credit to his involvement in the association, but also in educational activities in general."

Malvey credited DeLorenzo for a career filled with educational achievements, but noted since this career award came while DeLorenzo was in the Cohasset school system, he deserved special praise.

"It happens on our watch, while Jack is here in Cohasset," said Malvey. "So I want to extend my personal and professional congratulations to Jack and I know that the School Committee will join with me on that."

Which, of course, the committee did, leading to a round of applause.

The official recognition was a fitting cap for the whirlwind process.

"Jerry Silverman, who works for the executive committee at the MSSAA recommended me to the committee," said DeLorenzo. "Then there is an application process, and you give your school background, the experience you have, and the types of things you do for your community."

Then it was just a matter of waiting out the results.

"(Silverman) called me up a week ago and said congratulations," said DeLorenzo. "Basically what happens now is that my name goes with the other 49 states to San Diego and they pick a national assistant principal of the year."

The award serves as a fitting cap for an outstanding career that began in New Jersey and ended up on the New England shoreline. DeLorenzo embraced Cohasset, moving here with his family and putting his two daughters through the school system.

"It wasn't easy for them to have their father as the assistant principal of their school," says DeLorenzo, with a laugh.

DeLorenzo credits the honor to his work in the community over the years and his involvement with school activities.

"I'm involved in everything," he said. "They (kids) see me at all kinds of activities, whether it is drama or music or football games."

"It's quite an honor," DeLorenzo told the members of the School Committee after their applause. "I'm very proud."

Deputy assessor field down to two finalists

But not without controversy

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The Board of Assessors conducted finalist interviews for the deputy assessor position, but in the discussion period after those interviews, Chairman Elsa Miller expressed a desire to reconsider another candidate that did not make finalist status.

The two finalists are Mary E. Quill, currently the principal assessor/appraiser for the Town of Whitman, and Hannelore Simonds, who is the deputy assessor for the Town of Holbrook. Both fielded interview questions from the three-member board during the hour

But shortly after, Miller asked Town Manager Mark Haddad and Director of Finance Michael Buckley to reconsider Debra Krupczak, who is a clerk in the office. On Tuesday Nov. 6, Miller – and the board – unanimously agreed that Krupczak should not be a finalist.

"I met them to go over everything (on Nov. 6), and they discounted Debbie as a candidate," said Haddad. "I sat down with Debbie and relayed the message."

Miller said she took a look beyond Krupczak's resume and asked why not?

"How could she not be able to handle this, she's been here for nine years," said Miller. "I haven't changed my mind, I re-looked at the situation."

"I haven't changed my mind, I re-looked at the candidate."

— Elsa Miller, Chairman of the Board of Assessors

Initially Mary Granville also was in favor of reconsidering Krupczak, but after talking through the issue with Buckley and Haddad, she felt confident that the process was handled correctly.

Haddad was impressed with the professional manner in which Krupczak handled the entire situation.

"Debbie was extremely professional," said Haddad. "She is a credit to that department and remains a valuable resource. To come back in at this point and reassert her as a candidate is not fair to her or the process."

Miller refused to comment after the meeting.

Previous to the Krupczak discussion all three board members – including Miller – said that they could live with either candidate and were confident that both of the finalists were well qualified to do the job.

"I think that they are both very qualified," said Mickey Patrolia. "I think both can do the job."

Granville agreed.

"I liked both finalists," said Granville. "Each of them has qualities that the other doesn't have."

"This is the opportunity for you to take a staff member and say, 'This is how we expect the office to be run," said Haddad.

Haddad and Buckley were scheduled to report back to the Board of Assessors yesterday at 4:30 after conducting reference checks. Haddad was unsure whether that meeting was still scheduled early yesterday morning.

Haddad said he will use the input from the Board of Assessors, relying heavily on Buckley's opinion, since he will be the deputy assessor's manager.

The statutory power to hire and fire is given to Haddad in the Town Manager Act.

At the Nov. 6 meeting, Miller did request that board review another candidate, who had not been interviewed due to a scheduling conflict. That candidate sent a follow-up letter to the Board of Assessors in order to explain the situation and ask for another chance to apply. At Tuesday night's meeting, Miller said that there was no need to interview that candidate any longer.

Krupczak's status as a finalist is not clear.

School official faces attempted murder charge

Malvey said he was not at liberty to discuss possible professional repercussions from the arrest.

"I am in consultation with our school counsel, but given the seriousness of the situation I can't discuss any of the particulars," said Malvey.

The alleged incident comes at a bad time for the school, business-wise, as budget season is just around the corner.

"It will not effect us in getting out our budget," said Malvey. "But it does set us back a little. We will adjust, though."

Klimko was also in charge of a the school-run bus service, duties which Mavley has assumed in the interim.

"Well, when something like this happens, drastic measures need to be taken," said Malvey. 'I have had to pick up a lot of the additional responsibilities so that we can make sure we can transport all of the youngsters."

Malvey said Klimko had done a good job in his role as business manager.

"Dr. Klimko has done a wonderful job," said Malvey. "It is difficult to be hit with this news."

The uncertainty of the situation has left the school department in a quandary

"This is a tremendous loss in the interim," said Malvey. "If it is going to continue we are going to have to make some moves real soon."

The case, as with all other felony charges, will be handled by the District Attorney's office.

"I think that the alleged victim is physically OK," said District Attorney Tim Cruz. "But obviously as with any allegations like this one, it is very traumatic."

Neely Wakeman is field hockey star at William Smith

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

FIELD HOCKEY STAR

NESCAC second seed Williams field hockey team (14-3) captured the NESCAC Field Hockey Championship this past weekend eliminating first Middlebury and then Bowdoin in the finals at Bowdoin College.

The Ephs will held to Grantham, Penn. and the campus of Messiah College where they will face Wittenberg University, Ohio, (17-3) on Friday, Nov. 15 in second round NCAA play. All four teams playing at Messiah this weekend received first round byes. Friday's winners will meet on Saturday for the right to advance to the NCAA semifinals and finals to be hosted by Springfield College on Nov. 23 and 24. Williams' Ephs are led by Senior forward (Cohasset's very own) Steff Noering who has a team-high 11 goals to go with eight assists for 30 points.

I cannot believe that it is that time of the year but it is here. The Annual Cohasset PSO METCO Holiday Wreath and Candle Sale is happening. Please remember to order your Hanukkah candles, ivory pillar candles and wreaths through this wonderful, PSO sponsored sale to benefit the METCO program in town. Hanukkah candles will be available for a November 25th pick-up.

WREATH SALE

The wreath sale is happening on Saturday, Dec. 7 at the Middle/High School from 9 a.m.-noon. If needed, wreaths can be available by Dec 1. Order forms are available at all schools or you may contact Lisa Dunne at 383-1596 or Olivia Baldwin at 383-1866.

CHRISTMAS TREES

Also, the First Parish's 8th Annual Fresh Cut Balsam Christmas Tree Sale will be in conjunction with the Cohasset Village Fair on Saturday, Dec. 7. Pre-orders are being accepted.

You will have a nice selection of trees to choose from. Make sure to order early to be in the "Your Tree Free" drawing. All trees are $35 for any tree, 5-9 feet tall. People who have bought them in the past have declared them the freshest trees ever. Besides being a fund-raiser for the First Parish, trees are donated to various families served by the Cohasset Food Pantry, Wellspring, Friends of the Homeless and others, including also, the Senior Center at the Community Center allowing for so many to benefit. Please call 383-9845 to place your order.

POST-PROM PLANNING

Calling all parents of a Cohasset High School senior! The next post prom party planning meeting will be held on Nov. 21 at 7:30 p.m. in the CHS cafeteria. Don't sit back and let the other parents have all the fun in planning this fantastic, safe and enjoyable surprise for your students, get up and go see what you can do to make this another phenomenal success!

SKI CLUB

Andrew Dennis of Cohasset is currently a member of the Ski Industries Club at the University of Maine at Farmington. The Ski Industry Club is a large organization dedicated to the snow sports industry. The club provides funding for UMF students who are interested in getting tested for professional ski instructor certification. It's a very active club and a great way for new students to network with upperclassmen and get information about classes and college life at UMF.

WINNING GOAL

Trinity College soccer co-captain Morgan Sandell, a senior, scored two unassisted goals, including the game winner with 36 seconds left in the second 10-minute overtime against Salve Regina. Great playing, Morgan.

GO, NEELY!

Neely Wakeman of Cohasset, a senior at William Smith College, has been named to the All-Upstate Collegiate Athletic Association first team in field hockey. A talented backliner, Neely proved to be an important part of the Heron offense this season. She began the year with just four goals in 28 career games. This season she's recorded career-highs in goals (10) and assists (10). Neely, a graduate of the Holderness School, was named the NCAA Player of the Week on Sept. 29 after scoring four goals and assisting on three others in three games.

PASSED THE BAR

Congratulations and celebrations for David H. Farrag. He received a letter from the Massachusetts Bar Association, and he has passed the bar exam! David is a past graduate of Cohasset High. He graduated from Northeastern University with a bachelor of science in political science; Suffolk University Sawyer School of Management with as master's in public administration and Suffolk Law School with a juris doctor. At Suffolk, he was president of the Federalist Society, member of the Environmental Law Society and was on the Suffolk Law Hockey Team. His fiancée Niki Palmieri, his mom Linda, and family and friends are so proud! What terrific accomplishments David!

CHRISTA ON THE RUNWAY

Cohasset's Christa Hagearty, president of Dependable Cleaners, announces the company was a Silver Sponsor for the 3rdAnnual "Dressing Well: An Evening to Benefit MS," which took place on Oct. 16 at the Westin Hotel in Waltham. This year's "Dressing Well" event raised more than $117,000 for the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

This year, local business owners, including Christa, shared the runway with professional models from the city's top modeling agencies and showcased the latest fashions. The evening concluded with a festive holiday performance courtesy of the Boston Ballet II.

"Dependable Cleaners is proud to sponsor an event that educates women about Multiple Sclerosis and motivates them to make a difference in the lives of MS patients and their families," she said. "It's great to see this event grow more successful each year."

Since becoming president in 1996, Christa has made community involvement an important aspect of Dependable Cleaners' marketing philosophy.

Cohasset Dramatic Club is still going strong at 81

Theater group stages 'Babes in Toyland'

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The auditorium at Town Hall is quiet now, but not for long. In about an hour, it will be packed with 40 children and their families, fully bedecked in costume for the upcoming production "Babes in Toyland."

For the moment though, Jean DiGiacomandrea and Jessica McDonald – the president and secretary of the Cohasset Dramatic Club, comprised of members from the towns of Cohasset and Scituate — sit reflecting on their journey with the 81-year-old theater group. They are just two of a group 300 strong that stages three shows a year, but their story mirrors that of many others.

"Our relationship began as a mentoring relationship," said McDonald, who joined the group about eight years ago – two years prior to DiGiacomandrea. "But now we are buddies. Jean has just blossomed here and is responsible for much of the success of the club."

It wasn't always that way.

DiGiacomandrea had zero experience when she walked into tryouts for the "Dracula" six years ago, and has since risen to the level of club president. She credits the accepting and teaching nature of the club's members with her and the club's success.

"A lot of people came to audition and I had never done it before," said DiGiacomandrea, who said she found that she absolutely loved performing on stage. "This place is incredibly friendly for neophytes and cowards."

McDonald – who was directing DiGiacomandrea's first show – saw exactly what she was looking when she saw the now-president, and former-novice audition.

"When I am directing, I love to cast people that have never been cast before," said McDonald. "I want them to have that experience."

By that experience, McDonald means the thrill of performing on stage, a thrill that the 40 youngsters in "Toyland" will have for themselves when the show opens in two weeks.

"We are very lucky to have a kid-friendly director," said McDonald, who is not actively involved in the latest production. "Eric Henderson is very low-key and encouraging. The kids just love him."

Henderson is happy with the cast's progress thus far.

"Things are going pretty good," said Henderson. "It's pretty much a day-to-day process. You have good rehearsals and you have bad one, but there is no panic. Usually you have concern for different aspects of the show, but I don't let it turn into worry because it is only a show and the kids are there to have fun."

As if providing a creative outlet for citizens in Cohasset and Scituate wasn't enough, the group also has a sense of community.

The holiday show is being run in conjunction with a canned food drive. If audience members bring a can of food, they will get $1 off admission.

"It's apt,"" said McDonald. "It brings out a sense of community and holiday spirit and it celebrates everything good about that."

But perhaps more importantly, it appears the group does the same, providing a bastion of belonging to many – be they actors, backstage crew or set builders.

"I think one of the biggest reasons that this club works so well is that it appeals to so many," said DiGiacomandrea, before McDonald finishes the sentence. "It is empowering, it boosts self-esteem, and it provides a safe haven regardless of ability or experience."

The group is expecting a big turnout for the upcoming shows.

"Generally we get a lot of people when we have a children's show," said DiGiacomandrea. "As our group grows as an organization, the shows really allow the community to celebrate the joy of the process of theater."

"Babes in Toyland" was first staged in 1903 and ran for 192 performances on Broadway at the Majestic Theater. The music was written by Victor Herbert and Glen MacDonald wrote the play and provided the lyrics. Initially an operetta, the story was turned into a Laurel and Hardy movie in 1930 and as a television move in 1986, starring Drew Barrymore, Keanu Reeves, and Pat Morita (Mr. Miyagi in the Karate Kid movies).

"It's coming up on it's anniversary," said Henderson. "It is almost 100 years old, but the adaptation of the script makes it more modern so that people can relate to it."

The story, inspired by the success of "The Wizard of Oz" interweaves classic fairy tale characters, such as Old Mother Hubbard, and the theme of Christmas.

The play will run Nov. 29 and 30 at 7:30 p.m., Dec. 7, 13, and 14 at 7:30 p.m., and Dec. 1, 8, 14, and 15 at 2 p.m. All shows will take place at the Cohasset Town Hall auditorium. Tickets are $10 and are available at Front Street Books in Scituate, Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Springbrook Kids in Cohasset. They can also be purchased by calling 781-544-0304. Girl Scouts can buy a ticket for $2 by calling 781-545-1655.

Holiday Ball

This is an off year for the Community Garden Club0s very popular Holiday House Tour and the first year for their Holiday Ball. A limited number of tickets are now being offered for sale to the general public.

The Holly Ball will be at "Stoneleigh", 478 Jerusalem Road on Saturday, Dec. 7 from 7-11 p.m.. Stoneleigh will be decorated for the holidays by garden club members. Included in the decorations will be many club-member designed holiday wreaths available for purchase by means of a silent auction.

Guests will enjoy a buffet supper served throughout the evening. They will be entertained by a five-piece band playing music suitable for dancing. Suggested dress is optional black tie.

The cost of admission is $75 per person. (Cash bar).

This is a fund-raising event to benefit club projects. The club maintains the gardens at three locations in Cohasset — the Lothrop House, the Lightkeeper's Residence, and Constitution Park. The club also supports local beautification projects, provides scholarships for three deserving Cohasset High seniors, and contributes to many environmental organizations.

OPINION

GUEST EDITORIAL

With grateful heart

The Rev. Paul Sinnott gave the following Veterans Day invocation in Hingham on Monday.

Every time I take a commercial airline, I seem to have the same pilot. Perhaps you have flown with him also. His name is "Speaking." At least, that is what he calls himself as the flight begins: "This is your captain speaking." He will go on to tell the passengers all kinds of information that is designed to make us relax and fly with confidence: in the event that the plane lands in water, the seat cushion will double as a life preserver, etc. I am always struck by two things in this little litany.

The first is that if the lights go out in the cabin, that there are rows of lights in the aisle that will assist you in returning to your seat. Secondly, that there are certain seats located next to exit doors which may require the person seated in those seats to act calmly in the event of an emergency. If you are seated in one of those seats, the captain tells us, more will be expected of you, and if you feel you are unable to comply with what's required, let the flight attendant know.

If you are a person of faith, you know how valuable it is to have a row of lights that can guide you back to your seat when the lights go out. It seems in these darks days that we have needed those lights of faith more than ever before. I am grateful that those lights are there in the most troubling of times, and I am grateful that they work in getting us all leek to our seats safely.

I am also grateful for all of those people who have met the challenge of being in those seats of particular responsibility, at times of stress and in dangerous situation. I am grateful for their non-anxious presence and their dedication to duty and responsibility. I am grateful to them for having trained tirelessly and at great sacrifice, for putting themselves in harms way.

In short, I trust that the great captain of this aircraft is in charge, and knows where we are going. I trust that the flight crew is well prepared for emergencies. And I trust that our faith will see us through in times of danger and darkness.

But more than anything else this Veterans Day, with grateful hearts we remember the women and men in the uniformed services who have placed themselves in harm's way in defense of this great nation, in defense of justice and liberty in other lands, and for those who wage peace even this day. We are indebted to them in countless ways.

The Rev. Paul Sinnott is Pastor of The House of Prayer Lutheran Church in Hingham.

GOP Region Five panel

Members of the press, Carolyn Ryan of the Boston Globe, Mary Ford of the Cohasset Mariner and Hingham Journal and Jack Coleman of the Brockton Enterprise, have been invited to Region Five of the Republican State Committee, which includes leaders from the counties of Bristol, Barnstable, Plymouth and Norfolk, to discuss the future of the GOP Tuesday, Nov. 19, at the John Carver Inn in Plymouth. Dinner will be at 6 p.m., meeting at 9.

The moderator, who has just returned from China, will be former Oklahoma Congressman and professor at Harvard Law School, Kennedy School of Government, Mickey Edwards of Hingham.

The meeting is open to the public but reservations are required for dinner. To RSVP call Polly Logan at 781-383-0031.

Another highlight of the meeting will be honoring State Committeeman Leo Bechand, who is resigning from the State Committee.

Chairmen of county clubs, Kathy Stacey of Plymouth County and Dave Farrag of Norfolk County, will report on future events and donations given candidates, as will town chairmen.

Chairman Larry Novak (508-581-8400) said all candidates are urged to attend and bring signs and literature for town chairmen.

Questions for the proponents of the sr. overlay district

TO THE EDITOR:

Regarding the article on the warrant at the upcoming Special Town Meeting which calls for the rezoning of our town's residential districts B and C to allow for the construction of high-density apartment complexes, I look forward to the proponents of the so-called Senior Overlay District article being able to answer the following questions:

1) Section 16.2 of the proposed by-law reads as follows:

"16.2 Purpose:

"The following are the purposes of this SMRD by-law:

"16.2.5 To create an incentive for the creation of appropriate housing for independent living for persons who have attained the age of 55 years and the creation of appropriate housing which is affordable to persons or families qualifying as low, moderate, or median income by allowing the development of housing of greater density than would otherwise be permitted in the underlying zoning district." (My emphasis provided.)

Since it appears therefore, that in addition to creating apartment complexes for seniors, the proposed by-law also anticipates the creation of apartment complexes for families with qualifying incomes, have the proponents of this by-law considered the impact which this by-law will have upon our town services, especially our schools? It has been said that the Avalon Bay project of 252 units will swamp our school capacity. Full build-out under this by-law would allow for 600 apartment units (the 20 percent threshold of the by-law out of what will be 3000 total dwelling units in our town) to exist in our community. An infusion of high-density housing of the magnitude permissible under this by-law will place an overwhelming burden on every conceivable town service. Have the proponents of this by-law thought about these issues?

2) To follow up on the commentary by Mr. McCarthy last week, upon what data do the proponents of this by-law rely to come up with their 20 percent figure in the first place? I have never seen any data to suggest even remotely that our town's present population of 7261 people needs 600 apartment units. The senior citizens in our community who are house-rich and cash-poor will become quite cash-rich once they sell their home. It is common sense to realize that these cash-rich seniors will be able to afford an apartment at Avalon Bay. But to the extent we have low-income seniors or families in our community, 25 percent of the Avalon project — about 65 units — will be set aside for low income families and individuals, of which a certain percentage will be designated as "local preference" for current Cohasset residents. It just seems to me that the 252 units at Avalon will more than solve the need for apartments in our town for citizens of all ages and all income levels.

3) On the other hand, have the proponents of this by-law considered what will happen if Avalon Bay (which, as we all know, is being fought tooth and nail by certain groups in our community) ultimately is thwarted? My concern is this: Even after the total build-out of 600 apartment units as permitted by the by-law comes to fruition, we still will not have met the 10 percent threshold for low-income housing mandated under Chapter 40B — which means that we still could be subject to another 40B proposal at some future point. If that were to come true, our community truly would be inundated with apartment complexes. Is that the vision we have for Cohasset five years from now?

4) The Senior Housing Committee (SHC) has acknowledged that they have yet to determine whether the 10-acre site behind Stop & Shop is suitable for their plan to build an apartment complex. Why at this time are we considering a by-law which will encourage developers to build

Stop, look, and listen at holiday time

LOCAL VIEW

DON IVAS

The next several weeks on the calendar are composed of ordinary days where hopefully, the sun will rise in the east and set in the west and the world will still turn in all of its mysterious glory. But as we all know, interspersed in this stretch of time are a few holidays that have been crafted into a huge commercial anvil that is poised to drop on your head the minute you get entangled in all the hype.

I listen to many people in my line of work who admit to dreading the holidays because of the emotional toll it takes on them. We are confronted with expectations that are rarely filled; some experience a sense of nostalgia for times past when innocence and sheer excitement ruled the day. For many of us that have experienced loss, those feelings are exacerbated by the void left in our lives at a time when people feel a need to be together.

All these feelings are valid and should not be ignored and replaced with the hype. When this happens, people tend to overdo, overeat, over drink, overspend, until it's all over. The dust clears, we breathe a sign of relief and people sometimes ask one another, "Did you make it through the holidays?" It shouldn't be like this.

Folk singer John Prine once penned a line in one of his songs, "Blow up your TVs, throw away your papers, move to the country, and build you a home."

Some of what he says is great advice, especially cutting down on television consumption. Christmas shopping ads were on television the day after Halloween priming us for a crescendo that leads to implosion on Christmas Eve.

However you celebrate the holiday of your choice, first take a deep breath and make a promise to yourself that this time you will dig a little deeper and experience for yourself the meaning of these holidays on a new level. In order to do this, you have to be kind to yourself first, and then try and think of how many things, great and small, you have to be grateful for in this life. In spite of whatever situation we find ourselves in, there is always someone in a lesser or greater predicament. Everything we take for granted on a daily basis can be reflected on, from the obvious to the sublime.

Take some time for yourself, take a walk, read a book, write a letter by hand to an old friend. Realize you cannot be all things to all people and be at all places at all times. Learn to say No Thank You.

Practice random acts of anonymous kindness, perhaps make a donation to your favorite charity in a friend's name. There are countless ways to give to others without traveling far from home.

The Social Service League will have a Giving Tree set up at the Consignment Shop to accept gifts for children of parents who are in local shelters or substance abuse facilities. We are also bringing John Yowzinski, the director of Father Bill's Place to Cohasset for our Lunchtime Speaker Series on Friday, Dec. 6. He ought to have a few words to say about the number of people who are really down and out and what we could do to help in some way.

Many people are aware and appreciative of the gifts they have been given and on occasion, found acceptance in the tragedies that have touched them. We all have experienced a little of both—it comes with the territory of being human. Hopefully, this little reminder will allow some of us to slow down and enjoy our time over the holidays without undo stress.

I can't help but remember what was drilled into my head by the crossing guard in grade school: "Stop, Look and Listen." This advice was to keep us from getting hit by a passing car; perhaps it could be applied to what has become a freight train of holiday activities. Look through the eyes of a child, let those starry eyes fill you with awe and anticipation: go ahead, get giddy, have some fun, no one's watching.

Donald J. Ivas is the administrative director of the Social Service League of Cohasset

Going the distance to find a relative

TIMELINES
SMALL STEPS INTO YOUR FAMILY HISTORY

JACK MURRAY

I hear so many people talking about their family history. "Is that the same thing as Genealogy? It sounds like an awfully complicated thing to do."

According to the dictionary, it is "an account of human family pedigrees of ancestors or relatives: the investigation of pedigrees as a department of knowledge".

Actually, Genealogy and Family History are pretty much the same thing, except that when you really find the history of your family, you have entered upon the most rewarding legacy that you could pass along to your family and future generations.

Rewarding is an understatement and intriguing are the wondrous things that you will experience. Let me tell you of an astounding thing that happened to me, not at the beginning, but a short time after word got out that I had been hooked on genealogy. "Anything that you can give to this addicted person, will help him in his quest for his Family History—so give him a hand"

Out of the blue at a chance meeting, not with a relative, but with a friend of a distant cousin who in his travels had picked up some names of people; he didn't know who they were, but he seemed to feel that they might have some connection with "the Family".

I was interested in any thread to find Murrays. But the name he had given to me was a Mrs. Carberry, who lived in a suburb of Dublin in Ireland. He had an address and telephone number: "For what it's worth, you may want to contact her". At that moment in time I had no intention of traveling to Dublin to follow this vague lead.

My son, Doug, who was fascinated by stories of Ireland was planning a vacation trip to "The Auld Sod" a short time later. Since he would be in the Dublin area, I asked him to contact Mrs. Carberry, and he did. He called the telephone number many times, unsuccessfully, and then went to the address I had given to him and rang the doorbell.

Rewards and intrigue: A lady answered the door and Doug introduced himself explaining the his father had asked him to try to find a Mrs. Carberry He showed her the simple charts I had given to him of the Murray Family as I knew it. She said she was Mrs. Carberry, she was pleased that he had called and asked him to come inside, because she felt that she had something to tell him.

What she told him was that her mother, Josephine Murray Gallagher, and my father — were sister and brother. I had never picked up in my research who Aunt Josephine had married and of course did not know of her daughter, my newly-found first cousin, Mrs. Anne Gallagher Carberry.

This is a great lesson in the importance of including siblings in your research. It could result in many happy moments like this.

To know where your family came from, how they got here and what it took to create your family history, is the most rewarding aspect about getting to know your ancestors. But there is much more to it than that..You have inherited from your ancestors all the bits and pieces that are "you" such as, your personality, your stature, the color of your eyes and hair (or lack of), your latent talents, interests, tendency toward a vocation and, most certainly, you share the same illnesses passed down to you through your DNA.

I found all this to be true when I met Anne Carberry for the first time two years later, when my wife and I visited our son Doug, who had made the decision to move his family to Shannon on the west coast of Ireland.

Plans were made to meet Anne at a halfway point, between Shannon and Dublin at Roscommon and then travel together to a small hamlet on the outskirts of Strokestown called Clooneraugh, home of the ancient Murray family. By agreement, we met in a small pub in Strokestown. Doesn't everyone meet in a pub in Ireland?

Let me describe Anne Carberry. When we met for the first time in that pub, she looked so familiar. She was petite, with red hair and features that were remarkably like my sister Mae. To make it more binding, Mae was christened Mary Josephine –scary. There were so many similarities, her manner, the color of her hair; she also had green eyes and to top it all they were both nurses. The tendency toward a vocation was definitely in the genes. These are all the factors we spoke about earlier, that were so predictable.

Although the old family homestead was no longer in the family, the new owner was very hospitable and invited us to come inside where Anne described how, as a young girl, she would spend her summers here on the farm with our mutual grandparents, Honoria and John. The loft where the children slept was still there, although the house was no longer a thatched roof cottage but had been modernized by the new owners. Of course we took pictures from every angle and absorbed all the memories from our new links to our family history.

I came away from our visit to Clooneraugh feeling that while I had missed the opportunity to know my Irish family, I was very fortunate to cement a wonderful link to the past. I have made another step into my Family History.

Timelines evolved from a course I have been presenting for many years called " A Logical Approach to Family History Research," and most recently at the Gerontology Institute at the University of Massachusetts, Boston.

My mission has been to give direction and guidance, in a structured environment, to people who wanted to search for their ancestors.

It has been almost 20 years since Alex Haley wrote "Roots," which started a ground swell of people who also wanted to find their roots. Today it is estimated that more than 80 million people are swarming to libraries and archives trying to find their ancestors to build their family trees. It has become a large industry of computer software, how-to books, magazines, consultants and new genealogical societies. The growth of data bases with huge amounts of information is attracting subscribers, sometimes at very large cost.

I will caution you to be careful of the information coming to you about "your family;" the intentions are good but the sources may not be reliable. Be careful of schemes, there are many out there. You are only secure with information about your ancestors when you go to reliable sources and are careful in selecting a source. This is not a perfect world, and in the case of genealogical research, there is a great deal to be desired, as you will soon find out.

You may feel that searching for your 'Roots" is just too big a job. So many times people have said to me," I wouldn't know how to get started, and I certainly don't have a clue that will lead me to my family of bygone days

If you are just getting started, learn the basics by only working on one of your family lines at a time.

If your are searching more than one family, set up separate records for each family. I use different colored binders so that each is easily identified.

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Will your holiday meal be remembered as a great gastronomic delight or as the source of dreaded gastrointestinal distress? The turkey that you serve can be risky if you are not careful selecting and preparing it. Poultry products such as turkey and chicken are primary sources of the bacteria Salmonella and Campylobacter.

These organisms are the two most commonly reported causes of these food-borne illness according to the Massachusetts Department of Public Health. Symptoms, such as stomach cramps, vomiting, diarrhea and fever, usually occur 1-5 days after eating foods with high levels of bacteria. Usually bacteria such as these are not harmful at levels typically found in these food sources. However, when these microorganisms are given favorable conditions, they can grow to harmful levels and make people sick.

The moist high protein content of turkey provides needed nutrients for bacteria to multiply. With warm temperatures (from 40°F to 140°F) and enough time (usually 2-4 hours), bacteria can multiply rapidly from hundreds to thousands per bite! Therefore, it is vital to keep foods out of the Danger Zone, the temperature range of 40° F to 140° F.

While turkey may be the original source of bacteria, these organisms can spread to other foods. Cross-contamination may occur when you stuff the turkey and do not properly wash your hands or cutting utensils before slicing vegetables for a snack or appetizer. The cutting board and/or knife are contaminated with bacteria and, without thoroughly cleaning, can spread the harmful bacteria to the uncooked vegetables. Your hands may be the source of other bacteria as well.

The Department of Public Health recommends that you protect yourself, your family and friends by following these 10 safe turkey tips.

Separate foods - don't cross-contaminate

1. When you shop, keep the turkey away from other foods in your shopping cart.
2. Place the turkey below other foods in your refrigerator in order to prevent other foods from becoming contaminated with juices from the turkey.
3. Use a separate cutting boards for cooked foods and raw foods.
4. Never put the cooked turkey on the unwashed plate that previously held the uncooked turkey.

Clean your hands and food surfaces often.

5. Wash your hands with hot soapy water before you touch the turkey and after you use the bathroom, change diapers, and play with pets.
6. Wash all cutting boards, dishes, kitchen tools and counter tops with hot soapy water after you finish fixing the turkey.

Cook foods to safe temperatures.

7. Cook the turkey thoroughly. Use a food thermometer to check for doneness.
8. Cook whole turkey unstuffed (or dark meat only) to 180 F
9. Cook a turkey breast to 170 F

Chill foods promptly.

10.It is best to thaw the turkey in the refrigerator, not at room temperature.

Thaw a whole turkey in the refrigerator.

8 to 12 pounds 1 to 2 days
12 to 16 pounds2 to 3 days
16 to 20 pounds3 to 4 days
20 to 24 pounds4 to 5 days

In a pinch you can also thaw the turkey in cold water. Cook the thawed turkey immediately.

〈 Put prepared foods and leftover turkey in the refrigerator within two hours.

〈 Split large amounts of leftovers into small bowls and cool them in the refrigerator.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I don't know how to break it to you old folks but it was exactly 25 years ago today (Wednesday) that Al Capp's "Li'l Abner," one of the most popular comic strips of our generation, made its final appearance in print after a run of 45 years.

Never again would the beauteous and leggy Daisy Mae chase Li'l Abner Yokum across the funny pages. Marryin' Sam had already performed his $1.35 ceremony over them. No more "Schmoos," the little critters that multiplied like rabbits and keeled over dead and cooked if you looked hungrily at them.

Never again would Hairless Joe and his Indian companion, Lonesome Polecat, distill their particularly powerful brand of Kickapoo Joy Juice where the revenooers couldn't find them. A native American named Lonesome Polecat? What do you suppose today's PC police would do with that one?

And how would the PC police of the '70s handle Al Capps' folksinger, Joanie Phonie, and her followers known as SWINE, which stood for "Students Wildly Indignant about Nearly Everything?"

It was the Golden Age of comic strips, those years when we were young and ice covered most of the earth.

My particular favorite was Flash Gordon, the Rambo and James Bond of his day, who dashed off with his girl friend, Dale Arden, and a scientist, Dr. Hans Zarkov, in a spaceship to do battle with Ming the Merciless, emperor of the planet Mongo.

Buck Roger was still active at the time, a U. S. Army Air Corps lieutenant who awoke from his 500-year sleep (or suspended animation) in time to pick up girl friend, Wilma Deering, and the scientific genius Dr. Huer and zoom into space to combat his arch-enemy, Killer Kane.

Having tried spinach, I'm afraid I sympathized with Wimpy.

Popeye the Sailor was active then, too, downing a can of spinach to give him the strengthen to defend his girl friend, Olive Oyl and the youngster, Swee' Pea, and the hamburger-loving J. Wellington Wimpy from the brute, Bluto. Having tried spinach, I'm afraid I sympathized with Wimpy.

Some of the comic strips from the Golden Age, like Blondie and the Phantom, are still around but others regrettably are long forgotten.

Who now remembers "Krazy Kat," who had a thing for Ignatz the Mouse, only Ignatz kept throwing bricks at him (or her) despite the best efforts of Offissa Pupp?

Or "Bringing Up Father," in which Maggie and Jiggs, an Irish couple, get rich winning the Irish Sweepstakes and Maggie turns into a snobbish nouveau riche lady while all Jiggs wants to do is eat corned beef and cabbage and play pinochle at Dinty Moore's Tavern.

Irish Sweepstakes? Now there's something else that dates you! But I digress . . .

There were the 'Katzenjammer Kids," Hans und Fritz, the German kids who predated Dennis the Menace in their pranks that defied authority, mostly against Der Captain; and Mutt and Jeff, the long and short of it, the cynic and the wise fool.

And "Barney Google," the sporting man with his horse. Spark Plug, and his friend from the backwoods of Kentucky, Snuffy Smith, who with his wife, Lowizie, eventually took over the lead in the strip; and "Gasoline Alley," with Skeezix Wallet and his girl friend, Nina Clock, and his brother, Corky.

And "Tillie the Toiler," the saga of an incredibly beautiful secretary to Mr. Simpkins and part-time model who had suitors by the horde but always returned to her faithful Mac. She finally married him after a whirlwind courtship of some 30 years. Whereupon, the strip sank without a trace.

Maybe the funnies were trying to tell you something, huh?

EDUCATION

Dave Brown, a Channel 5 meteorologist, recently came for a visit to the Joseph Osgood School second grade classes. The children enjoyed this visit quite a bit as did Dave. Here are some writing samples from some second graders in Mrs. Wells class.

Learning about weather

By Whitney Malone

Dave Brown taught the 2nd graders about weather. He talked about heat waves and how they're so powerful to hurt people. He uses a map to know where the weather is. He uses the camera to tape his shows. I learned that hail is more powerful than hurricanes, tornadoes and blizzards. I also learned that they use a thermometer to see what the temperature is.

Using a satellite

By Cody Piepenbrink

Dave B. taught the 2nd graders weather. The worst storm is a blizzard. He showed us a movie of a hurricane. The worst storm that kills the most people is a heat wave. He uses a satellite to see what kind of clouds.

Worst is a heat wave

By Kevin Crawford

Dave Brown came and taught the 2nd graders about weather and the tools that he used. The worst weather is a heat wave. A blizzard happens because there are snow, (cold temperatures), and strong wind. He uses a satellite. He uses a computer.

apartment complexes almost anywhere in town before we know whether the SHC's plan can go forward? I think we are placing the proverbial cart before the horse.

In sum, speaking only as an ordinary citizen, I feel that with or without Avalon Bay, the 20 percent threshold for high-density apartment complexes is too high and truly will change the face of our town overnight. I suggest that we see what happens with Avalon Bay — it is much further along the construction track than the SHC plan — and then decide what is appropriate in terms of a by-law change. In the meantime, the SHC still can try to figure out whether their 10 acre site is even buildable. But if the private sector is going to solve our community's need for both market-rate and affordable rental units (of which there unquestionably is a need), then there is no reason for our town to get involved in the housing construction business, using tax dollars to do so, and radically amending our zoning by-laws which will alter irrevocably the face of Cohasset.

LeClair proud of effort

TO THE EDITOR:

Last Tuesday's election was a disappointing end to a long journey, but the trip was a great experience. I want to thank everyone who voted for me. I am indebted to the many volunteers who worked on the campaign. You should all be proud of your effort. Although we were not successful in gaining more votes, we were successful in bringing important issues to the debate. Healthcare, education, and the South Shore Hospital cardiac surgery license are matters that will remain key issues that need to be solved. I will, as I hope you will too, continue to fight for the South Shore. Thank you again for your support.

IT'S HAPPENING

Picture book on courage

Bernard Waber, award-winning author and illustrator, will present his latest book, "Courage" (Houghton Mifflin Co., $15) at Buttonwood Book and Toys in Cohasset on Friday Nov. 15 from 3:30-5 p.m. Waber, best known for his stories about a lovable crocodile named Lyle, has written a delightful new picture book about the different types of courage. Types that normal, ordinary people exhibit all the time. Such as the everyday kind; like being the first to say hi in a new group, the admirable kind; like holding fast to your dreams and the heroic kind; like a police officer or a firefighter. Powerful in its simplicity and timely in its subject matter, "Courage" celebrates the moments, big and small, that brings out the hero in each of us. Waber will give a short presentation and a book talk as well as sign his book. This is a free event and the public is welcome. Please call 781-383-2665 to order your signed book if unable to attend.

Pop-up book at Buttonwood

Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset will host Robert Sabuda on Saturday, Nov. 16 from 4-6 p.m. Sabuda is an artist who has taken paper engineering to its ultimate level. A paper engineer is an artist who creates pop-ups using paper as his or her primary medium.

The term "pop-up" is a catchall phrase for all moveable and dimensional art. His newest book is a pop-up adaptation of Clement C. Moore's, "The Night Before Christmas" (Little Simon, $24.95). The illustrations are breathtaking as reindeers jump from the pages in your hand and Santa rises up the chimney. His work is fascinating to children but is also highly regarded by adult collectors. Sabuda will do a brief pop-up demonstration at the beginning of his visit.

This is a free event and the public is most welcome. Please call Buttonwood at 781-383-2655 to order your signed copy if unable to attend.

Art at the Abbey

On Saturday, Nov. 30 and Sunday, Dec. 1, the Hull Artists Studio Connection in cooperation with Glastonbury Abbey invites the public to enjoy their 2002 Holiday Gift Giving Extravaganza, "Art at the Abbey." Gifts of fine arts and crafts include painting, drawing, photography, sculpture, crafts, jewelry, greeting cards, woodcrafts, ceramics, children's books and so much more.

The hours for Saturday, Nov. 30 are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday, Dec. 1 from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Art at the Abbey will be held in the Conference Center at Glastonbury Abbey, 16 Hull St., Route 228 North (and one-quarter mile from Route 3A going toward Nantasket). There is plenty of free parking.

The Hull Artists Studio Connection is a non-profit artists' organization. For more information, either call 1-800-413-1770 or visit their Web site at www.hullartistsstudioconnection.com.

Coffeehouse hosts folk piano, ballads

On Saturday, Nov. 16, at 8 p.m. the Old Ship Church's Coffeehouse off the Square presents the delightful folk piano of Jacqueline Schwab and the passionate ballads of singer songwriter Christopher Williams.

Jacqueline Schwab's warm and evocative piano playing is best known from her Grammy-winning sound track for Ken Burns' "Civil War" and for other documentaries. But she does far more, playing for traditional dance groups, recording with her group Bare Necessities and with Scottish fiddlers Laura Risk and Alastair Fraser, and Scottish singer, Jean Redpath.

Complementing Schwab will be Boston-based singer-songwriter-percussionist Christopher Williams. This Boston Music award winner accompanies himself on guitar and the African drum, the djembe He recently had three sold-out shows at Club Passim, so be early for this first South Shore appearance.

The coffee house is at the Old Ship Church's fully accessible Parish Hall, 107 Main. St., Hingham Square, a few doors up from the Loring Hall Theater. Events begin with an open microphone, allowing singers, dancers, poets, mimes, jugglers, storytellers ... to be seen and heard by our attentive audience.

Tickets are $10 at the door and coffees, teas, cider and homemade desserts are 50 cents. Net proceeds benefit programs of the Unitarian / Universalist Service Committee.

Festival of trees

Friends of the Paragon Carousel Inc., 205 Nantasket Ave., Hull, presents the First Annual Festival of Trees at the Carousel. The gala grand opening will be Friday, Nov. 29, from 6 to 9 p.m. Tickets: Child $2/Adults $10. Tree lighting entertainment, refreshments.

The event runs Nov. 30, Dec. 1, 6, 7, 8, 13, 14, and 15. Hours: Friday, 4 to 8 p.m. Saturday, 4 to 8 p.m. and Sunday, 3:30 to 6:30 p.m.

Bring a can good or food item for the Wellsprings Food Pantry and receive a "Good Deed Coupon" for a free ride on the Carousel.

All about the Autism Center

The Autism Center of the South Shore is a group of parents and professionals dedicated to providing resources and support to families living with Autism Spectrum Disorder, (ASD). The Department of Mental Retardation (DMR) made a suggestion that an Autism Resource Center be founded to help the growing number of families affected by ASD. Autism is a lifelong neurological disorder, affecting every demographic and socio-economic group worldwide.

ASCC currently serves 10 South Shore communities, Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Milton, Norwell, Quincy, Randolph, Scituate and Weymouth. There are a number of recreational programs including swimming, bowling and ice-skating. Each of these activities affords the children to be involved with other children and adults, and affords parents the opportunity to share with other parents. A music therapy group started recently, and there are plans for other support groups.

To a parent of a newly diagnosed child, there is a bewildering amount of information to process, on both the medical and educational fronts. Having access to parents who have been through the process gives some the sense of balance, that the road need not be traveled alone. It may be that there are siblings, another area of concern for the parent. Once again, the ability to talk with parents who have been in the situation gives a hopeful perspective from which to begin.

If you would like more information about the Autism Center of the South Shore, please call 1-800-482-5788, or visit the website, www.autismsouthshore.org. Please take the opportunity to sign up for the newsletter, which has information on upcoming events, such as the benefit concert at Fontbonne Academy, Milton, MA, on Friday, November 22, 2002. The Matt Savage Trio will be performing an evening of Jazz Music. Matt Savage is the ten-year-old Jazz piano prodigy who has been featured on the Today Show, in People Magazine and the Boston Globe. Ticket information is available on the Web site. There will also be a Conference on Feb. 8, at Eastern Nazarene College.

One-woman play for the holidays

"Faith and Hope: A Mother's Story" is a one-woman play for the Advent Season. Written and performed by Olivia Woodford, she portrays the women who surround Mary during the events leading up to Jesus' birth. The play's characters feel great joy as a promise and a long-held hope is fulfilled.

The play is a unique theatrical event for the Christmas season. "Faith and Hope: A Mother's Story" will be performed at St Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset on Sunday, Dec. 15 at 3 p.m.

Free will donations will be gratefully accepted and will benefit the St. Stephen's Youth Group Outreach Project at the Mary Martha Learning Center in Hingham.

The play involves the stories of three significant women in Mary's life.

The play involves the stories of three significant women in Mary's life: her cousin Elizabeth who gave birth to John the Baptist; Leah, who studied in the temple with Mary as girls; and Hanna, the temple seeress who declares the identity and mission of the baby Jesus.

Woodford, who received a BFA in theatre from Boston University and was a professional actress in New York City, is the founder of Healing Theatre, and known for the three women of the Bible plays that she has created and performs. She has done numerous performances at churches of various denominations throughout the country and new resides in Malden.

She developed the plays to foster an understanding of the women's perspective in scripture. Out of her desire to further understand the women who are, for the most part, given brief descriptions in the Bible and yet central to the lives of Jesus and his mother, Woodford wanted to know what these women may have felt and had to say.

The play has also been made into an audio CD. A wonderful gift for the season, it can be purchased at the time of the performance or online at www.bible-women.com.

A tale of two ballrooms and believing in vibes

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of the week in state government ending Nov. 8.

The best part of Election Night is the two rooms.

The winner and the loser are always in the same sort of space. This year Mitt Romney was in the ballroom of the Park Plaza, Shannon O'Brien in the Sheraton. A person couldn't visit both places and come out not believing in vibes.

The Romney room had a hum before the first result was announced. The Republicans – and there were many unfamiliar faces, a result of the draft movement that started Romney toward the Corner Office – had already gotten word that some suburbs seemed to be heavily favoring their man. When the first percent of the vote went up – 51 percent Romney, 45 percent O'Brien – the room caught a political buzz that never diminished.

Fifteen blocks away and 15 minutes later, the Sheraton looked festive but felt dreary. Faces were peaked and unsmiling. The ballroom was suffused with that sensation you had on Shot Day in the fifth grade, when everybody had to line up and get their vaccinations. Something interesting, personal and unpleasant was going to happen, and you had to put a brave face on it because people were watching. The big surprise for everyone was how, like getting a shot, the pain was delivered so fast. Polls had shown Romney erasing O'Brien's single-digit lead in the last week, and that momentum obviously picked up after her "This is How I Smile at People I Hate" performance in the final debate.

At the Statehouse, the day after these turning-point elections is always refreshing and uncertain, like the first day of ski season. Lots is about to happen, but hasn't yet. These days are always about number crunching and second-guessing.

The most interesting component of this race was how every part of the Democratic machine was operating correctly — or thought it was — and still failed. The state has obviously changed. Politically, it is more like the rest of the nation now. When turnout is heavy, in the absence of an especially good or bad campaign by either side, the state as whole votes just right of center. This independent ideology is more important than the old operations by the unions and special (Democratic) interests.

There is no good news analysis without stealing, and this week let's be more blatant than normal and name the victims of our larceny. Best thought: Cosmo Macero of the Herald explaining how O'Brien was hurt by the early, public coronation of Robert Travaglini as the next Senate President, creating a "Gang of Three" for Romney to run against. ("Trav" welcomed Mitt to that gang last Wednesday.) Best line: Brian Mooney of the Globe saying the Republicans are now left in the irregular configuration most of us have experienced in Monopoly: they hold Boardwalk and Park Place and not much else. Best Food for Thought: old pro Peter Lucas ruminating: "If Ted Kennedy were just starting out, he couldn't win."

Campaign mode ended instantly, as it always does, and Romney promised a fast start, as most new executives like to do. He also began a honeymoon.

Gov-elect makes the rounds

While calling him "charming," House Speaker Thomas Finneran wondered aloud how Romney plans truly to balance the budget without new taxes or cuts in essential services. It was worth wondering how Finneran proposes to do it as well. He announced himself "very, very reluctant" to consider new tax hikes. But unlike Romney, who makes balancing the budget sound like a relatively pain-free task, Finneran said: "There is nothing left that's easy or pleasant. Everything is going to be difficult."

The governor-elect met for the first time in months with the woman he pushed from the race last March, Jane Swift. She and her budget aides gave him numbers about as bad as what he expected. The "insiders" at the Statehouse got their first look at the governor-elect as he held his first press conference at the foot of the Grand Staircase and pronounced himself ready to deliver on his campaign promises.

Democrats still all-powerful

Those independents turning right didn't have too many candidates waiting for them when they did; most legislators ran unopposed or against unfamiliar - and most importantly, underfunded and unsupported names. Only three members of the House lost: Rep. David Bunker of Rutland, Rep. Jose Santiago of Lawrence, and Rep. Ruth Provost of Sandwich. The new body will comprise 136 Democrats, 23 Republicans and one independent. That's if Rep. Matthew Patrick, D-Falmouth, who prevailed over his Republican by just 11 votes, survives a recount. The Senate will remain 34 Democrats, six Republicans.

Voters signaled how conservative they're feeling by coming within 10 points of repealing the income tax – it was perhaps the most telling vote of the election. They overwhelming eliminated bilingual education, 68 to 32 percent, though Romney said he'd file legislation preventing teachers from being sued under that law. And voters said "no" to using public money for campaigns, by a 75 percent to 25 percent vote. The questions asking representatives to vote against Finneran by and large passed easily; but some of the targets of those questions said they'd ignore the voters' dictate.

Cohasset Police join state 'Click It or Ticket' campaign

Chief Robert W. Jackson announced the Cohasset Police Department will join more than 260 Massachusetts local police departments and the State Police in a Thanksgiving Holiday traffic enforcement "mobilization" Nov. 18 to Dec. 1 as part of the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau's "Click It or Ticket" campaign. The department received a $ 4000 grant to support its involvement in the campaign.

"This Click It or Ticket mobilization will reduce the danger we all face from motor vehicle crashes during the heavily-traveled Thanksgiving Holiday period," said Chief Jackson. "In addition to preventing aggressive and impaired driving and speeding, this mobilization will allow us to increase compliance with the Massachusetts safety belt and child passenger safety laws so more people will be protected."

The Governor's Highway Safety Bureau's "Click It or Ticket" campaign, made possible by a federal highway safety grant, combines traffic enforcement, paid and non-paid media messages, as well as community education and outreach. States that participated in last May's "Click It or Ticket" mobilization saw an overall 9 percent increase in safety belt use. For more information, go to www.mass.gov/ghsb.

"We strongly urge those using Massachusetts roadways during the Thanksgiving Holiday period to drive sober and well-rested, to obey posted speed limits, to allow extra travel time for emergencies, and to make sure everyone is properly buckled up," said Nancy J. Luther, Executive Director of the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau. "This Click It or Ticket mobilization will encourage safe driving practices that will reduce the more than 400 fatalities, 91,000 injuries, and $6.3 billion in economic costs from motor vehicle crashes that annually devastate Massachusetts families and our economy."

There were 10 motor vehicle crashes that resulted in 10 fatalities during the four-day Thanksgiving Holiday period in Massachusetts.

Chief Jackson provided the following information on safety belts, booster seats and child safety seats:

〈 Safety belts reduce the risk of death or serious injury in a motor vehicle crash by half. Yet a 2001 statewide survey conducted by the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau found only 56% of front seat occupants wear safety belts in Massachusetts – compared to 75% belt use nationwide. The lowest usage rate was among teens 16 to 19 years old at 50 percent.

〈 Massachusetts law requires all drivers and passengers to be properly restrained in a safety belt, booster seat or child safety seat. A driver may be stopped by police solely for having a child 12 years of age or younger improperly restrained ($25 fine per child).

〈 Massachusetts law requires children under five and weighing less than 40 pounds to ride in a child safety seat. Children five and older AND weighing over 40 pounds must wear a safety belt. For maximum safety, children 40 to 80 pounds should ride in a booster seat. Children over 80 pounds and taller than 4 ft. 9 ins. are ready for an adult safety belt.

〈 Children 12 years of age and under, especially those riding in a rear-facing child safety seat, should always ride properly restrained in the back seat away from an air bag.

Police arrested 13 last month

October was a moderately busy month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were 13 arrests, three for Operating Under the Influence of Liquor, two for Shoplifting, two for Assault with a Dangerous Weapon, one for Receiving Stolen Property, one for Breaking and Entering in the Nighttime, one for an Outstanding Warrant, one for Protective Custody, and finally two for Operating after License is Revoked.

During the month of October the police department investigated 13 motor vehicle accidents, nine of which resulted in personal injury. There were 101 Motor Vehicle Citations issued totaling $2,845 in fines. Additionally there were 66 parking tickets issued for $1,825 in fines.

In the month of October there were 13 Criminal Complaints issued, one for Receiving Stolen Property, two for Annoying Phone Calls, four for Motor Vehicle Violations, and finally six for Minor in Possession of Liquor.

Also in October our Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 1,096 calls for police services, of those 152 were Emergency 911 calls.

In the month of October there was one Breaking & Entering of a residence, cleared by an arrest.

ANNUITY OWNERS READ THIS!

Some annuity owners lose 70% of the value of their annuity to taxes! Will this happen to you?

It's true. Annuities and IRAs can be double-taxed assets (subject to income taxes PLUS estate taxes). After estate taxes and income taxes, there can be as little as 30% of the value remaining. You can learn how to help avoid the loss in the FREE educational booklet "Annuity Owner Mistakes." The booklet is free and shows how to help avoid double taxation and get more benefits from your existing annuity value.

Green Wave scuttles Skippers

Abington washes away Cohasset gridders' Super Bowl dreams

SPECIAL FOR THE MARINER

Abington's defense would bend but it would not break, as the Green Wave washed over the Skippers, shutting them out, 25-0, last Friday night in Abington to grab firm control in the South Shore League title and playoff chase.

Over 500 Cohasset fans showed up to support the Skippers in their quest for back to back South Shore League Championships on a mild night. An off night by the Skippers offense in the red zone, combined with a strong Abington defense, and a few questionable calls against the Skippers defense, leads to the SSL crown for the Abington Green Wave football team.

Cohasset won the coin toss and deferred to Abington, who elected to receive and on their opening drive took advantage of a personal foul against the Skippers, combined with four running plays to open the scoring on a 20-yard TD run by Greg Anderson. The kick by Chris Kenney made it a 7-0 game with just 1:52 elapsed.

On Cohasset's first possession, the Skippers proceeded to march 58 yards on the running of halfback Braun Goodson, quarterback Mike Snowdale and fullback Ted Straughn. Straughn broke off a 10-yard gain behind the blocking of center Matt Casey, right guard Steve Davis and right tackle Cosimo Cambi to bring the ball to Abington's 1- yard line, visit number one to the red zone. Three rushing attempts to the left side were stopped cold and a fourth down pass attempt fell incomplete, enabling Abington to take over on downs.

Cohasset's defense forced a short Abington punt after three short running plays were stopped, and the Skippers had the ball back at the Green Wave 22-yard line late in the first quarter. Cohasset extended the series into the second quarter before again being stopped on downs by a strong Abington defensive front. This time, the hosts prevented Snowdale from hitting D J Silvia and fellow wide out John Durkin in Cohasset's second visit to the red zone.

Abington then used a combination of a strong running game and short passes by quarterback Brian McSharry to march down field and convert on several crucial third down plays. The time

Cohasset sophomore Tim Pilczak averaged an outstanding score of 42.5 per nine holes this season, making him a deserving Honorable Mention selection.

All-Scholastic golf team

Cohasset's O'Brien, Pilczak and Hajjar named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young men you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

Cohasset High had three players we considered strongly – senior Greg O'Brien, junior Mike Hajjar and sophomore Tim Pilczak, all of who consistently scored in the low 40s per nine holes this season. All three received Honorable Mentions.

After consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top 13 golfers in Marinerland for this honor.

Ryan Collins - Junior - Hingham

A Patriot League All-star, Collins finished second individually at the PL tournament…Collins' consistent play this season helped Hingham capture the Patriot League title in undefeated fashion (12-0) and a near-perfect overall season (15-1)…Collins was the co-medalist in 12 of 15 matches for Hingham this season…A year-round player, Collins plays Jr. Golf during the summer…Collins received the co-MVP award for his Hingham team this season. Hingham coach Jack Curran: "He's a very intense player and it shows. He's

Taking the next step

Girls soccer team eyes even bigger things in '03

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

If this season was any indication as to where the girls soccer program is headed, the race for the South Shore League crown should look quite different next year.

Behind the skill and leadership of 11 seniors, the Lady Skippers qualified for the State tournament for the first time since 1995. Even though they were forced into an early exit from the postseason by a powerhouse Ashland squad two weeks ago, their surprising season has left many bright spots for coming years.

The Lady Skippers racked up a 10-7-1 record this year, more than doubling the amount of wins the team had seen in its previous two years. Although their non-league schedule may have been intentionally soft (including a trio of contests against Holbrook), fifth year coach Deb Beal now knows that her team can stay competitive against some tougher opponents.

The seniors were clearly the key to success on this team, leading the way on all lines of the field. On offense, co-captain Molly Flanagan was a scoring force all year with crafty footwork and an effective lefty shot. The outside speedsters Yasmine Afshar and Maura McKenney were instrumental with the team's control of the midfield this year, a major component in most of their wins. Lindsay Grossman, a terrific athlete who converted from field hockey her senior year, proved to be a tremendous addition to the midfield line, quickly learning the team system and earning a starting role on the team.

On defense, co-captain Julie Lordan and Katherine Coyne provided excellent protection for goalies Kelly Holway and Brittany Novak. Coyne and Lordan could easily be pointed to as the difference-makers in any of their one-goal victories this year.

Seniors Nicole Needle and Emily Dean were tough hustlers with plenty of experience

Pilgrim Conference to dissolve

After ACL votes to break away, remaining leagues head off on own

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Shortly after 10 schools voted formally to break from the Pilgrim Conference, last week, member schools from the Patriot League and South Shore League also voted for independence, essentially dissolving the Conference after 13 years.

The Pilgrim Conference is currently made up of 33 schools in five different leagues: the Big Three League, Old Colony League, Atlantic Coast League, Patriot League and South Shore League.

The course to split the Conference after the 2003-'04 school year was set in motion in July when the seven schools that presently make up the Atlantic Coast League and three schools from the Old Colony League – Plymouth South, Falmouth and North Quincy — officially informed the MIAA that they wished to break from the Pilgrim Conference. Representatives from all 33 schools within the Pilgrim Conference met at the Kingsbury Club in Kingston to formally vote on whether to accept the split. The vote was 29-4 in favor, with only four schools from the current Old Colony League in opposition.

Representatives from the South Shore League and Patriot Leagues — the smallest two of the five leagues within the Pilgrim Conference – then went into league caucus, and returned with news that they too wished for independence, leaving only the Big 3 and Old Colony League in the Pilgrim Conference. With OCL schools unlikely to team with the Big 3 — Brockton, New Bedford and Durfee (with those schools being double the size in enrollments) – this essentially deems meaningless the purpose of the conference. It is therefore expected that action to officially dissolve the Pilgrim Conference will be taken at the next meeting, March 11. If, as expected, that vote passes, the Pilgrim Conference will be no more as of July 1, 2004.

Not surprisingly, the four schools who voted against the 10 team split were Bridgewater-Raynham, Barnstable, Marshfield and Taunton, the four Old Colony League schools who will be left with no partners in sports as of July, 2004.

The fifth remaining OCL school team, Silver Lake, did not vote against the split. Silver Lake will lose approximately 800 students from its 1,800 enrollment base in the fall of 2004 to the new Pembroke High School. Silver

Coach Nigro leaves boys soccer program in better shape than he found it

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

As much as he hates to leave it behind, at least Dave Nigro figures he's left the Cohasset High boys soccer program in better shape than he found it three years ago.

"I've had a lot of fun and would love to stay, but I just don't see how I could fit it in, and it wouldn't be fair to do it halfway," explained Nigro, improved so much over the last year and has become much stronger. He's hitting the ball longer off the tee than when he was a sophomore."

Nick Fee - Junior
Hingham

Since his freshman season, Fee has made an undeniable impact on the Hingham golf squad…This season, Fee's performance helped the Harbormen capture its second Patriot League title in three years at 12-0 and a near-perfect regular season at 15-1…A two-time Patriot League All-star, Fee's 79 at the Div. 2 South Sectionals qualified him for the State Individual competition…In his freshman season, Fee shot a 78 at the Sectionals, which was key to the Harboromen's title with a low 311 score…Fee plays year round competing in summer Jr. Golf tournaments…Fee was named the co-MVP of his Harbormen team this season. Hingham coach Jack Curran: "Nick is an intense player but is very laid back and more relaxed. He has improved a lot since his freshman season and we're looking for him to have a good senior year."

Steve Dion -
Junior - Rockland

Represented Rockland on the Patriot League All-star team for the second-place Bulldogs (9-3, 9-6 overall)…Was the No. 1 man for Rockland this season with an over-par stroke average of 4.1, well below that of the next person on the team (9)…Was third at the Patriot League tournament last season…Dion qualified for the State Individual championships this season…Dion also plays hockey at Rockland High and is a member of the National Honor Society. Rockland coach Jack Murphy: "He's a very smart player, with fine skills and a nice swing. He doesn't get rattled on the course. He plays his game and knows that its the score at the end of the round that counts."

Alex Redmond -
Junior (Capt.) - Abington

Last season, Redmond started as the No. 2 golfer, but midway through established himself as the Green Wave's top man, which he repeated again this season…Playing in one of the more competitive leagues, Redmond helped Abington (9-7) hold their own against South Shore League giants like Harwich and Mashpee…Recorded a season low score of 29 on Strawberry Valley's par 34, 9-hole course…Redmond is a two-time South Shore League All-star and plays in summer golf tournaments. Abington coach Bill McMann: "Alex has a very good short game. He chips and putts very well."

Rich Collins -
Junior - Abington

One of the most consistent players on the Abington team, Collins was an interracial part of the Green Wave's interchangeable starting six…Collins came on strong in the final regular-season stretch, winning his last three of four matches…Collins was voted a South Shore League All-star this season and helped Abington notch a winning record of 9-7, in a league which contains golf heavyweights like Harwich and Mashpee…A year-round golfer at Ridder Country Club, Collins spends his summers playing in Jr. Golf Tournaments. Abington coach Bill McMann: "Rich is a very good iron player. His biggest strength is his strength. He has a bit of a streaky short game, but he's putting in the effort to work on it. He's a student of the game."

Matt Bramwell -
Senior (Capt.) - Marshfield

A four-year varsity golfer, Bramwell has been the backbone of the very young Marshfield (4-11) squad…A captain and stellar senior leader, Bramwell has won the individual league sportsmanship award for Marshfield for three consecutive seasons (one Atlantic Coast League, two Old Colony League)…Consistently led by example on a team primarily comprised of freshmen and sophomores…Bramwell is a year-round golfer, playing summers at the Marshfield Country Club…He is also a three-sport athlete at MHS, playing basketball and baseball in addition to golf. Marshfield coach Jack Crowley: "Matt is the epitome of everything a student-athlete should be. He's a great competitor and an excellent leader. I wish I had 15 more just like him."

Matt Lombard -
Sophomore - Hanover

A freshman sensation last season, Lombard kept on going this year as Hanover's No. 1 man…A two-time Patriot League All-star, Lombard qualified for the State Individual Tournament but was unable to attend due to a minor hip injury…Lombard, a lefty, was fourth at the Patriot League tournament this season…He finished the season with a 3.8 over par average for Hanover (5-7)…Just a sophomore, Lombard has a lot of golf left to play at Hanover High. Hanover coach John Sullivan: "Matt is very consistent off the tee. He hits a very solid ball and is a confident putter. He also has a very good attitude about the game."

Adam Mueller

Adam Mueller

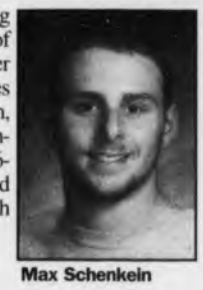
This Old Colony League all-star emerged quickly as the Lakers number one player this year, averaging an excellent team best score of 39.5 per nine holes to help lead the Lakers to an 11-5 season and in to the state tourney…shot an excellent 1-over par round of 37 in Lakers biggest win of year, a 229-234 defeat of OCL powerhouse Bridgewater-Raynham on that team's home course…low round for the years was an even par 36 at Silver Lake's Halifax Country Club…has been a member at Halifax C.C. for last five years…Silver Lake golf coach Eric Flaherty: Adam was our go to guy. He was the guy we matched up with tough opponents all the time and he almost always came up with a good score. He's extremely consistent. He has a lot of skills and a beautiful swing, and he works hard on his game. I'm looking forward to having him with us the next two years."

Brian Dorney
Junior - Norwell

Brian Dorney

One of only three South Shore League players to qualify for the Div. 3 individual championships, this after finishing fifth overall with a score of 79 at the South Sectionals at Foxboro Country Club…averaged an outstanding score of 36.7 per nine holes…Brian filled some huge shoes in taking over as Norwell's number one golfer for Ben Spitz, the two-time state individuals champ now on full golf scholarship at TCU…compiled an individual record of 8-4…helped lead the Clippers to a 7-5 record in the extremely competitive SSL…a three year regular in Norwell's rotation…a well-rounded athlete who chose golf over baseball as a freshman when it was a spring sport, and then over soccer when golf became a fall sport last year…Norwell coach Ken Camerota: "Brian has been a long hitter since his freshman year, but the area he really improved in this year was putting. That's helped bring his average down quite a bit. He had to fill some huge shoes this year, but he stepped up like a champ to the challenge."

Max Schenkein
Junior - Norwell



Max Schenkein

The junior averaged an outstanding score of 39.7 per nine holes this season, while compiling a 6-1-4 record in match play…helped lead the Clippers to a 7-5 record in the extremely competitive SSL…a very consistent and well-rounded player…three year regular in Norwell's rotation…works at Four Seasons Golf Club in Hingham, so gets to play there…also plays basketball and baseball at NHS…Norwell coach Ken Camerota: "The big thing about Max is his consistency. He's a long hitter and very steady in all parts of his game. He really works hard on improving."

Ben Brigham
Sophomore - Scituate

Ben Brigham

Ben and freshman Hunter Talcott stepped to the fore this year to help give the Sailors an exciting 1-2 punch, leading the team to a post-season berth with a 6-5 record…shot a team best 82 at Foxboro Country Club for the South Sectionals of the state tourney…won the Patriot League post-season all-star match at SHS's home Hatherly Country Club, shooting a 5-over 77…averaged a score of 40.9 per nine holes…has been playing golf for six of seven years…was a member of the varsity lacrosse team as a freshman…is thinking about playing basketball this year…Scituate coach Bob Beatty: "Ben is one of the hardest working golfers I've ever been around. He's continually working on all parts of his game. He's a heavy hitter, but also very consistent on the drives. He's usually right down the middle of the fairway."

Jon Geehan
Senior - Braintree

Jon Geehan

The lone member of the Braintree High team named a Bay State League All-Star…Jon averaged 40.5 per nine holes this year playing out of the number one spot for the Wamps…a four year regular in the Braintree rotation…best round of the year was an even par 36 at Framingham's home golf course…has been a member at the Braintree Municipal Golf Course for the last seven years…is thinking of majoring in Golf Course Management, and is considering a few schools down south, including St. Leo's in Florida…Braintree coach Bob Crook: "Jon has been a big part of our team for four years. He hits the ball a long way and has really worked to get better with every club in his bag. He just loves the game."

Scituate-Cohasset Youth gridders win two Super Bowls, tie for a third

Four of the five teams from the Scituate-Cohasset Youth Football program advanced to Super Bowls in their respective divisions this past weekend, and two of those four came home with the much coveted hardware, while a third wound up sharing the crown.

In Div. 1, the Scituate Shark PeeWees topped Marshfield 12-0 at Bridgewater's Legion Field on Sunday.

Three Scituate teams squared off with Hingham team in Super Bowl battles Saturday night at Scituate High, with the home team splitting those decisions.

The Scituate Stingray PeeWees won the Division 5 Championship, topping Hingham, 6-0

In an earlier game, the Stingray Mites played their Hingham counterparts to a 6-6 deadlock.

The StingRay Midgets lost 16-0 to Hingham in the middle game, but still had a very successful winning season, the highlight of which was a thrilling 6-0 win over Barnstable in overtime to advance to the Super Bowl..

The Midgets were co-champs during the regular season with a record of 6-1-1.

Key two-way players included Alex Cuomo, John Collins, Jack Dings, Sean Cooney, Mike Skane, Steve Ferriter, Ben Wicks, Brad Sportack, Mike Berlo, and Ryan Kane. Key offensive contributors included QB Joe Barisano, Frankie Dixon, Steve Corsaro, Sam Buckley, Danny Breen, Alex Fitzgerald, and Nick Giampetro. Key defensive contributors included identical twin brothers Dan and Mike Judge, David Pinkham, Cody Adamson, twin brothers Jordan and Nathan Barry, Eddie Gorman, Evan Simons, Pat Swanson, Paul O'Leary, Robbie McCourt, and Danny Ghergurovioch.

who boosted the team off the bench all season.

While there may be many pairs of cleats next year's team needs to fill, the junior and sophomore class proved they are quite capable.

The junior duo of Jen Buckley and Gillian Weber combined to shoulder most of the scoring load for the Skippers this year. Buckley recorded 12 goals, and Weber added eight, totaling well over half of the Lady Skippers' 35 goals this year.

Holly Graham had another excellent season as the starting sweeper for the team, earning a spot on the South Shore League All-Star team. Her .speed and instincts made her a major force on defense all year.

Novak, who got the nod to start in the playoff game, received valuable game experience this year, and showed she can handle the position well. Her hard work and dedication to improve her game were quite evident this year.

The current sophomore class also has some heavy hitters for the future. The Junior Varsity squad, coached by Cara Connerty, nearly had a perfect season, finishing the year 12-2.

Sophomores Rachel Garber, Christine Lovallo and Nicole Whitney all proved that they could compete at the varsity level, fitting in nicely during the playoff game against Ashland. Although it was their first varsity action, the three combined to all but take Ashland's number one scorer, Lauren Kelliher, out of the game.

The team will have to undergo some serious construction over the offseason, but Beal is confident that if her charges return in the same physical shape they're in right now, the team should be right back in the postseason hunt in '03.

End of the line

who led the Skippers to the quarterfinals of the Eastern Mass tourney in each of the three years since taking over the program, after announcing his resignation earlier this week in deference to both professional and family considerations.

Nigro, a contractor, is preparing to start a job on the North Shore that is estimated will take over a year to complete. In addition, his oldest son, currently a senior at B.C. High, will be starting college in the fall and may be playing soccer. He also has a teenage son who plays football, and a 3-year old daughter.

"I'd like to be able to see my son play football," continued Nigro, who lives in Hull. "I haven't been able to do that much the last few years with my schedule, and I'd like to be able to spend more time with my daughter too. It wasn't an easy decision (to resign), but it was the only sensible way to go."

Nigro, who has coached his older son in soccer at the upper Club level for years, does take solace in the fact that he's left a program with a strong foundation for whoever takes over.

"That was my goal when I started: to help build a good program, and I feel I've had some pretty good success," he said. "You can always look at things and wish you'd done better, but I think, overall, we've done pretty well. Things seem to be going in the right direction for the program."

Cohasset Athletic Director Ron Ford, who made Nigro one of his first hirings after taking over as Athletic Director in the summer of 2000, concurs.

"Dave has done a tremendous job, and we hate to see him go," said Ford. "I've always been extremely impressed by the way he does things. He makes the kids work hard and he sets a high standard, but the kids have responded to him, and they respect him. Plus, he's an extremely knowledgeable coach who knows how to teach the game of soccer.

"Whoever does take over for Dave will have some big shoes to fill, but they'll inherit a program with kids who have been shown the right way to do things."

The successor will also inherit arguably the most talented senior class Cohasset High has seen in several years.

Juniors Chris Clark, Coner Buick and Craig Laugelle were all named South Shore League all-stars after the fall season. Clark, who quarterbacks the offense from his center midfield spot, was the team's second leading scorer and was also named to the All Eastern Mass team.

Buick was the team's stopper and Laugelle a fullback, which translates into the Skippers being strong on defense again next season.

"Coner could be a dominant player in back next year, and Craig is very, very steady," noted Nigro. "Those are two excellent pieces to have in place."

Junior forward Dave Santiago led the team in scoring, and Nigro feels he has the potential to improve significantly on that output next year with a little more attention to detail.

"Dave has a lot of talent and a lot of athleticism," said the outgoing coach. "He's a good kid. If he bares down a little more he could really light this league up next year."

Other returning junior starters are midfielder Jesse Brewer and sweeper J.T. Oronte.

"It's a good class," said Nigro. "Having a seasoned group like this should definitely help make the job of the new coach a little easier to start."

Juniors Andrew Wise and Andrew Busk also saw varsity playing time and should add depth. Ditto for sophomores Jon Littauer and Sam Steele, and freshman Aidan Buick, Ben Libby and Matt O'Connell, with the latter frosh a starter through much of the second half of the season.

"Matt had a real good year for a freshman, and I think you could really see him blossom next year," appraised Nigro. "Libby and Aidan showed some good things too. They just need to get more comfortable and consistent."

This is not to say the team won't miss the outgoing seniors. Co-captain Evan Pestone finished third on the team in scoring, and fellow captain Robert Hickey proved valuable whether playing up front or in back.

And then there's team MVP Curt Kahn, who moved from forward to keeper in his senior season, and, despite never having played that position at the high school level, quickly emerged as a force between the pipes.

"The more I thought about it after the season the more I realized how steady Curt was; he really was our MVP," said Nigro, who made this official at the teams breakup banquet last night. "Considering he'd never played there at this level, it really was amazing the way he settled in so quickly to such a tough position."

The heir apparent to Kahn in net is freshman Prescott Busk (Andrew's brother), who had a very good season of keeping at the JV level.

"Prescott looks like he should be ready to step in at the varsity level next year,' noted Nigro. "That's something else the new coach will have going for him: stability in net. I had to start over with a new goalie in each of my three seasons."

Nigro named others who he feels are ready to make the jump from the JV level, sweeper Sam McDonald being one name he mentioned repeatedly.

"I think they're going to have a good team here next year, and that would obviously make me happy," concluded Nigro, who was named the EMass High School Coach of the Year in 2000. "It's been a lot of fun. It's a different kind of challenge from the club level. I learned a lot of things from coaching at the high school level. It's been a good experience."

Cohasset tennis player gets world ranking

Chum Steele 10th Among 55-and-Over Men

By Terry Kahn
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Four years ago, Chum Steele was inducted into the New England Tennis Hall of Fame.

Two years ago, Steele took his 16th national title, the first he'd won in 15 years.

This year, the renaissance continues.

Completing his first season on the global International Tennis Federation Veterans' Tour, Steele has become the 10th-ranked singles player among the world's 55-and-over players.

"Actually, I could move into the top five by the end of the year," said Steele, 58, a few weeks back. The former Cohasset High School boys' tennis coach (when his son Daniel was a student there) is scheduled to play in both the Brazilian and Argentinian national veterans' tournaments in November. Steele won the Argentina title in Buenos Aires last fall to launch his run into the top 10.

Besides Argentina, Steele also captured the Hungarian veterans' championship this summer, lost in the semi-finals of the United States Grasscourt Championships on Long Island, and lost in the round of 16 at the ITF World Championships in Velden, Austria. The ITF runs the Davis Cup, the Grand Slam events including Wimbledon and the US Open, and several other worldwide series.

"I played six events this year," said Steele, "and because it was my first year on the circuit, I was never seeded in the singles. Starting with the South American events in November, I'll get a favorable placement in each draw and should do even better."

In January, Steele is tentatively scheduled to compete in Australia.

Steele, teaming with Charles Hoeveler, his doubles partner of the past two years, will also likely be ranked as America' number-one doubles duo in the age group. One of the greatest doubles competitors in New England history and on the world circuit in the late Sixties and early Seventies, Steele made the main singles draw at Wimbledon five times, and the United States championship draw 10 times. His titles include four national mixed doubles indoor championships, seven national father-and-son doubles championships with his father, Chauncey Steele, and close to ten senior men's doubles crowns.

Interestingly, Steele – at his peak as a world-class singles player – was never ranked higher than 21st in the United States.

"And there weren't any world rankings back then," he recalled, "so I don't know where I stood globally."

Now there are only two US players – Hugh Thomson at 4 and David Nash at 8 – ahead of him in his age group. Argentina's Julian Ganzabal is the current leader in the world rankings, followed by a German and a Hungarian.

"The only thing holding me back now," said Steele, "is the expense. If you come across anyone looking to support an old tennis bum – and the itineraries are great – let me know."

Chum Steele and his wife in South Africa for seniors tourney last year.

Green Wave scuttles Skippers

consuming push covered 80 yards and ended when Adam Bowser plunged into the end zome fro mthree yards out to make it a 13-0 game.

After the Skippers failed to move on their third series, they had their only punt of the night and the Green Wave again proceeded to move into Cohasset territory. A questionable face mask penalty enabled Abington to convert on a crucial third down.

The Green Wave then got another break with less than a minute to go in the first half when their receiver was jolted by defensive back Mike Dooley 15-yards down field just as the ball arrived. The ball popped loose quickly, but was ruled a catch and fumble rather than an incomplete pass, as many on the Cohasset sidelines thought it should have been. The ball was then recovered on Cohasset's 24-yard line by an opportunistic Abington player who was trailing the play.

The Green Wave capitalized on this break with eight seconds left in the half as an 11-yard pass to the left flat was hauled in for a touchdown by Greg Anderson and made the score 19-0 just before the Abington band hit the field for the halftime show.

There was no quit in the Skippers, though, and they proved it with a strong drive to open the second half. The return brought them out to the 41-yard line. Straughn got Cohasset to midfield with a strong 9-yard run. An Abington player stripped the ball on the next play, however, to dash the hopes of a quick momentum turner from the Cohasset offense.

Cohasset's defensive unit — consisting of a front four of Nick Spirito, Steve Davis, Ben Lynner and Sean Connolly, a linebacking corps of Tony Truglia, Matt Casey and Cosimo Cambi and deep backs Dooley, Tom Anderson, Matt Davis and Durkin — stopped the Green Wave on downs at Cohasset's 18 yard line.

The offense then put their best drive of the night together, with Snowdale being provided fine pass protection from Dan Tarpey, Nick Arment, Casey, S Davis, and Cambi. Snowdale hit tight end Tom Anderson for a 25-yard gain and Cohasset had the ball at the Abington 8-yard line, red zone visit number three. However, the Green Wave's defense stood strong once again and took over on downs at their 5-yard line early in the fourth quarter.

The Skippers defense then forced Abington to punt, and senior punt returner John Durkin returned the ball to Cohasset's 37 yard line with thre minutes left in the game.

With the Green Wave going to a prevent defense, they proceeded to pick off a Skipper pass.

With 1:44 to go in the game, Abington closed out the scoring with the help of another questionable completion call in the end zone.

The win give Abington a 4-0 record in South Shore League play (7-1 overall) and clinched a berth in the Div. 5 Super Bowl playoffs against the Catholic Central Large champ Archbishop Williams. The Green Wave's lone remaining league game is with Mashpee (2-6, 0-4) tomorrow, and a win here would give them their first sole possession of the league crown since 1981.

With the loss, Cohasset now stands at 2-1 in SSL play (7-1 overall), with two home dates left versus Norwell (tomorrow night, 7 p.m. kickoff) and Hull (Thanksgiving morning).

Our reputation stands behind them.

Great sound. Small size. No compromise.

With more than 30 years of industry-leading innovation, Bose® has created three acoustic waveguide products that are favorites of audio critics and music lovers alike. After experiencing their award-winning sound, compact size and intuitive simplicity, you'll understand why Bose is considered the most respected name in sound.

Rich sound from our top-of-the-line integrated system.

Why settle for the big and bulky components of an ordinary stereo when you can enjoy the extraordinary sound of a sleek, all-in-one music system? The Acoustic Wave® music system includes an AM/FM tuner, a CD player and something you won't find in any conventional stereo – our acoustic waveguide speaker technology. Much as a flute strengthens a breath of air to fill an entire concert hall, the waveguide produces rich, room-filling sound from a small enclosure. In fact, when we first introduced the Acoustic Wave® music system, Sound & Vision said it had "possibly the best-reproduced sound many people have ever heard." Hard to believe the entire system is the size of a briefcase.

You'll hear the difference the very first time you turn on the Acoustic Wave® music system. Patented Bose technology gives your favorite CDs and radio programs a clarity and richness that will astound you. And with our credit card-sized remote, you can control this award-winning sound from the palm of your hand. With all this, it's no wonder many people use it as their primary stereo.

Even smaller systems for even smaller spaces.

Wish you had great sounding music in your bedroom or office? Try the Bose Wave® radio, with or without the built-in CD player. It utilizes a smaller version of our acoustic waveguide speaker technology to give you sparkling high notes, rich deep low notes and a clarity that's remarkable for something its size. The Oregonian said that the Wave® radio/CD "remains one of those little unexplained miracles of acoustic physics." Our original Wave® radio is designed just as impressively. Other features include dual alarms, a credit card-sized remote control and six AM and six FM station presets.

Call and make 12 interest-free payments.

Take advantage of our payment plan and make 12 interest-free monthly payments. And be sure to ask about our free shipping offer. Choose the Acoustic Wave® music system, our premium waveguide product, and we'll send you a Bose Multimedia Pedestal with inputs for your TV, VCR, DVD player and another music source – absolutely free. And no matter which waveguide product you choose, our 30-day risk-free in-home trial guarantees your satisfaction.

So let Bose put an acoustic waveguide product in front of you. And hear all that stands behind them.

Order the Acoustic Wave® system by Dec. 31, 2002 and get a FREE Pedestal – a $149.95 value.

Call today, 1-800-725-2073, ext. C1334.

Lake Athletic Director Bill Johnson said it is possible his school will apply next year for admittance to the Atlantic Coast League in 2004. With an estimated 1,000 students, that would put Silver Lake, if it was admitted, in the lower third of those schools (in terms of student enrollment) slated to become the new ACL.

It has also been reported that Pembroke High School will likely apply for entrance in to the Patriot League. A student body of 800 would make Pembroke the fourth largest in the current seven school alignment, and word is that Patriot League officials are receptive to the idea of expanding to include Pembroke.

Conference dissolution will likely have little impact on the two small leagues – the Patriot and South Shore Leagues. The Athletic Directors and coaches from most of the schools have long standing good working relationships with one another, so frequent scheduling across league lines should continue.

OCL schools have in the past enjoyed a similar type of partnerships with ACL schools, but that has gradually deteriorated over the last few years, with geographical differences becoming an ever increasing deterrent. In fact, it has been suggested this might have been another factor in the split.

Pilgrim Conference officials, obviously knowing in advance where last Tuesday's meeting was headed, invited to the meeting representatives from current Eastern Athletic Conference schools Dartmouth and Attleboro to gauge their interest in joining the Old Colony League in 2004.

"Attleboro and Dartmouth seemed fairly receptive," reported Marshfield Athletic Director Glen Ward. "We'll just have to see how it plays out. Adding those schools would solve some of the problems we're looking at in terms of scheduling."

Officials from Attleboro and Dartmouth, as well as from Somerset High, will be invited to the March 11 meeting to continue discussions on a possible jump to the OCL.

Clearly, regardless of whether these schools join the OCL, the school that appears the biggest loser in all of this is Marshfield High. Already the smallest school in the current OCL with1,251 students (Oct, 2001 numbers), MHS is dwarfed in size by the other three schools which will remain in the OCL – Barnstable (1,978), Taunton (1,852) and Bridgewater-Raynham (1,533). An additional hardship would be created by travel. Taunton and Barnstable are a good one hour bus ride from Marshfield High, and Somerset, Dartmouth and Attleboro are even further.

"With schools looking to cut athletic budgets, that would create a pretty difficult position for us," noted Marshfield AD Glen Ward.

Not surprisingly, Ward said his school intends to apply for entrance in to the new 10 team Atlantic Coast League. If Silver Lake is accepted in to the ACL, that would make 11 schools and Marshfield would make 12, making a perfect fit for the plan of ACL directors to go with "South" and "North" subdivisions. Geography and student population would also both seem to place Marshfield High right in the middle of that picture.

Despite all of these circumstances seeming to speak favorably for Marshfield High's admittance, however, Ward claims he's been told by "a few second hand sources" that his school's application would likely not be accepted by ACL officials – a scenario that clearly has the Marshfield A.D. both scratching his head and bristling.

"I've asked if there's anything personal there, or if anyone from Marshfield High has done anything improper that might turn people against us, but people keep saying 'no'," said Ward.

He has heard, however, one possible explanation for the shunning: football. The M.H.S. football team dominated the ACL for years before joining the OCL in 2001, capturing the league championship five times between 1995 and 2000.

"The thing I keep hearing is 'football'," reported the AD. "It sounds like, because of our success, other schools don't want us. If that's true, that's incredibly unfair. Because of one sport, there's no room for 23 other sports?! How do you justify that?"

Not surprisingly, general opinions following last Tuesday's votes were split right down the middle.

Nauset AD Al Sullivan offered: "Sometimes people get caught thinking that change is necessarily a bad thing, but that's not always the case. Populations change, communities change. The schools that made this move all agree it's a good thing."

Interestingly, Silver Lake AD Bill Johnson used this observation about the ever-changing nature of communities to make the exact opposite argument.

"Two or three years from now, these schools that were so quick to split could be in a lot different position," noted Johnson. "Some schools could get bigger, some could get smaller. They've locked themselves in to something permanent and there are a lot of other factors that aren't going to be permanent. That was the idea behind forming the Pilgrim Conference in the first place: to give us some flexibility."

History

The secession card was first played by Atlantic Coast League school principals in July, a few weeks after Pilgrim Conference officials did not respond favorably to proposals made by these schools at a realignment meeting in mid-June. On Sept. 26, the Mariner was the first newspaper to report this.

At the June meeting, Atlantic Coast League school principals and athletic directors were looking to head off the Pilgrim Conference realignment in 2005 that would go strictly by student enrollment numbers. Specifically, they were concerned Dennis-Yarmouth and Sandwich could be moving "up" to the Old Colony League and Nauset "down" to the Patriot League, moves that would break up some natural rivalries as well as necessitate an increase in travel costs to already strapped athletic budgets.

"It just didn't seem like the (other Pilgrim Conference officials) were sympathetic to our situation," said Nauset High Athletic Director Al Sullivan. "We felt we had to take action now, while we still had some control. If we'd waited to the beginning of school to inform the MIAA, that would have cost us another year, because the (bylaw) says you've got to give two full years notice."

Sullivan felt it made more sense to secede from the Conference a year prior to scheduled realignment, explaining that trying to do both in the same year would cause "mass confusion" and "possible further fragmenting."

Subsequently, the principals of the seven ACL schools voted to form their own independent athletic league, and principals from three schools currently aligned with the Old Colony League — Plymouth South, Falmouth and North Quincy — voted to join them. These 10 schools then formally notified the MIAA of their intent to split with the Pilgrim Conference after the 2003-'04 school year in order to form this new independent league.

The plan now is to form two divisions of the Atlantic Coast League, with Nauset, Dennis-Yarmouth, Sandwich, Plymouth South and Falmouth in the South Division and Plymouth North, Whitman-Hanson, Randolph and the two Quincy teams in the North Division.

In sports such as soccer, field hockey, basketball, hockey, baseball and softball, divisional rivals would meet twice during the season, while South and North teams would meet only once. This would mean only two or three long trips south or north a year and more "free dates" to arrange non-league games against schools from neighboring towns – all of which could account for considerable savings in the travel budgets.

"There is pressure from school committees to cut budgets and principals can go back and show them this," said Sullivan. "We're cutting the budget without completely disrupting athletic issues here."

"We wanted to control our own destiny to a certain extent. The schools in the ACL right now are great partners in sports. We all work well together. If there's a problem, we can call one another and work things out. We don't have people who hide in bunkers and avoid the situations. We have a good situation right now. Why wouldn't we want to keep it?"

School officials from other Pilgrim Conference leagues, not surprisingly, repeatedly expressed frustration in recent months over this drastic measure taken by the 10 renegade schools, some even charging them with hypocrisy.

"These ACL schools voted Scituate (High) back and forth all those times between leagues," noted Norwell High Athletic Director Jim Sullivan (no relation to Al). "No one is innocent in all of this. I think we should be looking at the best interests of the group, not individuals."

In the end, however, none of this positioning and posturing made any difference.

BRINGING BACK THE RITZ

Re-making history

Iconic Back Bay Ritz-Carlton reopens in grand style

By Greg Gatlin
BOSTON HERALD

Carlos Villalobos, a 30-year bartender at the Ritz-Carlton, Boston, is back at The Bar, making his famed martinis, stirred 12 times — not 11, not 13.

Norman Pashoian, the doorman who has welcomed guests at the hotel's Newbury Street entrance for 55 years, has also resumed his post.

Cobalt blue chandeliers now hang from The Dining Room ceiling, and 19th century artwork again adorns the Ritz's walls.

In fact, many of the traditions endure as the grande dame of hotels reopened its doors after a one-year, $50 million overhaul. But interior designer Frank Nicholson has given Boston's 75-year-old original Ritz a new vibrancy.

Nicholson, whose Concord firm has designed many of the Ritz-Carlton hotels worldwide, said the goal was to bring back the luster and ambience of a historic property without drawing attention to the changes.

"We thought that if we did a really terrific job, even though we have made a lot of improvements, people couldn't be sure what is new and what has always been there," Nicholson said.

Still, Caron Le Brun, area director of public relations for the Ritz-Carlton, said the renovated hotel has "never been so opulent."

A color scheme of celadon, or pale green, deep golds, soft corals and blues is woven into custom-made carpets, draperies and silk-fabric paneling on the walls. There are new European furnishings. Pattern stone floors have replaced marble floors at entryways.

A Cape Cod glassblower recreated pieces of cobalt blue glass to replace broken pieces in The Dining Room's signature chandeliers. Some interior walls have been removed, giving the hotel more window views and breathing room.

The old Ritz offers fireplace butlers that help guests select from a menu of firewoods for bedrooms and suite fireplaces. The bath butler offers a bubble bath and a choice of fragrances. Along with the bath you can have champagne, cookies and milk, or even a rubber ducky.

Anthony Pangaro, principal with Ritz owner Millennium Partners, said the hotel's faded elegance has been restored. Pangaro said he is not worried about putting $50 million worth of renovations into a luxury hotel at a time when the local hotel and visitor industry has been pinched by a tough economy.

"You can't do these things for the moment," he said, adding the hotel will survive down times because of its tradition.

Rooms are going for the same $495 a night they were when the hotel closed.

The Arlington Street Ritz's expanded lounge, legendary for its afternoon tea, is already booked through December, Le Brun said.

Pangaro also brushed off the renovated hotel's possible effects on Millennium's more modern Ritz-Carlton, Boston Common. The hotels target different customer types, he said.

The hotel's formal opening is slated for Friday, Nov. 15.

Winston Churchill, Neil Simon and Nomar Garciaparra have all been drawn to the elegance of the Ritz-Carlton.

How suite it is!

By Anna Kasabian
THE BACK BAY COURANT

All of Boston's finer hotels have what is called a "Presidential Suite." By definition, this is the best room money can buy, is the most spacious and offers the most breath-taking views and many special amenities. They are booked year round by royalty, celebrities and the very wealthy.

At the Ritz-Carlton, Boston's presidential suite, luxury and pampering are the daily bread. The suite is set off on a corner of the new wing with unobstructed, sweeping views of the Public Garden and Commonwealth Avenue. It is a place of quiet elegance, newly redecorated by hotel interior designer Frank Nicholson. Even the color tones, whether they are in the marble or the fabric, are quiet, and easy on the eye. Nothing screams "look here." It all just flows with warm and cool tones.

The foyer, dining room, bar and living room have no walls separating them. When the drapes are wide open, you can marvel at the magnificent view from many angles.

There is also a cozy kitchen complete with stove and small refrigerator, a master bedroom suite and guest bedroom. The stylish marble bathroom has its own Jacuzzi.

Room sizes are comparable to any Back Bay condominium. The master suite, for example, includes the bedroom which is about 12-by-20 feet, a master bath measuring 19-by-7 feet and a dressing room of 8-by-17 feet. The presidential suite with one bedroom is $4,000 and with a second adjoining guestroom it is $4,495.

The Back Bay location of the Ritz-Carlton provides some stunning views.

This is a wonderful place to hide or to throw a party for 30, and in the past, it has functioned well in both realms. According to Caron Le Brun, area director of public relations for the Ritz-Carlton, the late Richard Burton lived in this suite for an entire month when he was playing in "Private Lives" with Elizabeth Taylor. They had divorced by then, and she resided at another hotel.

Other celebrities who enjoyed the suite in the past include Prince Charles who stayed here during the 350th anniversary of Harvard. The suite has also hosted Robert Goulet, Sylvester Stallone, Liza Minnelli and The Backstreet Boys. Comedian Jerry Lewis and his poodle puppy stayed here, as did Morris the Cat, with his trainer. Morris, who was on tour at the time, was greeted Ritz-style with a bowl full of fresh milk in a crystal bowl.

75 years of history at the Ritz

1927: Ritz-Carlton, Boston opens May 18. Edward N. Wyner grants rooms only to those whose social standing he personally approves. Unknown potential guests must be screened. Telephone reservations are not accepted.

1927: The first celebrity to book a room is Swedish film star Sigrid Holmquist. The Ritz's fame lasts longer than hers.

1929: Irving Berlin writes "Puttin' on the Ritz" for the film of same name and generates countless future headlines. (The phrase has appeared in 43 headlines worldwide just in the past two years.)

1931: While at the Ritz, lyricist Lorenz Hart composes "Ten Cents a Dance" for the musical "Simple Simon."

1933: The Ritz Roof Garden opens with Eddie Duchin leading the band.

1933: Ritz-Carlton menus change from French to English.

1935: Wyner stops police from searching the Ritz for three murderers. "I can give you the pedigree of every person in this hotel," he says. And he does. Police leave after the recitation and later catch the killers elsewhere.

1938: The Ritz Bar opens with a separate area for ladies.

1939: George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart work on "The Man Who Came to Dinner" while staying at the Ritz.

1941: Wyner welcomes African-American actor Eddie "Rochester" Anderson. He also orders the dining room to serve guests regardless of race.

1946: A hurricane destroys the Ritz Roof Garden. Wyner turns the roof into a private playground for his family and a practice golf range where he entertains celebrity friends, including Ted Williams.

1947: Norman Pashoian is hired as bellboy. He is today the longest-serving Ritz-Carlton employee.

1948: Moss Hart sets his play "Light Up the Sky" at the Ritz.

1951: The Ritz Cafe opens.

1957: Norman Pashoian becomes Newbury Street doorman, the job he still has today.

1959: While staying at the Ritz, Oscar Hammerstein II writes his last song, "Edelweiss."

1961: Edward Wyner dies.

1964: Cabot, Cabot & Forbes and its chairman, Gerald W. Blakely, take over ownership and management of the hotel.

1965: Neil Simon rewrites the third act of "The Odd Couple" while staying at the Ritz during the play's Boston tryout.

1970: The first unescorted women are admitted to the Ritz Bar and Cafe.

1970: In the children's book "The Trumpet of the Swan," Louis the Swan spends a night.

1971: The hotel lifts taboo on pantsuits.

1972: Bartender Carlos Villalobos composes the Ritz martini: stirred, not shaken.

1976: After their second divorce, Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton host a party for friends at the Ritz.

1977: Blakely sells Cabot, Cabot & Forbes and becomes sole owner of the Ritz-Carlton, Boston.

1981: The Ritz condos open.

1983: Blakely sells the hotel and the rights to the Ritz-Carlton name to William B. Johnson and the Ritz-Carlton Hotel Co.

1984: Finicky Morris the Cat stays at the Ritz and is taken to a performance of "Cats."

1985: Finicky actor Anthony Quinn demands a two-bedroom suite with kitchen. The Ritz tears down the wall between a one-bedroom suite and the next room.

1985: Manager Henry Schielein inaugurates the Men's Smoker.

1987: Judith Re debuts the "Social Savvy" program for kids.

1993: After 47 years, the Ritz Roof reopens. Peter Duchin takes on his father's role as opening-night band leader.

1995: Marriott International purchases 49 percent interest in Ritz-Carlton Hotel Co.

1995: The jacket-and-tie dress code is relaxed in the Bar and Cafe. The change makes headlines around the world.

1998: Marriott's interest increases to 99 percent.

1999: Millennium Partners buys the Ritz-Carlton, Boston and announces plans to build the Ritz-Carlton, Boston Common.

2001: The Ritz-Carlton, Boston Common opens Sept. 6. Nomar Garciaparra is the official first guest.

2001: Ritz-Carlton, Boston closes Oct. 7 for major renovation.

2002: In time for its 75th anniversary and exactly one year after it closed, the original Ritz-Carlton, Boston reopens.

Welcome back. Welcome Home. The lion roars again.

John Paul Sullivan talks to Deer Hill sixth graders about the Lakota Souix reservation.

Deer Hill lends helping hand

Holds drive for Lakota Souix

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

There is not much in common between Wamblee, S.D. and Cohasset, Mass.

Wamblee is a poverty-stricken town in the middle of the Lakota Sioux reservation, while Cohasset is quintessential New England.

But there are certain things – items really – that link the two communities despite their differences in distance and demographics.

For the last three years, the Deer Hill school – at the behest of custodian Ted Holland – has conducted clothing/useful items drive for their counterparts in Wamblee.

"It runs the gamut," said Principal Paul Callahan. "Anything from clothing to books, to tires, to plates, even bikes. Basically anything that can be used in a house."

Holland's friend John Paul Sullivan became involved with the Lakota Sioux when he began sponsoring a family there. For the past 10 years, he has conducted the supplies drive and then driven the materials out to South Dakota.

"He drives out right around Thanksgiving every year," said Holland of his friend. "He came here the other day and loaded up his truck. We had some of the after-school kids help us out, along with some kids we had asked during lunch. They were having a blast, running back and forth carrying the stuff, riding the bikes to the truck."

Beyond the fun of the process, Callahan says it also has a positive impact on the students.

"It helps to show them that there are other places in the world that are not like Cohasset," said Callahan. "(Sullivan) actually came to our school and spoke with some of our students about life on a reservation."

Holland hopes that the drive, which has increased in size every year, will get a big boost from this year's effort.

"I'm hoping that next year, when the Lakota signs go up, more kids will recognize it and want to get involved," said Holland. "The kids really do get excited, especially when they see the pile growing in the cafeteria."

The items, many of which were outgrown or no longer used, have a big impact on the Lakota Sioux.

"They really don't have much so every little bit helps," said Holland. "All these items are things they wouldn't have had otherwise."

Holland and Sullivan are considering running a Christmas gift program for the kids in December, but are still working out the details.

Schools in Duxbury and Brookline, as well as Thayer Academy, also contributed to the drive.

SAFEGUARD is on the Web

"Healthy Minds, Healthy Bodies," the Project SAFEGUARD Web site, is up and running. This site is designed as a resource to support the youth in the community. It's for parents, for kids, for teachers…for anyone who cares about making Cohasset an even more safe, nurturing, and responsible community.

Log on to www.cohassetpso.org/safeguard.htm to see what it's all about.

Along with a Parent Booklist of titles dealing with child development and adolescence, the Web site contains links to news articles, features, and resources for both parents and kids. Topics include Stress, Body Image, Bullying, and Drinking & Drugs. Over time the site may expand to cover issues for a wider age range. Content is researched and compiled by parent volunteer Sally Sisson, who also works as a freelance writer and editor specializing in educational publishing for the secondary-, middle- and high-school age range. Your ideas are welcome; visit the site and send in your comments or suggestions.

Project SAFEGUARD is a community initiative designed to supplement the health education program in our schools. It depends on parent and community volunteers, as well as community funding, to keep running.

Fr. Richard J. Bourgeois gives communion to a parishioner at Glastonbury Abbey.

Fr. Richard J. Bourgeois

In addition to his life-long interest in the Fine Arts, his commitment to pastoral ministry and inter-religious dialogue, his devotion to the beauty of monastic prayer and Catholic liturgy and his prodigious mind, Fr. Richard Bourgeois will be best remembered for his extraordinary capacity for friendship. His love of his friends took several forms but most memorable for many were Fr. Richard's meticulously prepared meals where his enthusiasm enhanced the joy and fun of the occasion.

His many professional and ministerial assignments took him around the world. A proficiency in languages and his vibrant personality made him accessible to and cherished by people from all walks of life and many cultures. In September, 1996, he was thrilled to be named an honorary citizen of the village of Amaroni in Calabria, Italy.

Richard Joseph Bourgeois was born Dec. 20, 1946 in New Bedford, the son of Stanley and Cremilde Bourgeois and brother of Stanley and John Bourgeois. Raised in South Dartmouth, he attended Dartmouth public schools, graduating from Dartmouth High in 1964. He joined the Benedictine monks of Glastonbury Abbey in 1965 and made solemn monastic profession in November, 1974. He attended St. Leo College, St. Leo, Florida and graduated from UMass, Boston with a BA in Psychology. He then received a Masters in Theology from St. John's, Brighton and was ordained a priest in 1976 by the late Cardinal Medeiros.

In his early years at the Abbey, Fr. Richard served as Abbey Choir Director and designed special community liturgical celebrations for Advent, Christmas and Lenten observances. For five years he was also the music director at St. Paul's Church, Hingham. Fr. Richard was part of the Monastic Formation Team and Retreat Staff for Glastonbury Abbey. Many people in the South Shore will remember Fr. Richard as the creative and indefatigable producer of "Summerthing," hilarious outdoor musical productions which brought hundreds to the great lawn of the Abbey for community and fun.

Fr. Richard pursued higher education and received a Licentiate in Sacred Theology from the Pontifical University of Sant' Anselmo in Rome, where he subsequently served as Registrar and later as Director of the Theology Renewal Program. Upon his return to Boston in 1998, Fr. Richard took on the role of Director of Development of Glastonbury Abbey and quickly became involved in the religious and civic life of Boston and especially of the South Shore area. He served as President of the Hingham-Hull Religious Leaders Association and as Regional Director of Liturgy for the Archdiocese of Boston. He was a devoted and active Board Member of the Terezin Chamber Music Foundation and of the Hingham Symphony Orchestra. He was also Chaplain of the Sons of Italy, Hingham Chapter #1850.

In 2001, Fr. Richard was named North American Director of the Patrons of the Arts of the Vatican Museum with residence in Dallas. After only a year and a half in this new role, Fr. Richard, in the full force of his personality, had successfully mobilized and vitalized the many chapters of the Patrons of the Arts in North America. He delighted in sharing his knowledge of the Arts and his photographic memory with the Patrons and he especially loved shepherding visitors through the beauties of the Vatican Museums and the intricacies of Rome, a city he knew intimately and always loved.

Recently, Fr. Richard had been diagnosed with a rare skin disorder, pityriasis rubra pilaris (PRP) and was undergoing treatment. On Wednesday, Nov. 6, Fr. Richard experienced serious complications and was rushed to St. Paul's hospital in Dallas where he remained in critical condition in the intensive care until he died early in the morning of Saturday, Nov. 9.

In addition to his religious community of Benedictine monks, his family — mother, Cremilde, brothers Stanley and John, niece Lisa Farrell, her husband Chris and their son Jack, nephews Scott and Michael, and numerous relatives in New Bedford, Dartmouth and California — Fr. Richard is mourned by his countless friends around the world. A memorial Mass was held on Sunday, Nov. 10, at the Cathedral of Our Lady of Guadalupe, Dallas, where Fr. Richard was in residence at the time of his death. Visiting hours will be on Thursday, Nov. 14, from 2-4p.m. and 7-9p.m. at Glastonbury Abbey Conference Center, Hingham. His body will be transferred to the Great Lawn of the Abbey where a Mass of Christian Burial will be celebrated on Friday, Nov. 15, at 10:30 am. Fr. Richard will be laid to rest in the Abbey cemetery following the Mass.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., handled the arrangements.

WORSHIP NEWS

Parish House dedication Nov. 17

First Parish Church of Cohasset will dedicate its newly renovated Parish House at noon on Sunday, Nov. 17, following the regular service. The Parish House is located on Main Street diagonally across from the Meeting House. A joyous reception for members and friends will follow.

Abbey series

Glastonbury Abbey announces its second speaker in The Glastonbury Series 2002-2003, "Listening to Other Voices: Hope in a Time of Uncertainty" on Nov. 21.

Guest speaker will be Patrice Gaines, who is an author, prison reform activist, and former newspaper reporter for the Washington Post. She has been featured on "Oprah," "Dateline" and on National Public Radio. Gaines will discuss "Hope: The Power to Create a New Reality" on Thursday, Nov. 21 at 7:15 p.m. in the Conference Center of the Abbey.

The talk is free of charge and donations are always welcome. For more information, call, 781-749-2155.

Church to host 'Joy of Our Faith'

The Rev. Dr. Nancy Jay Crumbine, a Unitarian Universalist parish minister, Dartmouth College professor, writer, actor, and public speaker will present an intergenerational workshop titled, "The Joy of Our Faith," on Sunday, Nov. 17 from 9-10 a.m. in the Parish House, 23 North Main St.. Crumbine encourages people of all ages to project their voices through improvisation, while engaging her audience in discussion, thought and song. She teaches the projection of voice and the art of being heard with the spiritual task of delving into the heart. Enthusiastic participation is expected and entirely voluntary!

Crumbine will also lead the First Parish worship service that morning at 10:30 a.m. All are welcome. Call 781-383-1100 for more information.

Police seek tips on theft

Cohasset police are investigating a theft at the Teen Center sometime Monday night. Det. Garrett Hunt said the thieves stole a video game system valued at about $350. He said they apparently gained entry through an unlocked window. The robbery was discovered by Recreation Director Jack Worley at about 9 a.m. Tuesday.

Hunt asked anyone with informaton to call the police at 383-1055. The callers can remain anonymous, he said.

Scituate artist Sergio Roffo works on his "Morning Reflections" of Cohasset Harbor at his studio. Roffo will show 30 of his recent works at The Guild of Boston Artists on Newbury Street in Boston through Nov. 30.

Career perks and peaks

Boston gallery showing Sergio Roffo's recent works

By Amy Lamblaso
ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

Sitting on the edge of a grassy bank at World's End in Hingham or on Minot Beach in Scituate, trying to capture the beauty around him with paint brushes — that's a typical "day at the office" for Scituate artist Sergio Roffo.

Roffo's office stretches along the entire coastline of the South Shore, Cape Cod and Martha's Vineyard.

And his work never stops — during family vacations, while driving his daughters around town or on a simple walk to the mailbox, Roffo said he's always looking for material for his next painting.

"You've got to paint from life," Roffo said. "The best things you see are often those that you don't expect."

Certainly Roffo didn't expect the great success he and his paintings have met since moving to the South Shore in 1991, but he is hoping it will continue.

Roffo is currently exhibiting more than 30 of his most recent coastal works in a solo show at The Guild of Boston Artists on Newbury Street in Boston.

The show which began this week and will run until Nov. 30 is the second gallery showing for him at The Guild and marks the peak of his career thus far.

"Waiting for the Tide at World's End," by Sergio Roffo.

"Since moving down (to Scituate), my work has taken off," Roffo said. "I always did cityscapes before, and now I concentrate on coastal scenes and can really get to the beauty of nature."

Born in San Donato, Italy, Roffo moved to Brighton, Mass. when he was 7 years old and began to notice the wonderful shapes and light reflections in a city skyline while in high school. It wasn't until he graduated from Vesper George School of Art in Boston that he found out the true meaning of a "starving artist."

"I would sit out on the street corner and have a sign next to me that said 'Painting Boston Harbor', just to get anyone to stop by and take interest," Roffo said. "It was rough, but it's what I had to do."

Today, Roffo sells his paintings for anywhere from $2,500 to $18,000 — what he calls an average price for professional artists. His paintings are displayed in five regional galleries in New York City, Connecticut and Maine and are stocked in many local

Jumpin' Juba rocks Norwell club

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

A combined five decades musical experience hits the stage at Mount Blue this Thursday evening. The Norwell venue will host Jumpin' Juba, the part-time side project of veteran Boston area musicians, blues singer/guitarist Steve Hurl and blues-boogie pianist Bruce Ward. For three years, the two have balanced this unique duo act with full performing schedules as solo players in their own right.

Hurl, who resides in Jamaica Plain, is an acoustic/blues-based singer whose style also has a distinct multicultural streak, extending to Caribbean, Latin, African music and beyond. Performing since the mid 80s, the 42-year-old singer is road-tested with past shows in more than 250 venues, radio and TV stations throughout New England and the East Coast. He's also becoming a favorite on the South Shore; this year alone, Hurl has filled opening act spots at area shows by Johnny Rivers and Roger McGuinn and played a mid-summer outdoor show at Pembroke's Town Green.

Ward, 51, is a master of the traditional, time-honored blues-boogie and barrelhouse piano style, which he has played for over three decades. As Jumpin' Juba, Hurl and Ward together are also well-traveled, with more than 200 dates at clubs, coffeehouses, colleges, arts centers and festivals in Massachusetts, new Hampshire and Connecticut since 1999.

"Bruce (Ward) and I find common ground on a wide variety

Boston Blues singer Steve Hurl and blues-boogie pianist Bruce Ward, bring their act Jumpin' Juba to Norwell's Mount Blue Thursday (Nov. 14)

of styles starting from the traditional blues angle," said Hurl, originally from Connecticut. "He's that sort of old-school master of roots and blues piano and along with playing slide and bottleneck blues myself, I'm also a singer and songwriter. So while we start out with that old-time blues base, we're also able to work in the non-traditional elements, like contemporary folk and rock with modern lyrics, chord patterns and melodies."

Even more wide-ranging than their combined playing experience is the duo's musical knowledge, which reaches clear back to roots-music origins in early 20th century juke joints, honky tonks and dancehalls. They are not hesitant to apply that knowl-

'Marty' makes most of Boston premier

Last week's news that the musical version of "Marty," currently breaking box office records in its world premiere at Boston's Huntington Theatre, would indeed wend its way to Broadway came as little surprise. After all, the show is based on Paddy Chafesky's screenplay of the same name.

The 1955 feature film won the Academy Award for Best Picture and earned star Ernest Borgnine the Oscar for Best Actor. The team of Tony Award winners contributing to the musical "Marty" includes book by Rupert Holmes ("The Mystery of Edwin Drood"), music by Charles Strouse ("Annie"), lyrics by Lee Adams ("Bye, Bye Birdie"), and choreography by Rob Ashford ("Thoroughly Modern Millie").

At the helm of the production is Director Mark Brokaw, an Obie Award winner for his work off-Broadway. In the title role of Marty Piletti, a regular guy in search of love who works as a butcher and lives at home with his mother in the Bronx, film actor John C. Reilly ("Boogie Nights," "The Perfect Storm") offers a performance that has the perfect emotional pitch.

Unfortunately, Reilly's voice is another story and he often has trouble with the music. His acting, however, is strong enough to carry the day and Reilly all but carries the show, too, while the music can at times seem unnecessary. With that in mind, it wasn't surprising to learn that there will be some work done on the current version before "Marty" makes the big move to Manhattan. In the meantime, "Marty" remains a work in progress an all too rare opportunity for local audiences to see a musical before it reaches New York.

"Marty" will continue at the Huntington Theatre, 264 Huntington Avenue, Boston, through Nov. 24. For tickets and information, call 617/266-0800 or visit www.huntingtontheatre.org.

Police seek tips on theft

Cohasset police are investigating a theft at the Teen Center sometime Monday night. Det. Garrett Hunt said the thieves stole a video game system valued at about $350. He said they apparently gained entry through an unlocked window. The robbery was discovered by Recreation Director Jack Worley at about 9 a.m. Tuesday.

Hunt asked anyone with information to call the police at 383-1055. The callers can remain anonymous, he said.

Career perks and peaks

Boston gallery showing Sergio Roffo's recent works

Sitting on the edge of a grassy bank at World's End in Hingham or on Minot Beach in Scituate, trying to capture the beauty around him with paint brushes — that's a typical "day at the office" for Scituate artist Sergio Roffo.

Roffo's office stretches along the entire coastline of the South Shore, Cape Cod and Martha's Vineyard.

And his work never stops — during family vacations, while driving his daughters around town or on a simple walk to the mailbox, Roffo said he's always looking for material for his next painting.

"You've got to paint from life," Roffo said. "The best things you see are often those that you don't expect."

Certainly Roffo didn't expect the great success he and his paintings have met since moving to the South Shore in 1991, but he is hoping it will continue.

Roffo is currently exhibiting more than 30 of his most recent coastal works in a solo show at The Guild of Boston Artists on Newbury Street in Boston.

The show which began this week and will run until Nov. 30 is the second gallery showing for him at The Guild and marks the peak of his career thus far.

"Since moving down (to Scituate), my work has taken off," Roffo said. "I always did cityscapes before, and now I concentrate on coastal scenes and can really get to the beauty of nature."

Born in San Donato, Italy, Roffo moved to Brighton, Mass. when he was 7 years old and began to notice the wonderful shapes and light reflections in a city skyline while in high school. It wasn't until he graduated from Vesper George School of Art in Boston that he found out the true meaning of a "starving artist."

"I would sit out on the street corner and have a sign next to me that said 'Painting Boston Harbor', just to get anyone to stop by and take interest," Roffo said. "It was rough, but it's what I had to do."

Today, Roffo sells his paintings for anywhere from $2,500 to $18,000 — what he calls an average price for professional artists. His paintings are displayed in five regional galleries in New York City, Connecticut and Maine and are stocked in many local

Jumpin' Juba rocks Norwell club

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

A combined five decades musical experience hits the stage at Mount Blue this Thursday evening. The Norwell venue will host Jumpin' Juba, the part-time side project of veteran Boston area musicians, blues singer/guitarist Steve Hurl and blues-boogie pianist Bruce Ward. For three years, the two have balanced this unique duo act with full performing schedules as solo players in their own right.

Hurl, who resides in Jamaica Plain, is an acoustic/blues-based singer whose style also has a distinct multicultural streak, extending to Caribbean, Latin, African music and beyond. Performing since the mid 80s, the 42-year-old singer is road-tested with past shows in more than 250 venues, radio and TV stations throughout New England and the East Coast. He's also becoming a favorite on the South Shore; this year alone, Hurl has filled opening act spots at area shows by Johnny Rivers and Roger McGuinn and played a mid-summer outdoor show at Pembroke's Town Green.

Ward, 51, is a master of the traditional, time-honored blues-boogie and barrelhouse piano style, which he has played for over three decades. As Jumpin' Juba, Hurl and Ward together are also well-traveled, with more than 200 dates at clubs, coffeehouses, colleges, arts centers and festivals in Massachusetts, new Hampshire and Connecticut since 1999.

"Bruce (Ward) and I find common ground on a wide variety of styles starting from the traditional blues angle," said Hurl, originally from Connecticut. "He's that sort of old-school master of roots and blues piano and along with playing slide and bottleneck blues myself, I'm also a singer and songwriter. So while we start out with that old-time blues base, we're also able to work in the non-traditional elements, like contemporary folk and rock with modern lyrics, chord patterns and melodies."

Even more wide-ranging than their combined playing experience is the duo's musical knowledge, which reaches clear back to roots-music origins in early 20th century juke joints, honky tonks and dancehalls. They are not hesitant to apply that knowl-

'Marty' makes most of Boston premier

Last week's news that the musical version of "Marty," currently breaking box office records in its world premiere at Boston's Huntington Theatre, would indeed wend its way to Broadway came as little surprise. After all, the show is based on Paddy Chafesky's screenplay of the same name.

The 1955 feature film won the Academy Award for Best Picture and earned star Ernest Borgnine the Oscar for Best Actor. The team of Tony Award winners contributing to the musical "Marty" includes book by Rupert Holmes ("The Mystery of Edwin Drood"), music by Charles Strouse ("Annie"), lyrics by Lee Adams ("Bye, Bye Birdie"), and choreography by Rob Ashford ("Thoroughly Modern Millie").

At the helm of the production is Director Mark Brokaw, an Obie Award winner for his work off-Broadway. In the title role of Marty Piletti, a regular guy in search of love who works as a butcher and lives at home with his mother in the Bronx, film actor John C. Reilly ("Boogie Nights," "The Perfect Storm") offers a performance that has the perfect emotional pitch.

Unfortunately, Reilly's voice is another story and he often has trouble with the music. His acting, however, is strong enough to carry the day and Reilly all but carries the show, too, while the music can at times seem unnecessary. With that in mind, it wasn't surprising to learn that there will be some work done on the current version before "Marty" makes the big move to Manhattan. In the meantime, "Marty" remains a work in progress an all too rare opportunity for local audiences to see a musical before it reaches New York.

"Marty" will continue at the Huntington Theatre, 264 Huntington Avenue, Boston, through Nov. 24. For tickets and information, call 617/266-0800 or visit www.huntingtontheatre.org.

Curtain up on Company Theatre's 2003 season

The award-winning Company Theatre will celebrate its 24th season by not only offering reserved seating for the first time, but also some of the finest theater, music and comedy on the South Shore.

Kicking off the theatrical season is the national tour of the hit comedy, "I Love You, You're Perfect....Now Change" (Feb. 19-23) — the smash show about dating and marriage that played for nine months in Boston, a show that has been dubbed "Seinfeld with Music."

The big spring musical will be "The Rocky Horror Show"(March 14-April 6), the energetic stage version of the cult film that promises to have audiences doing "The Time Warp."

On stage this summer is E. L. Doctorow's "Ragtime" (Aug. 1-24) featuring a brilliant score and stunning sets with this sensational story about three remarkable families searching for the American Dream.

The fall season brings "Last Night of Ballyhoo" (Oct. 10-26) to the stage. The 1997 Tony Award-winner for Best Play chronicles a night of revelation for a Southern family on the eve of WWII.

The 2003 season wraps with the warning "You'll shoot your eye out!" as The Company Theatre presents the stage version of "A Christmas Story" (Nov. 28-Dec. 20), the nostalgic comedy about little Ralphie, whose only wish for Christmas is a Red Ryder BB rifle.

Loretta Laroche, May 8

Kicking off the theatrical season is the national tour of the hit comedy, "I Love You, You're Perfect....Now Change"

The Company Theatre will also a offer a schedule of excellent concerts, offering something for all musical tastes. The concert season kicks off with John Mayall & The Bluesbreakers (Feb. 1), the legendary blues artists who was the mentor for such guitar legends as Eric Clapton. Folk great Melanie (Feb. 8) will make her first appearance at The Company Theatre with a show featuring all her hits, including "Lay Down (Candles in the Rain), " "Look What They've Done To My Song" and "Brand New Key."

She was the reigning teen queen of the 1980s, and now Tiffany (Feb. 15) is back and better than ever with her new band and a show that will feature old favorites ("I Think We're Alone Now") and songs from her critically-acclaimed new CD. PBS comedy star Lorettal Laroche (May 8) the hilarious "Siren of Stress," will be bringing her uproarious observations on life to Norwell for one very funny show that will benefit in part the ACT Scholarship Fund. And a new musical-comedy, "Motherhood: Been There, Done That" (May 10-11), makes its Company Theatre debut.

The growing popularity of bluegrass music takes centerstage at The Company Theatre with an appearance by the award-winning bluegrass band Northern Lights (May 17). Two old favorites return in 2003, following past soldout shows. Four Bitchin' Babes (June 14) bring their music and comedy back for a second time, as does the excellent female Irish band, Cherish the Ladies (Sept. 19). The 2003 concert season wraps with a concert version of the wonderful show Is There Life After High School (Sept. 20 & 21), a musical look at those great high school days.

Tickets for all shows in the 2003 Season go on sale Monday, Nov. 18 at 11 a.m., and all seats are reserved. Tickets are available at The Company Theatre box-office located at 30 Accord Park Drive in Norwell and by calling 781-871-2787. There is also show information at www.companytheatre.com.

galleries in Boston.

Holding up one of the works in the Guild show, Roffo takes a new introspective look. Every painting is a challenge, he says, and brings out another level of his talent.

"That's why I never get sick of it," Roffo said. "When you work on something you love, you do it better. Painting doesn't seem like work — I can never go more than two days without my brushes, it's amazing."

Roffo's work, admittedly influenced by American artists such as Inness and Bierdstadt, will take a new turn next year when he returns home to Italy to prepare for his next exhibition in the Summer of 2004. Roffo said he will spend several months in his hometown next summer attempting to capture the beauty and essence of Italian landscapes, culture and communities.

"It will be an even more difficult battle to try and recreate the beauty I see there because nothing is ever as beautiful as what you see with the naked eye," he said. Roffo describes that struggle as the most frustrating aspect of being an artist. "It is an endless battle, it really is."

Roffo's exhibition at The Guild of Boston Artists will be open to the public Tuesdays through Fridays from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. through Nov. 30. An opening reception for the exhibit will be held Saturday, Nov. 16 from 5 to 7 p.m.

"Sometimes I have to pinch myself and ask if this is all real," Roffo said. "Am I really getting paid for this? It's just been a dream come true."

edge willfully in concert. A typical Jumpin' Juba date covers everything from contemporary blues/R&B and traditional, old-time slide guitar and barrelhouse blues from Chicago, Memphis, New Orleans to ballads and fresh, "rootsy" spins on crowd-pleasing classic rock 'n' roll.

"I met Bruce when I was doing a coffeehouse gig back in '99. Bruce worked at the church where they did the folk coffeehouse shows and I had finished my first set for the evening when one of the other church staffers stepped up to me and asked, 'Do you mind if Bruce plays the piano during intermission?' I said no problem, but I have to admit at the time I was sort of expecting this church parishioner to come out and play holy hymns or something like that.

"While we start out with that old-time blues base, we're also able to work in the non-traditional elements, like contemporary folk and rock with modern lyrics, chord patterns and melodies."

Blues musician Steve Hurl

But then this dude sits down at the piano and starts pumping out these swinging blues chops in the style of old-time masters like Otis Spann, Professor Longhair, Jimmy Yancey. Right there I just tore up my second set list and said to Bruce, 'Let's Jam.'"

Hurl said the musical chemistry between them clicked nearly right away, and what's made the duo act work so well since. Hurl himself sports a husky burr of a voice that has been well-received on three previous independent solo CDs, most recently 1999's A Few Simple Words.

Jumpin' Juba has also been busy in area recording studios recently, cutting and mixing tracks for the duo's forthcoming debut CD, planned for release next spring.

Jumpin Juba will play at Mount Blue in Norwell, Thursday, Nov. 14. For information on the show call (781) 659-0050.

Prepare your landscape for winter weather

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

The warm balmy breezes of Indian summer have temporarily rekindled the gardening spirit for many South Shore dirt diggers as colorful leaves float to the earth and drift across our landscapes in amber-tinted waves. As quickly as we rake, shred and compost the crisp leaf litter, swirling gusts deliver another wave to carpet our lawns and gardens creating a churning sea of dying embers. For some gardeners, falling leaves are a welcome indication that it is nearly time to put away our shovels, clippers and hoses and enjoy a well-deserved rest from weeding, watering and deadheading. To others, raking mountains of debris brings disappointment, for it signals the advent of shorter days without the beauty and fragrance of garden flowers, greenery and warmth or the therapy, exercise and welcome escape our gardening activities provide. By mid-November, most passionate gardeners finally develop a sense of urgency as our innate desire to hibernate compels us to accept that the growing season has finally come to an end. The time has come to put the gardens to bed and begin our preparations for the holiday season.

Trimming back the dead foliage in my perennial borders is a high priority as there is considerable evidence of critter infiltration this season. This process also simplifies fall planting, mulching and spring clean up. The waning leaves of hosta and Siberian iris are first to be clipped, as these are favorite winter destination for destructive rodents. If time permits, all clippings will be chopped with a hedge shears and leaves shredded with a leaf eating device or lawn mower to promote quicker decomposition in the compost pile.

The temporary respite from cold weather has provided an ideal opportunity to perform many last-minute planting projects. Although the ground is not likely to be frozen for several weeks, frosty nights often create a solid crust on the soil that deepens as temperatures continue to drop and pose a serious challenge to planting bulbs, perennials or woody plants. My "driveway collection" of potted plants remains fairly extensive at this writing, necessitating quick action to ensure their survival for the months to come. I wander from garden to garden, planting bulbs and squeezing trees, shrubs and perennials into tight spaces unfit for them to prosper realizing that many of these late additions will have to be moved again early next spring. Each planting hole is amended with a mixture of compost, peat moss and well-decomposed manure. Although all my borders were thoroughly prepared with copious quantities of organic material, as the years pass, this rich humus continues to decompose and requires replenishment every few years.

November is an ideal time of year to apply a layer of organic matter to new gardens and established perennial borders.

Should cold temperatures return in next week or two, many of my unplanted treasures will have to be heeled in, container and all, or stored in my unheated garage and sunroom when time and space run out. Potted plants left unprotected above ground often succumb during the winter months due to alternate freeze-thaw cycles or severe cold, both of which are minimized when containers are surrounded by soil in the ground. Although there may be a number of casualties, prior attempts to gather these pots together above ground and cover with a layer of mulch has proven disastrous. Collections of potted hostas have been especially hard hit as critters have taken up residence in the cozy covering and devoured the plants during the winter months. The obvious solution would be to only purchase plants for which a space was already available, but that is an unrealistic proposition for the compulsive collector.

November is an ideal time of year to apply a layer of organic matter to new gardens and established perennial borders. If time permits, I will rake and shred my leaves and mix them in a wheelbarrow with compost, peat moss, manure, lime and superphosphate or an organic fertilizer such as MNLA Plant-O-Ganic 8-8-8. New beds or the vegetable garden will profit from the addition of several inches of this mixture, which can be turned in to improve drainage, moisture and nutrient retention, worm populations, and an overall enhancement of the soil. The presence of lime will help to offset the acidity organic matter produces and when spring arrives, soils will be ready for early planting. An inch or two of this mixture can also be spread around the bases of established perennials and shrubs, taking care not to bury the crowns of these plants and keeping the mixture away from the woody stems of trees and shrubs. Even plants that appear dormant continue to absorb water and nutrients until the ground freezes solid and this supplemental food provides perennials, trees and shrubs with a great boost when spring weather arrives.

Take advantage of this brief stretch of warmer weather to do as much weeding, soil preparation, planting and cleanup as possible. Although some of these activities can be performed later in the season, the holidays leave little spare time for yard work and any chores that can be accomplished at this time of year offer more time when spring arrives to collect new treasures.

Baked goat cheese salad

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Virtually everyone who has been to a "fancy" restaurant sometime in the last 10 years has experienced baked goat cheese. It is breaded, baked, and then usually served over a bed of greens. It's simple enough in concept although showy in presentation, and I wondered if this ubiquitous recipe would yield its secrets to a home cook.

My first stop was to investigate the coating. Dried breadcrumbs, even when flavored with fresh herbs, tasted stale and uninspired. I then tried toasting my own breadcrumbs in a skillet with butter and the results were substantially better. (This takes just a few minutes.) I then wondered if toasted nuts would make a better coating. On their own they were overpowering, but combined with the homemade breadcrumbs, the taste and texture were perfect. I finally settled on 1-part nuts to 2 parts breadcrumbs. Two teaspoons fresh thyme and just a dash of salt added to the mixture worked well with the flavor of the goat cheese. To make the breadcrumb mixture adhere to the cheese, I dipped each slice (1/2-inch slices were best) into extra-virgin olive oil before coating. (A five-ounce log will give you about eight slices—enough to accommodate four salads.) I tried warming the cheese in temperatures from 300 to 400 degrees. At 350 degrees, the cheese warmed through in 4 minutes, but at higher temperatures the cheese is apt to become too soft in a matter of seconds. At lower temperatures, the cheese took longer with no apparent benefit.

As for the salad, I found that I preferred greens with lots of flavor such as arugula, watercress, endive, and radicchio. Most markets sell mesclun and other mixes of baby greens that also worked well in this dish. Lettuces such as bib and romaine can be used as part of a mix but do not have enough flavor on their own. For four people you need about 10 cups of greens. I used a traditional vinaigrette based on 1 part vinegar to 4 parts oil along with a bit of mustard to create both flavor and a superior emulsion. I am partial to white balsamic vinegar, but either type is fine given the strong flavor of the greens. (Balsamic vinegar is forbidden with tender greens!)

BAKED GOAT CHEESE SALAD

Make sure that you purchase fresh, soft goat cheese, not aged goat cheese, which is much stronger in flavor and drier in texture.

For the goat cheese:
1/3 cup pecan halves
2 teaspoons unsalted butter
2/3 cup fresh bread crumbs from 1 to 2 slices bakery-style white bread finely chopped in a food processor
1/8 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons chopped fresh thyme
Freshly ground black pepper
2 tablespoons best quality olive oil
1 five-ounce log goat cheese

To finish the salad
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon balsamic vinegar, white preferred
4 tablespoons best quality olive oil
1/4 teaspoon Dijon mustard
1 teaspoons finely chopped shallot
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
9 to 10 cups mixed greens such as arugula, watercress, radicchio, endive, and/or mesclun mix washed, dried, and torn into bite-sized pieces

1.Heat the oven to 350 degrees and adjust a rack to the center position. Place the nuts on a baking sheet and bake for 5 minutes or until fragrant. Cool, and then chop either by hand or in a food processor. Set aside.

2. Meanwhile, place the butter in a medium-sized skillet over medium heat. When the butter has stopped foaming, add the breadcrumbs and cook, stirring often until golden brown. Cool. Combine the chopped nuts, toasted breadcrumbs, salt, thyme and a couple grinds of black pepper in a small bowl. Place the olive oil in a small plate. Cut the goat cheese into eight 1/2 inch slices. Dip slices into the olive oil to coat on all sides and then coat with the crumb mixture, turning to thickly coat all sides. Place on now-cool baking sheet. (The cheese may be prepared up to this point several hours ahead of time.) Bake for about 4 minutes or until the cheese is warmed through and feels soft to the touch but not melted.

3. In a small bowl combine the salt and vinegar and stir for about 10 seconds to dissolve the salt. Add the remaining ingredients and whisk for about 15 seconds or until the mixture is smooth, thickened and evenly colored. Taste for seasoning adding additional salt and pepper if necessary. Place the greens in a large bowl, drizzle vinaigrette over greens and toss to evenly coat. Evenly distribute the greens onto four plates. Using a spatula, carefully transfer two rounds of warm cheese over mound of greens. Serve immediately.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 13

A Pisces moon continues to set a laidback pace. You can make gains developing projects that require your imagination and creativity. An alignment of the sun and Mercury promotes communications; write letters, send e-mails or faxes, make phone calls. On the other hand, there is one rough spot in effect between 7:25-10:25 p.m., when the moon interacts with Pluto. Take time out for yourself. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 14

An easygoing Pisces moon remains in effect today. Art, music, photography, dance projects continue to get the green light. Follow your intuition; your instincts are on target. The moon aligns with Saturn at 8:38 p.m. and becomes inactive. Get extra rest tonight. Pay attention to your dreams.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 15

The next few days will be action-packed. A full moon is building up and will culminate next Tuesday, November 19. Take it slow and easy. Don't take risks or act on impulse. Today the moon enters fiery Aries at 12:38 a.m. An applying alignment of Mercury-Uranus places all important signings or decisions off limits. It may be difficult to focus on projects that require mental concentration and attention to detail. Instead, tackle jobs that need physical labor and exertion.

SATURDAY, NOV. .16

Mercury forms a 90-degree alignment to Uranus this morning and the sun aligns with Uranus tomorrow morning. Expect the unexpected. Others may be irritable, changeable, argumentative. Stop, look and listen. Don't rock the boat. The best way to channel today's influences is to stay busy with work projects. Slow down between 4:24-7:24 p.m., when the Aries moon opposes its planetary ruler, Mars. Use extra caution when driving or operating machinery.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 17

The combination of an Aries moon and sun-Uranus alignment can make for a hectic morning. Be more spontaneous and adventurous. At 9:06 a.m. the moon interacts with Saturn and becomes inactive. The final windup to this month's full moon begins at 1:23 p.m., when the moon enters Taurus. Treat yourself and make this evening special. Whether it's dinner at your favorite restaurant or a night out on the town or curling up with a good book, kick back and enjoy life.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 18

Gear up for a hectic two-day period. A full moon is building up, generating high energy. Stress management is important. Take on a full work agenda. You can be most productive. Postpone initiating major enterprises until Friday, when favorable influences occur. Instead, tackle projects you have been putting off and get them out of the way; clean and reorganize. Spend time alone this evening; look within for answers.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 19

Read yesterday's advice. The planet Mercury enters Sagittarius at 6:30 a.m., remaining there until December 8. This month's full moon is accompanied by a lunar eclipse, intensifying its influence. It culminates at 8:34 p.m., 27 1/2-degrees Taurus-Scorpio. Remain calm no matter what is happening around you. Keep your nose to the grindstone. Hard work will pay off.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 20

At 1:25 a.m. the moon enters Gemini, setting a quick pace today and tomorrow. It is better to handle a variety of jobs, rather than one that demands mental focus and attention to detail. People will be talkative and easily distracted. On the other hand, communications and people-oriented activities get the green light. Promote new ideas; launch a sales campaign. Let fun and games top your agenda this evening.

THURSDAY, NOV. 21

The planet Venus has been traveling in retrograde motion since October 10 in the sign Scorpio. Today at 2:12 a.m. Venus turns direct. However, a lunar opposition to Pluto may spark emotional fireworks this morning. Keep it light. Don't rock the boat. The good news is that a harmonious alignment of the Gemini moon and Jupiter generates a lighter, brighter mood this afternoon. Yesterday's advice applies to today as well.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 22

The sun enters Sagittarius at 6:54 a.m., remaining there until December 21. However, the Gemini moon aligns with Saturn at 7:06 a.m., making for a rough start to this day. There may be unexpected delays or setbacks. Keep a cool head. Influences turn around completely at 11:48 a.m., when the moon enters Cancer. The green light for new starts goes on. Enjoy a special dinner this evening with friends and family.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

NOTE TO BABY BOOMERS

Thanks to the passage of time and cumulative impact of youthful rock concerts, baby boomers are increasingly finding themselves in need of hearing instruments. Many resist, however, fearing that the devices will make them appear old. They need not worry, however, since significant improvements in hearing instrument technology have led to the creation of instruments that fit completely, and inconspicuously, into the ear canal. These so-called "completely-in-the-canal" (CIC) instruments work well for less severe hearing loss. Another major development is the design of digitally programmable hearing instruments, which divide sounds into several different channels and allow the hearing instrument to be fine-tuned to the wearer's specific hearing loss. They are also designed to [illegible] adjust in the back.

There is a variety of options available today to help hearing impaired individuals of all ages to live happier, more fulfilled lives. If you'd like to find out more, contact FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER at 781-878-9723. If you have a hearing instrument that you are not happy with, bring it to us all we'll be happy to check it out and discuss other hearing instrument options with you. Your complete satisfaction is our goal here at 80 North Avenue, Rte. 139, North Medical Building, Abington, so all hearing instruments come with 30-day trial period.

P.S. Digital hearing instruments can also include directional microphones, which amplify sounds in front and reduce [illegible]

89-year-old twins swim and pump iron

By Cathy Conley
CCONLEY@CNC.COM

Marjorie swims. Her twin sister Margaret pumps iron.

They will be 90 next month.

They are familiar figures silhouetted against dawn's early light walking into the Quincy YMCA every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 5:30 a.m.

They walk together to the registration desk and then go their separate ways: Marjorie to the pool for 45 minutes of laps and Margaret to the Nautilus for 45 minutes of pressing steel.

They meet after their workout, rest for a bit on the bench beside the registration desk, and then walk together out into the morning light to begin another busy day filled with long walks, luncheons with friends, and visits with children and grandchildren.

What do they attribute their longevity to?

"First you pick good parents with good genes, then the rest is easy," Marjorie said.

Life began for Marjorie Ionta and Margaret (Ionta) Cochrane in December, 1912 in Mexico, Maine. There were four children in the Ionta family: the twins, an older sister, and a younger brother.

Dad worked in a paper mill. Mother was a housewife.

Their youth was spent in the outdoors skiing, hiking, swimming, and playing in the deep woods of rural Maine.

They were mirror images of each other, and their mother always dressed them the same way.

"We didn't rebel and start wearing different clothes until we got out of high school," Margaret said.

They thought the same, they looked the same, they acted the same. They liked the same subjects and chose the same sports.

"First you pick good parents with good genes, then the rest is easy."

Marjorie Cochrane

They both loved Latin and hated geometry.

Though only 5'1", they both played basketball.

"There were no tall girls at that time," Marjorie said.

They both also played field hockey.

After graduation, the two young women set out to seek their fortune. They left the wilds of Mexico, Maine and came to Boston, moving in with a relative to attend Boston University's Sargent College.

Here they both studied physical education, intending to become teachers.

They helped pay their tuition by counseling at day camps and waitressing in upscale restaurants.

When they graduated from Sargent, the heavy cloud of the Great Depression darkened the job market.

For two years, they substituted, filling in with waitressing and camp counseling to pay the bills.

World War II burst upon America on that day of infamy, Dec. 7, 1941, and changed every citizen's life, including Marjorie's and Margaret's.

They embarked on separate paths.

Marjorie got a teaching job: first in Arlington, and then in Wellesley.

Margaret answered the dire need for physical therapists for wounded veterans returning from the war. She went back to school, earned a certificate in the field, and became a civilian therapist working for the Air Force.

Shortly after the war ended, Margaret married and had two sons. After they were grown, she became a special needs tutor for the Hingham school system. She now has five grandchildren.

Marjorie never married.

After several years of teaching physical education, she followed in her sister's footsteps.

In the early '50s, a great polio epidemic was paralyzing the nation, and physical therapists were desperately needed.

Marjorie earned the first National Foundation Scholarship to study physical therapy at Harvard University. After earning her certificate, she began her work at Massachusetts General Hospital, moved to George Washington Hospital in Washington D. C., and then later returned to Mass General.

"I liked teaching very much, but I liked physical therapy better because of the one-on-one relationship," Marjorie said.

Marjorie retired in 1981 after 25 years at Mass General.

The hospital created the Ionta Fund in honor of her extraordinary work as a therapist. The fund raises money for scholarships for students going into the health care field. This year, Margaret and Marjorie attended a party marking the 20th anniversary of its founding.

Margaret's husband of 40 years died in 1990.

Just as they had started out together for the first two decades of their lives, Margaret and Marjorie decided to spend their golden years together.

Marjorie moved into Margaret's family home in Hingham 12 years ago.

"We get along very well," Margaret said.

"I do the cooking and Marjorie does the cleanup. I also do the driving. She gets a cook and a chauffeur at the same time," Margaret said.

Driving includes several three hour trips a year to Maine to visit their sister.

"Longevity is certainly in the genes in the women of the family. My mother lived to be 96, and my sister is 94," Marjorie said.

Their father and brother both died in their 50s.

"We've always been very active and athletic. We have been swimming all our lives. We played tennis and skied. We don't actually hike any more, but we walk all over Hingham, and it's hilly," Marjorie said.

What advice would these amazing women give to young people?

"Moderation is the essence of sane living. If you could only get that message across to young people.

"Stay active. Keep busy. Be ready for the next thing. Humor helps a lot.

"We are so lucky to be twins and have each other. You always have someone to talk to, and we laugh at

Most mature drivers can safely stay on the road

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Although older citizens have more experience than their younger counterparts behind the wheel of a car — they may no longer have the eyesight, reflexes or nerves to handle tough driving situations.

But the good news is that increasing age doesn't necessarily mean giving up the freedom that goes along with having a driver's license.

In Massachusetts there are no mandatory tests that older drivers must take, and there is no maximum age to hold a driver's license.

In fact, 65 people between the ages of 100-103 currently hold active Massachusetts driver's licenses, according to the Massachusetts Department of Motor Vehicles, and that number grows to nearly 8,000 for those nonagenarians from 92-99 years of age. More than 620,000 Massachusetts residents between the ages of 65 and 84 are driving. To put the numbers in perspective, there are a total of 4,632,461 people with active driver's licenses in the state.

There is help for senior citizens who want to continue driving but may no longer feel comfortable in all driving situations.

AARP (American Association of Retired Persons) has developed a driver education program, the 55 ALIVE/Driver Safety Program that is completed by about 640,000 older drivers nationwide annually, according to AARP. The course is offered locally at many Senior Centers through a community's Council on Elder Affairs.

The eight-hour course, which costs $10, is taught in two, four-hour sessions by AARP volunteers over two days and goes over the following topics: vision and hearing changes; effects of medication; reaction time changes; left turns and right-of-way situations; new laws; and hazardous driving situations.

One doesn't have to be a member of AARP to take the course. There are no tests, but the course helps older drivers develop safe, defensive driving techniques, according the AARP.

"People live longer and healthier lives and we want them to stay driving longer and safer," says Deborah Banda, state director of AARP. "Driving is the way many (older persons) stay active and connected."

She points out as with other things in life, it's important to stop, reassess and take a refresher course.

Banda says going through the course

Lifelong love of learning

Seniors find their place on campuses

By Maureen Walsh
CORRESPONDENT

They "drop in" for a lecture or workshop or "stop in" for a semester course. They're keeping up with new technology or slowing down to enjoy things they never had time for before. They're going back to complete a degree or looking forward to a change in careers.

They're the "college seniors," thousands of older adults turning or returning to area colleges to pursue their personal educational goals.

"Our seniors have a real love of learning," says Kathleen Reid, coordinator of the Senior Center program at Massasoit Community College. "They like being around the college atmosphere. They come in and want to be involved."

Massasoit waives tuition for adults age 60 and over who want to audit courses on a seats-available basis. For $5 per semester, seniors can also take special free and low-cost courses through the Senior Center at the Brockton campus. That's also the site of the SeniorNet Learning Center (see related article), where seniors can learn computer skills at their own pace.

"It keeps me young," says George Morrissey, age 70, who took a course in algebra five years ago and has audited an average of two college classes a semester since. A retired social worker from Brockton, Morrissey says he picks courses that appeal to his curiosity.

"I like the sciences. They're hard," he says. "I've taken astronomy, oceanography, meteorology. I like travel and history courses."

Morrissey is currently enrolled in a Western Civilizations course, and has his eye on future courses in Massachusetts history and U.S. government.

"I like being with the young kids. They're very polite, very respectful," he says. "I also swim in the pool. I lift weights. I take advantage of the freebies."

When Irene Scott's husband wanted to go back to school, they both signed up for Massasoit's Senior Summer Institute, a one-week session of classes in a variety of subjects taught largely by volunteer professors from the college.

"I was fascinated. I signed up for a class," says Scott, age 82, of Sharon. "I don't take them for credit, just things I enjoy. No math."

"I tend to be quiet and let the kids talk in class. Then after I'll give my opinion," she says. "We're different age groups looking at the same question. It gives young people a chance to see how an elderly person views the issue."

Scott is also the hostess for the Senior Center's Humanities Group, which meets every Thursday, from 1 to 3 p.m., with speakers and discussions on a broad range of topics. She keeps members informed of coming topics, introduces speakers and facilitates the group discussions.

The schedule of speakers for the Humanities Group is arranged by Nancy Donlan, age 64, of West Bridgewater. Topics for this 15-week semester include "A Newspaper Man's Story," "How We Choose to be Happy," "Critical Thinking and Ethics," "Sierra Leone," and "Mary Baker Eddy, An Unconventional Woman."

"It's always interesting," says Donlan. "Some topics that may seem not as enticing often turn out to be the most enjoyable."

Most speakers are from the Massasoit faculty with the occasional outside guest, she says. "The favorites are always well-anticipated. They don't run out of topics. They have such vibrant personalities. That enthusiasm comes across."

One out-growth of the Humanities series is a new History Reading Group that meets the first Wednesday of the month from noon to 1 p.m. For its first meeting, the Group, which is not limited to seniors, is discussing "John Adams" by David McCullough.

Other Senior Center programs include the Senior Orchestra and Senior Chorus, which perform at private and community events, including an annual free Holiday Concert, scheduled this year for Dec. 10 at 12:30 p.m. in the performing arts center on the Brockton campus.

"This is one of the best-kept secrets," says Mo Goldmeer, age 75, of Brockton. "People from all over Plymouth County come here. So many would benefit if they only knew about it."

For more information on Massasoit's senior programs, call 508-588-9100 Ext. 1695.

"Think again" is the slogan for Quincy College, which invites seniors to consider taking college classes for personal enrichment or as part of a career plan (see related article on Nancy MacDonald).

"In addition to promoting our degree and certificate programs, Quincy College has always been committed to providing lifelong learning for students of all ages, whether it be stopping in for a fine arts course or taking a new computer class," says college president Sean L. Barry. "We believe lifelong learning should not stop once someone turns a certain age."

In fact, because Quincy College was chartered under the G.I. Bill, the two-year public college has a tradition of educating older adults. Flexible course and semester schedules make it easier for adult students to combine school with work and other commitments.

Seniors age 60 and over pay a discounted tuition of $90 per credit hour, excluding computer science and technology courses, for college courses in 30 associate degree programs and 12 certificate programs. Non-credit Community Development courses are offered at low cost in a variety of computer, business and liberal arts subjects.

Although it is a public college, Quincy College is chartered by the city and is not part of the state college system. It is 100 percent tuition supported. For more information, call 617-984-1650.

Want to talk to the Senior Citizens at Curry College about nursing home insurance or discuss that new bestseller? Sorry, not interested.

"This group is very interested in politics," says Roberta Leary, senior liaison and event coordinator for the college. "They read the newspapers, they are very intelligent, and they ask wonderful questions."

Guests of the group have included former governor Michael Dukakis, TV newscaster Scott Wahle, and radio host Howie Carr.

The seniors group, which has been meeting monthly at Curry College for 18 years, is not an official program of the college and handles its own membership and program. There is a $10 annual fee and a waiting list to join the 100-member group, which meets the third Tuesday of every month at 9:30 a.m.

Seniors age 60 and older can audit most courses at Curry College at no charge.

"The Italian film course, the English courses, are very popular," says Leary. "A lot of seniors wanted a computer course, so we have a sign-up in the media center for a very basic course geared to anybody."

Many seniors make a point of having lunch in the student cafeteria after their course or meeting and at other times, too, Leary says. "It's good for the students to see the elderly population. They're really great with them, and the seniors love seeing the young people."

Senior pursues legal studies to help disabled

By Maureen Walsh
CORRESPONDENT

While most "college seniors" look to expand their knowledge in many different areas, Nancy MacDonald, age 76, is focused on earning her paralegal certificate through the Legal Studies program at Quincy College. She hopes to complete the 30-credit-hour program in June, and is considering options for continuing her study of law.

"I am very much involved with the disabled, and I realize that MCAD (Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination) and other agencies are overwhelmed with cases," says MacDonald, who uses a wheelchair as the result of injuries received in an auto accident 30 years ago. "I am constantly asked questions by disabled people: How could the ADA help with SDI? Why didn't I get a worker's comp review? These are all answers I'd like to know."

MacDonald has a degree in clinical psychology from Simmons College and a teaching certificate from Bridgewater State. She taught elementary school until her injury, then worked as personnel manager for a Quincy firm and later as a reservationist for The Ride. She now works evenings at the Braintree Cinema.

MacDonald took her first Quincy College class eight years ago with her husband, who was already seriously ill. They completed one course in Shakespeare, then Basil died while they were studying U.S. History.

"That's when I decided to go in this direction," MacDonald says. "It's important, imperative for me to finish my paralegal course and to go further with it. Too many rules are broken because people don't know how to address the problem or reverse it."

MacDonald recommends college programs as an answer to the "restlessness" of seniors who may have taken advantage of early retirement incentives or been forced out of work by the economy.

Seniors set pace in computer classes

By Maureen Walsh
CORRESPONDENT

Aline Clish, 79, from East Bridgewater teaches the same computer course in which she learned her own skills only four years ago. She is an instructor and chair of the volunteer board of directors of the SeniorNet Learning Center at Massasoit Community College.

"This is a great program," says Clish, a registered nurse with no previous computer experience. "You understand what they're teaching before they move on. There are coaches to help students catch up."

"SeniorNet classes are taught for and by seniors," says Kathleen Reid, coordinator of senior programs for Massasoit. "Most stay involved quite a while and continue to learn."

The Massasoit learning center is one of 135 SeniorNet sites nationwide that provide older adults with education for and access to computers and the Internet. Adults age 50 and older can join SeniorNet for $40 per year, plus the cost of individual courses. Tuition is $5 for the fundamental course and typically $20-$30 for more advanced courses, all books and materials included.

The curriculum for each course is developed by SeniorNet, an international non-profit organization, specifically for older students. Members also receive a quarterly newsletter, discounts on computer products and services, and access to online discussions.

"The SeniorNet chat room is monitored and safe," says Clish. "I know people who don't sleep well at night, who like to chat then."

Once a month, the Massasoit Learning Center offers a concentrated On-Line course for three hours a day for three days, she says. Other courses cover the Windows operating system and popular applications for word processing, spreadsheets, genealogy and graphics.

"We hope to start some mini-courses soon on digital cameras and scanners, whatever has an impact next," says Clish.

"All the children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren know computers. You can feel left out. This is a great way to get involved and see how much you can do," she says.

The Learning Center has eleven IBM computers and current software strictly for SeniorNet use, says Reid. The center is not a Massasoit program, but is operated by the college in partnership with Verizon, IBM, Generations Online and Microsoft.

Seniors wield political clout

By Robert Aicardi
BAICARDI@CNC.COM

Statistics show that senior citizens have clout at the ballot box, which is undoubtedly why politicians regard them as such a crucial constituency.

Nationwide in 1998, for instance, nearly 80 percent of registered voters aged 65 and over went to the polls, double the rate of those between the ages of 18 and 24.

Anthony Mollica, 82, of Braintree is an example of a senior citizen who is proud to proclaim that he never misses an election.

"It was (former state Rep.) Don Laing who told me, 'If you don't vote, you have no right to complain,' and he was so right," said Mollica, who served on the Braintree Board of Selectmen for 12 years, three of them as its chairman.

Many younger voters say that it doesn't matter to them who gets elected, but Mollica couldn't disagree more.

"I'm always interested in who's running and what they stand for," he said. "I would like my champion to win, and quite often, he does."

Although he is a registered Democrat, Mollica is the kind of voter who can't be conveniently categorized.

STAFF PHOTOS/TOM GORMAN

A group of seniors cast their ballots and flex their political clout at Tuesday's election.

"I voted for FDR all four times, but I don't believe that I've ever voted a straight Democratic ticket," he said.

Indeed, Mollica voted for Dwight Eisenhower twice, Richard Nixon twice, and Ronald Reagan twice. In other presidential election years, he backed the Democratic candidate, including Al Gore two years ago.

"I think that voting is one of the most important benefits we have as citizens of this country," Mollica said. 'It's a benefit that allows you to participate in your form of government and how it runs. If you don't like it, you have a chance to make a change. Don't ever think that your vote doesn't make a difference."

Mollica has theories about why senior citizens can be counted upon to vote.

"For one thing, they have a lot more time to think about the issues because most of them aren't working," he said. "For another thing, they have fixed habits that now come to bear. I just can't imagine myself or others like me not voting. I don't understand apathy. I don't understand how people can't be interested in the way things around them are run."

According to Mollica, another reason why senior citizens vote is because a good number of issues concern them, including the cost of medication, Social Security, and veterans' benefits.

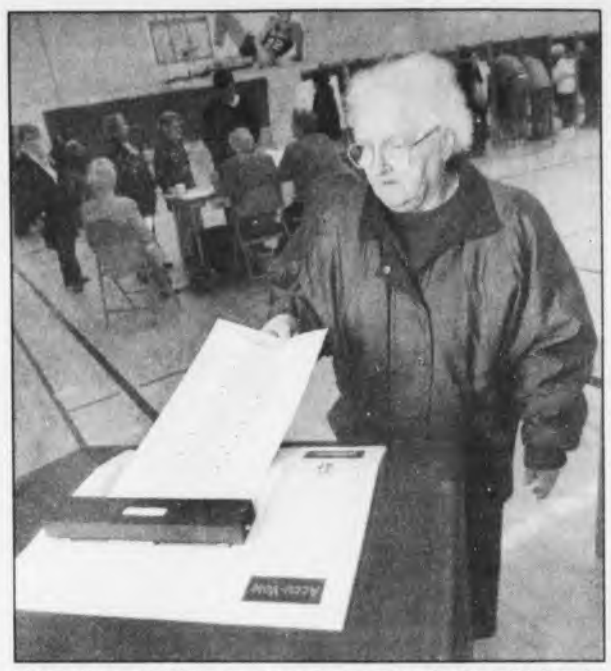
Holbrook Town Clerk Shirley Austin has her own idea about why senior citizens tend to be so passionate about voting.

"I don't know what's going on in high schools today, but when I was in high school, the importance of registering to vote was drilled into us," she said. "Maybe because we had to wait until we were 21 to vote, it was more important to us. Today, I think that kids, as a whole, are not quite ready to get involved in the political process at the age of 18. I think it's wonderful to give young people the right to vote at 18, but a lot of them aren't ready yet. So many of them are wrapped up in their own lives. On the other hand, seniors have been voting for years, and they know how important it is and what a difference it can make."

Austin mentioned another key factor in the extent of turnout among senior citizens: the questions that appear on the ballot.

"If a question affects their pocketbooks, they're definitely there," she said. "They come out in droves."

Braintree Town Clerk Joseph Powers has a philosophical perspective about senior citizens and how they vote.



Voters like senior Mary Brown are often sought-after by politicians for votes.

"Seniors should have political clout because they tend to follow the issues more and participate in discussions," he said. "Based on both of these, they then tend to act by voting. They have clout because they have earned clout. They earned it by being active in public discourse."

Powers pointed out that those who aren't senior citizens could have clout, too, due to their sheer numbers.

"The only thing they lack, however, is the most important thing: the urge to act," he said. "I don't think that younger people should criticize or blame seniors for being active at the polls. They find a reason to be motivated, and then they act on this rationale. They certainly put it to use. The reality is that younger people, if they were able to motivate themselves and act on their convictions, would have the same influence and control that seniors have. If younger groups had the same energy and the same desire, the dominant group would not be the seniors."

Work keeps them cooking

'Retirees' stay active at jobs, volunteering

By Patrick J. Cronin
PCRONIN@CNC.COM

Claire Parker has been working for more than 60 years and plans to continue working as long as she is able to.

Parker, who just celebrated her 80th birthday and sixth-year anniversary at Burger King in Rockland, said she's still faster than most of the other workers.

"We're just good workers," said Parker. "We just go out and do it for the joy of working and being involved."

Parker is one representative of the growing senior population who retire but continue to stay active by working or volunteering in their communities. According to the recent census, there are more than 16 million Americans over 55 who are either working or volunteering. Older workers are getting new jobs at an annual rate of 4.1 percent which is more than half the 8 percent rate in the general population.

So why are so many seniors choosing to spend their golden years on the job instead of relaxing?

According to the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP), the main reason is because there is a huge demand for retired seniors to work. Employees 50 years old or older are also recognized for having a good work ethic and for bringing experience, knowledge and stability into the workplace, according to an AARP survey. There is also a trend of hiring seniors in service industries for positions in customer service, telemarketing, security and travel departments.

Many seniors work or volunteer because there isn't much else to do and it makes them feel younger than what they are.

"Too often, people who retire sit down and don't get up," said Parker. "Working helps me stay active, keep my body healthy and my mind alert."

Abington resident Dan Brundage, who has been retired for the last four years, keeps busy by volunteering and staying involved in town politics. Brundage, who also recently turned 80, said just because your older it doesn't mean you're dead yet.

Studies show that seniors who work or volunteer are more likely to live longer than those who don't.

Researchers at the University of Michigan discovered a remarkable link between work and volunteering with longevity by surveying 1,211 adults over 65 (mostly retirees) in 1986 and checking up on them eight years later. The subjects who volunteered or worked at least 40 hours each year to a single cause or job were 40 percent more likely than non-volunteers or workers to be alive at the end of study.

For many seniors, volunteering is something they can hardly imagine themselves not doing. Among them is Bedford Weaton, who volunteers by doing taxes for other seniors in Abington and Rockland. The 73-year-old Brockton resident said, "sometimes when I go on vacation, I feel guilty and start having withdrawal pains."

Many seniors work not for pleasure and fulfillment but out of necessity. They remain on the job to supplement their pensions. Sometimes, older people may not have planned ahead well enough and they may not have saved enough money to retire comfortably.

"If I wanted to I could quit," said 63 year-old Kathy Chiason, of Weymouth. "But, working a couple hours a week gives me some spending money. I have a bad bingo habit. The rest of the money I get, goes to paying the bills."

As more and more people reach the retirement age, the number of working seniors is expected to grow even larger. A poll conducted for the AARP found that 87 percent of who will be retiring this year expect to work at least part-time during retirement.

A prescription for drug safety

COAs push for medication management plan for elderly

By Amy Lambiaso
ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

A special weekly calendar box sits on Constance Merritt's nightstand, each individual box filled with her daily dosage of the five prescriptions she currently takes. Merritt is fortunate — she has a system for taking multiple medications.

At 80, Merritt still has the focus and self-discipline to take her prescriptions as directed by her doctor, leaving a proper amount of time between doses and understanding any possible side effects.

But unfortunately Merritt does not represent the majority of senior citizens.

"This has become a definite concern everywhere," said Scituate Council on Aging Director Joan Wright. "It is fairly common for senior citizens to have to make decisions about what drugs to take and what food they eat because they can't afford it all."

And this localized concern is part of a larger state and national initiative to increase awareness about the dangerous interactions for some medications and the problems with prescription management for senior citizens. Wright and Norwell Council on Aging Director Rosemary O'Connor put together a medication management plan to institute such programs within senior centers across the state, but the plan hit the same budget roadblock so many programs have faced during the past year.

"Funding is an issue and it's going to continue to be an issue," O'Connor said. "But this problem is not going away."

A recent brochure titled Healthy Aging, developed by the Massachusetts Health Promotion Clearinghouse alerts seniors to the dangers of mixing prescription and non-prescription medications together, or with alcohol. It recommends using a "prescription chart" much like what Merritt uses to organize her medications and provides tips on how to best avoid future problems.

But knowing what to do is just the first step, health officials say— the problem extends far beyond. Instituting a plan and being able to afford the medications is the bigger problem, Wright said.

"Nine out of 10 seniors will tell you that the cost of the medications is the biggest problem," O'Connor said, noting that certain HMO's have caps on prescription costs and may not supplement the cost of prescriptions at all. "Prices in general have gone up and are going to keep going up — this is just the tip of the iceberg."

With so many medications to take, seniors are often at a loss as to how to manage their doses.

Medicare was established 35 years ago to provide health care for the nation's elderly. In the 1960s relatively few drugs could do much to manage diseases of the elderly such as high blood pressure, arthritis and high cholesterol, but now drugs are at the forefront of treatment, according to a study by the Center for the Advancement of Health.

Most younger Americans with health insurance have prescription coverage included, but more than one-third of senior citizens pay for prescriptions almost entirely out of their own pockets, the study said. And this is where the problem lies directly, and where a management plan could come in.

"I know of a woman who was paying more than $300 each month for her prescriptions," O'Connor said. "Some people just can't afford them so how do they decide what to take and what to skip?"

The prescription management plan initiated by Wright and O'Connor, in conjunction with the Norwell Visiting Nurses Association would involve a visiting nurse to help set-up a "pill pack" and possibly even have a home health aide to supervise the senior when taking the medications.

"There's always people that will fall through the gaps," Wright said. "And this is such a serious and dangerous issue that we really need to be concerned about."

Recent legislative efforts have not received the financial backing necessary at the state level, Wright said. She said state Sen. Michael Morrissey, D-Quincy, and state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, have been active in pushing for state funding for a management program. Both attended an informal breakfast two weeks ago to discuss the next step.

But Wright said without the proper resources and staff to institute a real program, the best she and other councils on aging can do is distribute information and continue to pitch the plan to the state.

"We need to put programs into place that deal with this issue to prevent tragedies from happening," Wright said. "All of us live in this hustle and bustle of a world — it's hard enough to remember the 8,000 other things we have going on much less what prescriptions we already took today."

Adults over 60, their families, friends and caregivers can request a copy of the Healthy Aging brochure by calling the clearinghouse toll-free at 1-800-952-6637 or by visiting the Clearinghouse online at www.maclearinghouse.com.

Fit and fun after 50

Today's seniors more active than ever before

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Many senior citizens are living longer and healthier lives these days.

In fact, many look upon retirement as a new opportunity to expand their interests and take part in activities they didn't have time to participate in when they were working or attending to home responsibilities.

Sandra Kent, director of the Hingham Department of Elder Services, has some ideas as to what's behind increased longevity among today's senior citizens.

"There's a focus on health prevention," she said. "A lot of people have given up smoking and are working to lower their cholesterol levels. They're also pursuing enjoyment, which means less stress in their lives."

Joan Wright, director of the Scituate Council on Aging, points to medical advancements and a heightened awareness of the importance of good nutrition as other reasons why seniors are in better shape these days.

"There are also more opportunities for senior folks to stay physically fit and intellectually involved," she said.

For example, the Scituate Senior Center offers two arthritis exercise programs every week.

"These kinds of activities improve people's quality of life," said Wright. "When seniors exercise, they feel good, and that kind of spins off into wanting to eat better because they're feeling better. They then want to do more and get out more. I think one things leads to another."

The Hingham Senior Center, located at town hall, is attempting to project what Kent calls the "correct image" for the word "senior."

"It's almost inappropriate when there's a 40-year span of life in that category, from age 60 to 100," she said. "We're trying to promote the idea that you can't put a senior in a box any more than you can generalize that all teenagers are the same. A 13-year-old is different from an 18-year-old."

Kent further noted, "You can meet a 68-year-old without enthusiasm and an 85-year-old who's interesting and wants to know what's happening in the world. We have to be careful about stereotyping. I predict there'll be a different terminology in the future."

Needs vary greatly among seniors with regard to what interests they want to pursue and what their physical abilities are, although for the most part, seniors tend to be more physically fit these days.

Fitness programs offered at various senior centers include aerobics, yoga, strength training, and a walking group.

The Cohasset Department of Elder Affairs runs well-attended exercise groups and regularly runs articles in its newsletter about the latest news in the medical field about how to keep elders healthy in their later years.

"We also run educational programs about health insurance, the need for exercise, and healthy eating," said Outreach Coordinator Carol Barrett, who is also a registered nurse.

A number of local centers also offer blood pressure and other health checks as well as transportation to medical appointments.

Because interests and abilities vary, South Shore senior centers try to offer a number of activities to meet the needs of a variety of people.

Some who frequent these centers enjoy trips or playing whist while others prefer to attend a symphony rehearsal or be part of an opera group.

"It's also important to keep seniors' minds active, because that usually results in a better memory," Kent notes.

Accordingly, more adult education programs are being offered at some local senior centers.

In Hingham, Kent is working with the town's Continuing Education Program to offer some late-afternoon classes for seniors who prefer not to drive at night.

"Adult education has become very enticing for retirees," she said.

The Scituate Senior Center is exploring the possibility of offering an astronomy class and music appreciation program.

"Folks who attend our archery program also want to take part in some intellectually stimulating programs," Wright said.

Already offered are a chess club and a "Gourmet Thoughts" group, formed by seniors who wanted to combine their love of both cooking and reading. The group meets once a month, cooking a meal they plan themselves and then discussing books they've been reading.

"When seniors have a good idea, they're often very willing to take the ball and run with it," Wright said.

The Scituate Senior Center tries to customize its programs to meet the needs of a diverse group.

For the most active seniors, there's a softball league which plays other regional senior teams from mid-April until the snow flies. The more than 100 players come from not only Scituate but also Marshfield, Cohasset, Hingham, and Norwell.

Now that colder weather is approaching, an indoor softball league has been started, which will play on an indoor field in Bridgewater.

Senior centers are becoming increasingly popular among the older set.

"We're pleased that people look forward to coming to our center," Kent said. "People come to enjoy themselves in our bright, clean building. The atmosphere makes them smile."

The ultimate compliment is when a younger adult visits the senior center and is impressed enough to ask, "How old do you have to be to come here?"

STAFF PHOTOS/CHRIS BERNSTEIN

Kay Boyle of Hanover is all smiles as she gets her hair done at the school's salon.

While local senior centers are working hard to meet the needs of seniors who are more active than ever before, the Hingham Senior Center also feels a responsibility to help meet the needs of a broad spectrum of seniors.

That's why a wide range of transportation alternatives are available, including rides to medical appointments and grocery stores.

"Providing transportation helps people remain in their homes when they've given up their driver's license," Kent said. "While not every senior utilizes our services, at least they know we're here."

Outreach Coordinator Karen Sadlon also helps meets the needs of Hingham's senior community.

"We steer people in the right direction, whether that involves senior housing, legal matters, assisted living options, or temporary care arrangements," Kent said.

A number of community organizations and churches – along with the police and fire departments — also lend a helping hand, including the Girl Scouts, who rake leaves for seniors.

There's also a small repair program to help seniors who are still living in their homes.

"We're fortunate to have people willing to give of their time and energy to help us," Kent said.

According to the state Executive Office of Elder Affairs (EOEA) the average individual lives almost 18 years after he or she retires.

"That's the length of your childhood, so retirees need to decide what they are going to do once they stop working," said Emmett Schmarsow, program manager for Councils on Aging in Massachusetts under the EOEA.

Planning ahead is the key to a successful retirement.

"Self-image is often tied into people's work, and those thinking about retiring need to be sure their transition into retirement is appropriate," said Schmarsow.

For some, that means continuing to work part-time, while for others, exploring new possibilities beforehand helps ensure the retirement years are productive and satisfying.

"Stopping work in and of itself is not a plan," Schmarsow said.

That's why senior centers often become community centers, due to the wide variety of activities and information offered there.

Schmarsow also notes that many communities aren't anticipating the huge surge in elders that will begin occurring in 2006 when the first baby boomers start coming of age.

"They are coming and will be a more diverse, well-off, and healthier group," he said. "I think senior centers will play an every greater role in the community, including offering education programs and other types of support. These centers often become a home away from home."

Once individuals retire, Schmarsow says, they need to get out of the house.

"That's why planning ahead for retirement is important," he said.

Groups offer travel opportunities for older citizens

By Lisa M. Cataldo
CORRESPONDENT

Whether it's a day trip to the Berkshires or a week in Montreal, groups of senior citizens are packing their bags, looking for new adventures.

Eileen MacDonald has planned a number of trips for the 60+ Club, a social club comprised of 350 seniors from across the South Shore. The group meets once a month at St. Ann's Church in Marshfield.

"These trips are a lot of fun," said MacDonald, 80, of Marshfield. "We do a lot of day trips and luncheons to Boston, weekend excursions to Maine, and we have gone on trips to Panama, Italy — even some cruises. Right now we have a trip to Hawaii planned for March."

"Everyone has a wonderful time on these trips," said Irene Walter, President of the 60+ Club. "We do take trips to Foxwoods and Mohegan Sun every other month, but we do a lot of sightseeing trips, as well."

A group from the club traveled to Ogunquit, Maine over the summer and ventured out on a lobster boat for the afternoon. Another group recently spent five days at a Dude Ranch in the Adirondacks.

"Some of the group went horseback riding at the ranch," Walter said. "They also had other activities for us like hiking, golf, mini-golf, tennis and arts and crafts. I'm glad I got to go. This was one trip I didn't want to miss."

Bill and Shirley Goodwin have been planning trips for seniors through the Friends of the Weymouth Council on Aging (COA) for the past five years. Their group travels on a full size tour bus. The Goodwins plan two or three bus trips a month. Their trips include a variety of locations such as a visit to the Beacon Resort in Lincoln, New Hampshire to a tour of Pennsylvania Dutch Country. A three-day trip to Lake George, Lake Placid, Saratoga with a stop at West Point is in the works for next fall.

"We try to give the seniors a very good variety to choose from," said Bill Goodwin. "We make no profit on any of these trips. Any money left over goes to the Friends of Weymouth COA to purchase equipment or items they might need. You don't even have to be a resident of Weymouth to go on these trips. The only thing we ask is that you have fun."

Asked if he has one favorite trip that stands out in his mind, Goodwin replied, "No. I like to make each one better than the one before."

"Out of all the trips I've been on, I would have to say my favorite was a trip to Quebec," MacDonald said. "What a magnificent place. Every lawn was cut, not a piece of paper on the streets. It was a wonderful place."

According to Walter, the 60+ Club holds a regular business meeting when they meet once a month and they typically provide a guest speaker and/or entertainment for members.

"It's nothing political, or anything like that," MacDonald said. "Just a place to meet and talk — mostly about our trips."

"You have to be 60 to be a member, but any of our members can feel free to bring along a grandchild on any of the trips, provided we have room," Walter explained. "Except, of course, to Foxwoods or Mohegan Sun."

Traveling with grandchildren is a concept that many seniors are taking advantage of, today. Because they couldn't afford to do it when they were raising their own families, grandparents are starting to embrace the idea of connecting with their grandchildren by taking them along on vacations.

"Our trips are fabulous," said Helena Koenig, President and founder of GrandTravel, a unique travel company offering trips for grandparents and their grandchildren, located in Chevy Chase, Maryland.

"We have 16 destinations and multiple departures including tours of Kenya, London, and Paris. Our trips to the Western Parks, and Alaska in the United States are popular, too."

Koenig, an experienced travel agent for many years, founded the company in 1987 when her first grandchild was born. Trips offered through GrandTravel are scheduled for the months of June, July, and August when children are typically on summer break from school. All trips include an experienced tour guide, and a certified teacher escort who is responsible for the academic component of the tour. Escorts also assist 'Grandtravelers' with miscellaneous situations that may arise such as filling a prescription, locating a dentist for a grandchild's loose orthodontic wire, or changing money. Most of the tours include three meals a day (excluding some of the European trips) along with arts and theatre tickets. GrandTravel trips are geared for grandparents and their grandchildren ages 7 - 17.

"Grandparents have experienced life and this is a way to share that cultural enrichment with their grandchildren," Koenig said. "Being able to share a special experience in their grandchildren's lives makes these trips very meaningful."

Getting a handle on senior gambling

By Dan Gravel
DGRAVEL@CNC.COM

Nat McCready walked out of a Holbrook convenience store recently with $20 worth of scratch tickets. It's something the 73-year-old retired plumber has been doing about once a month for the past several years.

He stood next to his car and began scratching the card. But despite his prediction that "this is the day I win my first million," he ended up slightly short of that, winning only $4 on one ticket.

"Last week I won $50," he said, seeming to try to make himself feel better. "The most I ever won was $400. I guess I'm not that lucky."

Unlike many senior citizens McCready may in fact be lucky. He buys only a set amount of tickets every month and he always spends within his means. But an increasing number of senior citizens are unable to show that same kind of restraint when it comes to playing the lottery.

No reliable data is available to illustrate the extent of the elderly gambling problem in Massachusetts or across the nation because the field of study is in its infancy, according to Marlene Warner, program director at the Massachusetts Council on Compulsive Gambling. However, it is widely assumed that gambling is more of a problem among seniors than the general population.

"A lot of gambling is targeted to seniors," such as bingo and trips to Foxwoods, Warner said. "It's used as an activity or entertainment to fill time, of which seniors have a lot."

Compounding the problem is that the majority of senior do not seek help for gambling addiction. "They tend to come from a generation where they think you don't get help for your problems, you deal with them on your own."

Marshfield COA Director Carol Connolly said like other addictions denial is a big part of senior gambling.

"It's a problem that's hard to fix. Just like with alcoholics or anyone else they deny there's a problem," she said. Connolly has heard from friends and family members of seniors telling her that certain seniors may have a gambling addiction, but never once has anyone with a problem personally asked her for help.

According to the Massachusetts Council on Compulsive Gambling symptoms of gambling problems include continually thinking about gambling, planning your day around it, repeatedly spending more time or money gambling than can be reasonably afforded, and having troubling paying bills as a result of excessive gambling.

Connolly said she once got a call from concerned family members of a senior who they suspected had a gambling problem. The senior would routinely go to a local variety store and spend all her money, neglecting her bills. When she couldn't make it to the store the clerk would deliver scratch tickets to her.

Another South Shore senior Connolly knew could not afford food, gas, or rent because those necessities took a back seat to his gambling habits.

"[Gambling] is everywhere. You sit down to eat and there's a Keno game there. They make it so easy to get involved," said Mary Kelley, a Marshfield council on aging outreach assistant.

Patrick Hamilton said for many people with a low income, whether elderly or not, playing the lottery gives them the hope of hitting it big. Hamilton, who works at the Old Colony Planning Council in Brockton, said he has seen many lives negatively impacted by gambling.

"People are not really educated about the probability of them benefiting," he said. "For somebody living on a fixed income like social security, certainly if they're going out and spending 10 bucks on scratch tickets they could be using that 10 bucks to eat. It's sad. It's an unfortunate situation."

Experts say lottery tickets only scratch the surface when it comes to the potential for gambling among the older generation.

Officials suggest those with gambling problems speak with outreach workers at local councils on aging. They can also call the Massachusetts Council on Compulsive Gambling helpline at 1-800-426-1234. The council has 16 treatment sites in the state, including one in Plymouth.

But what can be done to help seniors? Are there any programs in place to educate seniors about the risks of gambling away the money they need to survive when the probability of striking it rich is slim?

each other's jokes," Margaret said.

Even though they have some of the same clothes, they've made it a rule not to dress alike, with one exception: if the matching clothes are gifts.

can help older drivers decide if it's time to "self restrict" their driving, by choosing to drive only during the day and only in familiar territory, for example.

The Massachusetts Registry of Motor Vehicles offers a free one-hour course available through local Councils on Elder Affairs, according to community outreach coordinator Michele Ellicks at the Registry.

In addition to driving tips, the course also provides information about the Registry and how to obtain a disabled placard, for example. The course also explains if an older person wishes to voluntarily give up his or her license, the Registry will provide a free Massachusetts ID card in its place that is accepted at banks, airports and the like.

"Some older folks are holding onto their driver's licenses only for the ID," Ellicks explains. She says the Registry highly recommends the AARP course, which is more involved.

"Ours is a nice complement to the AARP course either before or six months after as a refresher," she says.

Ellicks says the most difficult aspect of driving for older persons is left-hand turns because of changes in depth perception. Changes in vision are a natural part of aging, she says, so an older driver may have difficulty judging whether she or she has enough time to make the turn. The course, as well as the AARP and AAA courses, recommends avoiding left-hand turns whenever possible, by making a series of right-hand turns.

AAA (American Automobile Association) also offers a safe driving course, the AAA Driver Improvement Program that is not geared specifically to seniors but can be adapted to a specific audience. AAA also provides a series of pamphlets, dubbed "Straight Talk for Mature Drivers," which are available to members and cover everything from buying a vehicle and vehicle maintenance to driving tips and drugs that can affect driving.. AAA also offers a self-assessment for drivers and a guide for family members of an older driver.

"Sometimes it's as simple as taking a few counter measures," explains AAA Director of Public Affairs Dave Raposa, about older drivers. Those measures could include giving up night driving, using larger mirrors, and staying within a certain radius of home.

"Our goal is to help drivers stay on the road longer and safer," says Raposa, who points out club membership, which is $59 for the first year and $45 for renewal, can make a great gift for anyone.

Although it can represent a huge change in lifestyle, many older persons voluntarily give up driving. Most Councils on Elder Affairs have vans available to take seniors to doctors appointments, the hairdresser, shopping and other trips.

"I have found many times wise seniors give some thought to giving up their driver's license," says Hingham's Council on Elder Affairs Director Sandra Kent. "Some have had some small scare, or with their eyesight and reflexes have realized it's time.

"However, that doesn't necessarily make it easy. Losing the freedom to drive is a big loss," she says. But Kent points out the senior van service can help fill the gap. Hingham, which has four vans, offers mini van trips to a range of events and places, such as the Providence Place Mall and Arnold Arboretum, for a suggested donation of $2-$4. That's in addition to regular weekly service and medical rides.

Banda of the AARP notes age does not equate with unsafe driving.

"There can be unsafe drivers at any age," she says. But Banda points out our society needs to better facilitate the needs of older people through a range of means such as better signage on the roads; more sidewalks; and making public transportation available in off-peak times when retired people are more likely to use it.

"Saying people should give up their driver's licenses at a certain age is not right," she says. "The question should be based on ability and capability and not just age."

Solitary seniors

Programs offer solutions to loneliness and boredom

By Paula Woodhull
PWOODHULL@CNC.COM

Along with the shorter daylight hours of fall and winter can come increasing loneliness and isolation for all too many seniors.

Sadness and more serious feelings of depression are often ongoing issues for older people — no matter what the season — according to those who run some of the more innovative senior outreach and volunteer programs on the South Shore.

Cathy Nickerson, volunteer coordinator for the Marshfield Council on Aging, says seniors are especially at risk during the winter.

"Seniors suffer the most," she said. "In many cases, they're not just homebound" but are completely isolated.

In November and December, the seasonal rhythms of life change. For seniors living in bustling seaside communities like Marshfield, the awareness of the desolation can be especially acute. The holidays are looming.

"The summer people have gone," said Nickerson, and there is less activity all around. The Green Harbor area of Marshfield has a large population of seniors and the homebound. Brant Rock and Fieldston "are of the beaten track in the winter," Nickerson notes. "Some seniors living alone have little contact with the outside world."

Being homebound in the winter has such an effect on older people, according to Nickerson, that it is literally true that COA volunteers who take part in outreach programs "brighten the days" of countless seniors.

For some, all that's needed to take the edge off the loneliness is someone with whom to play an occasional game of cards, or a game of Scrabble.

In response to this growing need, the Marshfield Council on Aging has increased its number of volunteers from about 75 only three years ago, to about 250 today.

"There's been a lot of effort put in here to growing our programs," she said. "For a lot of seniors, their children are busy working and don't have the time. And here on the South Shore we don't have the transportation."

About three years ago the Marshfield COA developed the Friendly Visitor Program which is coordinated by Shirley Jacobs. The idea was to match volunteers up with individual seniors who are lonely and need a companion, have difficulty getting out and need help with errands, or who need transportation to medical and other appointments.

"We assign each person to a senior," Nickerson explained. "They'll visit, help with shopping, or just call to make sure they're OK. They'll get a book or video from the library. The volunteers build a wonderful rapport with the seniors."

Marshfield COA volunteer coordinator Cathy Nickerson works with a number of people who try to make life easier for area seniors.

Jacobs works to place a senior with a volunteer who shares similar interests. "Shirley's really good at matching someone she feels would be well suited to a particular senior," Nickerson said.

Volunteers with the Friendly Visiting Program are a mix of people — from young mothers who have a few hours a week to spare, college students with big hearts, to other seniors who are still in good health and have the desire to help out.

"There are nurses who work at night and have some free time during the day," said Nickerson. "Some of our volunteers don't do anything else besides pick up prescriptions" for seniors.

Other volunteers in the Friendly Visitor Program have signed up for the specific task of driving seniors to and from medical appointments in Boston. "Some of our volunteers have no problem going into Boston and waiting."

A simple thing like doing the weekly grocery shopping becomes a challenge for seniors who don't drive or who are reluctant to drive.

Anxiety about venturing out in the car is a very real fear now that local, smaller markets such as Star's in Marshfield Center are being squeezed out and replaced by supermarkets located in busy, high traffic commercial areas.

"This is a huge problem for seniors," said Nickerson.

The Friendly Visitor Program has its rewards not just for seniors, but for volunteers, too, according to Nickerson. "Our volunteers get a feeling of complete joy. For me, if I can have one smile from a senior, it makes my whole day."

In Pembroke, an innovative COA program is being offered once a month throughout the year that is geared to the emotional needs of older men who suddenly find themselves alone during their senior years.

The discussion group known as the Dull Men's Group is a much needed outlet for senior men who are not accustomed to talking about their feelings, according to Joe Collins, a co-leader of the group.

Collins, whose wife passed away several years ago, said the whole idea behind the Dull Men's Group is to get men out of the house and socialize. He leads the group with fellow COA member Connie Church, also a widower for several years.

A discussion group that meets regularly helps alleviate stress and loneliness in older men, Collins is convinced.

"If a participant is experiencing a problem, many times the simple act of talking about it will act as a pressure relief."

The Pembroke Dull Men's Group last month received word it had won the prestigious ROSE (Resources Organized to Serve Elders) award from the state's Executive Office of Elder Affairs.

The award is given to a senior center that shows innovation in reaching out to seniors to serve their needs.

The Dull Men's Group meets the third Wednesday of the month at 10 a.m. at the Pembroke senior center and has developed a loyal following.

In the group discussions, the men are encouraged to talk about their feelings. Senior men are often dealing with the loss of a spouse or other loved one as well as other major life issues. Many complain of loneliness and a lack of purpose.

"I've found over the years that getting people to talk acts as a safety valve," Collins said.

Co-leader Connie Church agrees. "Women talk to one another. Men don't talk to each other so easily. Men have a tendency to say everything is OK, when it isn't."

Church says that men who are living alone are more apt to fall victim to depression. For these men it is important to open up lines of communication with other men who are experiencing the same feelings.

"They're surviving, but in reality they can do better," by connecting with their peers, Collins said.

The Dull Men's Group doesn't take life too, seriously, though. Collins says humor is one of the keys to aging well.

Collins says older men are not necessarily dull by nature, but in some cases are responding to the boredom that has taken over their lives, something that can happen upon retirement and the loss of loved ones.

The topics chosen for discussion at the Dull Men's Group are intended to lighten things up. Members of the group like to poke fun at themselves and their solitary stage of life.

For example, this month the group will be discussing "Newton's First Law, Concerning Inertia," something older men tend to know a lot about, Collins jokes.

Assisted living

Programs helping seniors age with dignity, independence

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

It's natural that senior citizens want to maintain their independence for as long as they can and luckily, there are plenty of programs within the region which can help them do just that.

One of the big programs that helps seniors on the South Shore is called Visiting Angels, an organization based in Marshfield. Visiting Angels sends out highly skilled caregivers to the homes of senior citizens in order to help them maintain their sense of independence.

"It's a service that provides assisted living services in the homes of seniors," said Nate Murray, president and director of Visiting Angels. "It allows them to stay in their homes as long as they can with safety and dignity."

Murray said some of the services Visiting Angels offers includes companionship, housekeeping, medication reminders, escorts to appointments, shopping, among other services.

"Through the process of aging, senior citizens will lose certain abilities that allow them to remain independent, such as the ability to drive a car or the ability to take medication on a consistent basis," Murray said. "However, many of these elders are fully capable mentally and there's no reason they should have to be put into a residential institution."

Murray said he believes seniors are finding the Visiting Angels organization is helping them maintain their independence and he bases his beliefs on a survey he handed out in September. He gave the survey to families of elders who were participating in the Visiting Angels program.

"One-hundred percent of the families who participated in the survey agreed that Visiting Angels has allowed their loved ones to live independently," Murray said. "It's also a very cost-effective alternative." He added the rates for Visiting Angels are much cheaper than those one would have to pay to place a loved one in a nursing home.

Murray said it's important for Massachusetts to have programs such as Visiting Angels because "according to the Massachusetts Executive Office of Elder Affairs, the proportion of elderly people age 65 and over is larger than the country as a whole. In other words, Massachusetts has a higher elder population than the national average."

"Say someone told you that you had to leave your home. You wouldn't want to do it. What if you had to give up your license? I know I would go absolutely bonkers. Senior citizens feel the same way. Sometimes we lose sight of that. Just because a person is 80 years old, that doesn't mean that they're gone."

Rosemary O'Connor, Norwell Council on Aging

Councils on Aging on the South Shore and around the state are good sources for programs that help seniors keep their independence.

"That's the biggest focus that we have," said Norwell Council on Aging Director Rosemary O'Connor. "That's one of the mission statements of any council on aging. Helping seniors remain independent in their homes is what we do."

O'Connor said services councils on aging often provide include transportation, outreach and delivered meals. She added Norwell provides all those services and more.

O'Connor said no senior citizen wants to give up his or her independence and noted they definitely do not want to have to leave their homes just because they can't accomplish certain tasks.

"Say someone told you that you had to leave your home," O'Connor said. "You wouldn't want to do it. What if you had to

Store closing hits seniors

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

My grandfather has a problem.

For as long as he can remember, Tuesdays have been Ames days — but, no longer.

"On Tuesdays, I may go into a severe depression," he said, pain arching in his voice as he remembers the loss of Ames' Senior Discount days. "I'm in limbo. I'm hurting real bad."

Now that Ames has gone the way of Caldor, Bradlees, and Zayers before it, senior citizens are faced with an increasing lack of discount opportunities at department stores. Some would argue that stores such as Wal-Mart and Target (whose competition helped drive the aforementioned stores out of business) actually offer better deals despite not having senior-specific discounts, but it would seem that Ames' Senior Tuesdays filled a larger need.

"It really became an event," said Grant Sanborn, the executive vice-president of Ames, which closed its doors on Oct. 19. "We provided refreshments and we reached out to a lot of people. Anybody who wanted to reach the senior citizen population by using our facilities, such as the Red Cross, was welcome."

Ames became a virtual retail senior center replete with health screenings, contests, and of course discounts.

"You would walk into any of the stores on a Tuesday and see the way people really took to the event," said Sanborn. "You would see the way that people had used the store as a gathering place."

There were three Ames locations on the South Shore (Abington, Hanover, and Weymouth) and according to those involved in senior services in the area, the effect is already being felt.

"We provide a lot of the socialization and entertainment here. It is still extremely expensive for seniors to go to the movies, even with the discount."
Jane Hanley of the Braintree COA

"There has been a large impact on seniors in Abington," said Linda Elliot, director of the Abington Council on Aging. "One of our senior housing facilities was within walking distance and a lot people would take themselves there, but now they are depending on our van."

But the impact extends beyond just proximity. The van now travels to Wal-Mart on the other side of town, but seniors in town do miss the special deals on Tuesday, according to Elliot.

In Braintree, a town with a surplus of retail stores thanks to the South Shore Plaza and several other malls, the closing of Ames was just the latest development in a long line of disappointments.

Ames Store closing has hit the senior population particularly hard, many in the area say.

"Ames really wasn't one of the major retailers for us with the plaza here," said Jane Hanley, services coordinator for the Braintree COA. "However, when Caldor and Bradlees went bankrupt, people did start shopping at Ames."

The senior center in Braintree had just begun regularly scheduled trips to the Weymouth Ames when the company announced it was closing.

"It really added insult to injury," said Hanley. "It was one of the only places left to go for our seniors. Now, they can go to Wal-Mart for all-purpose supplies or they can pay the price at the plaza."

In some ways, the trend is very circular. In the 1950's and early 60's, the department stores such as Ames began squishing out the local businesses. Now, large national conglomerates such as Wal-Mart and Target (which were founded around the same time) are using their buying clout and standardization to push out the smaller chains.

Despite its lack of specific discounts for seniors, Wal-Mart feels that it does as good a job – if not better – of catering to the fixed incomes of seniors.

"When people hear "everyday low prices" they say, 'Uh huh, sure, right," said Tom Williams, spokesman for Wal-Mart. "The trouble is we really mean it. Our discount, for seniors and others, is our everyday low price, Whenever you go into a Wal-Mart story you are getting the lowest price possible."

Williams said that Wal-Mart also caters to the senior population, occasionally offering in-store events, and that that specific demographic "shops us heavily."

While the department store issue may be unresolved, the larger outlook of senior discounts seems to be positive. For every loss, there has been significant gain, at least according to Joan Rattner Heilman.

And Rattner Heilman should know, since she literally wrote the book on the subject. The American Association of Retired People (who referred the Mariner to her) called her "an expert" on senior discounts.

The book is entitled: "Unbelievably Good Deals and Great Adventures That You Absolutely Can't Get Unless You are Over 50," and it has just been revised for its 15th edition, which is due out soon.

"People have asked me that a lot," said Rattner Heilman as to the perceived decrease in senior discounts, "Especially since the airlines cut out their senior discounts and coupon books. But I think they are just becoming more prevalent elsewhere."

The author points out that the senior discounts on the major airlines have been replaced with "senior fares." Hotels, drug store chains and state-run organizations (which often are free for seniors) all tend to offer senior discounts, as do most restaurants and movie theaters.

But even with the discounts, some seniors still can't afford the amenities of life. The Braintree COA has a license from the Motion Picture Association that allows them to rent movies and show them for seniors who otherwise couldn't afford to go.

"We provide a lot of the socialization and entertainment here," said Hanley of the Braintree COA. "It is still extremely expensive for seniors to go to the movies, even with the discount."

It is still too early to tell what impact the closing will have, but it certainly ends another chapter of retail history.

But for my grandfather (whom some would politely term as "stubborn,") the damage is done.

"Everything I own is from Ames," said Chuck (whose full name will be withheld to protect his relatives). "Now that they have closed I'll never buy anything new again."

Now those, for sure, are discouraging words.

give up your license? I know I would go absolutely bonkers. Senior citizens feel the same way. Sometimes we lose sight of that. Just because a person is 80 years old, that doesn't mean that they're gone."

There are agencies like councils on aging and Visiting Angels, but there are also those like South Shore Elder Services in Braintree, which is monitored by the Massachusetts Executive Office of Elder Affairs. The services it offers are comparable to other groups around the region. Some of those include food shopping, transportation, home care, meal preparation and personal care. The agency also added a new program to its repertoire one year ago called the Caregiver Initiative.

South Shore Elder Services family caregiver specialist Amy Carlson said the new program is designed to help caregivers of loved ones offset the stress of taking care of those people. She said caregivers who have are more positive and manage the stress well take better care of their respective loved ones and in turn, that means happier, more independent senior citizens.

"It provides information, resources and support to caregivers," Carlson said. "By continually offering elders resources, we are helping them maintain their independence."

There are other programs at the state level which help seniors as well. The Executive Office of Elder Affairs offers programs which helps seniors with nutrition, home care and assisted living. The state also offers the SHINE (Serving the Health Information Needs of Elders) program which "provides free and unbiased health insurance information and counseling to Medicare beneficiaries."

Executive Office of Elder Affairs Secretary Lillian Glickman said one of the state's biggest programs for seniors is called Prescription Advantage.

"It covers prescription drugs for any elder regardless of income," Glickman said. "It's a very comprehensive health care program and we're a national model." She added the program allows seniors to fill an unlimited amount of prescriptions, no matter what the drug in question may be or how much it costs. Currently, 83,000 seniors are enrolled in the program.

Murray said one of the biggest factors in seniors maintaining their independence is companionship and many agencies around the state consider that a priority.

"Companionship is not just having a buddy," Murray said. "It has very significant positive cognitive and social outcomes. It's critically important…It has been extremely rewarding being able to do good with elders on the South Shore in a way that helps them maintain their independence as long as possible."

103-unit 40B project is proposed for Beach Street

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Until AvalonBay came to town, it had been upwards of a decade since the town faced the specter of high-density 40B projects – but proposals for the controversial housing developments could be coming more frequently.

Case in point is a letter the selectmen's office has received this week from a law firm stating its client, Great Neck LLC, intends to file for a comprehensive permit to construct 103 condominiums in three buildings on nine acres off Beach Street behind Cohasset Town Hall.

According to Ellen Morrissey of 488 Jerusalem Road, who is one of the partners in the project, the housing being proposed would be deed restricted for people 55-and-older and the 26 affordable units would be so in perpetuity.

"This is what all the boards have been asking for."
— Ellen Morrissey, Great Neck LLC

The proposal is bound to be as controversial as the 200-unit AvalonBay which is currently before the Zoning Board of Appeals.

Morrissey has tried for years to build three luxury homes on the two lots she owns off Beach Street But getting approval for access from Beach Street, which is known for it spectacular ledge outcroppings, has been a problem. Lot #3, which is also owned by Great Neck LLC, is not part of this proposal.

At last year's special Town Meeting, a group made up largely of Beach Street neighbors, who oppose any development of area known as Great Neck, offered a bylaw that would require a variance before ledge eight-feet in height or higher could be altered in any way. But the Planning Board, saying it was flawed, opposed the bylaw the way it was drafted. A redrafted version then went before the annual Town Meeting where it failed to win the necessary two-thirds majority.

The Beach Street neighbors said they had no time to waste because land off their street was being eyed for development, which could include blasting ledge to construct driveway access to the property. To that end they also formed the Great Neck Preservation Group to purchase 13 acres off Beach Street

Train costs soar

Will Romney rein in the train?

By Mary Ford and Amy Lambiaso
MFORD@CNC.COM, ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

State Sen. Robert Hedlund doesn't like saying "I told you so." But when it comes to the train, the Weymouth Republican and Greenbush critic says no one needed a crystal ball to see the project costs would soar.

"I said a year ago Greenbush would cost $1/2 billion," Hedlund said, adding he thinks the MBTA "low balled" the project all along.

In fact, Hedlund cites an unnamed source close to the project as predicting the Hingham tunnel will end up costing double the $39 million estimate.

The MBTA reported this week that it is adding up to $52 million on to the projected cost of the 17.7-mile train rail spur,

Voters OK $800K to put village wires underground

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

There were many factors riding against the passage of an additional $800,000 for the Village Revitalization Project to put the utility wires underground.

Number one on that list was the current fiscal state of Massachusetts. When you added in the fact that the town is still completing a series of two multi-million dollar school projects, it would appear the article was doomed to failure.

But Monday's Special Town Meeting — by a two vote margin — gave the two-thirds majority necessary to move on with the project. The 162-78 vote sets the stage for a special election sometime after Jan. 1, 2003 for a debt exclusion to Proposition 2-1/2 in order to pay for the project.

"This is a great vote of confidence."
— Craig Miller, President of the Waterfield Group

"This is a great vote of confidence," said Craig Miller, President of the Waterfield Group, which is designing the downtown project for the town. "It will make a world of a difference for the improvements that are scheduled."

Despite the somewhat cosmetic nature of the project, it appeared that the once-in-a-lifetime nature of the article moved residents to vote in favor of the project.

"Michael Sullivan did a great job of communicating that this is a unique moment in time," said Miller. "It will cost the town more to do this at a later date."

The rest of the project is already funded by a variety of sources. The town received a $1.5 million state Public Works Economic Development grant for the for the streetscape revitalization, $1 million for the James Brook culvert as part of the MBTA mitigation package, a $169,000 Transportation Enhancement grant for the St. Stephen's sidewalk, while the installation of a new water main, at a cost of $38,000 will be paid for by the Water Department. (The MBTA is going pick up the tab, estimated at $500,000, to fix up the town parking lot, which was also part of the Greenbush Mitigation agreement).

"Besides being more costly (to

The Mariner incorrectly identified Debra Krupczak as a clerk in the assessor's office in last week's Mariner. Krupczak's title is Assistant Assessor.

In last week's article about the health program being saved, the Mariner should have said elementary school health teacher Jane Gregory had just completed her second year of teaching, not her first. The Mariner regrets the errors.

Hubbard saves man from drowning

By Mary Ford and Brian J. Scully
MFORD@CNC.COM

At 72, June Hubbard of 144 Beach St. is fitter than most half her age.

And that was good news for a 57-year-old North Easton man who nearly drowned yesterday morning.

Hubbard arrived home around 10:30 a.m. from a Friends of the Paul Pratt Library meeting, when she noticed a red kayak floating in the waters of Little Harbor behind her home.

"I thought, 'I have red kayaks,' so I went down to the water to pull it in," she recalled.

Then she heard calls of "help, help" from the Little Harbor side of Cunningham Bridge. Hubbard called 9-1-1. But she didn't stop there. She ran to a little row boat that a friend had left at her home and rowed out to the victim, Stephen Benson, of Elderberry Drive in North Easton.

Hubbard explained Benson held onto the boat while she rowed to over to the Williams' property on the other side of Little Harbor.

While Hubbard was busy rowing against the current, she gave Benson, who was wearing a life vest, a safety lesson.

"I gave him a lecture about how he shouldn't be kayaking on his own," Hubbard said.

"I was just in the right place at the right time."
— June Hubbard

Benson was treated at the scene for mild hypothermia and was transported to South Shore Hospital where he was treated and released.

Fire Capt. Mark Trask said Benson had been in the water about 30 minutes and was showing signs of hypothermia, such as slurred speech.

"She's a hero and was able to take decisive action that may have saved this gentleman's life," Trask said.

Hubbard said she did what anyone would have done.

"I'm not a hero," she said. "I was just in the right place at the right time."

Which way does surface water go?

Dispute over watershed line

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"We're stunned by the description that a large portion of the watershed goes to the Weir River."
— John K. McNabb, Water Commission

Storm-water runoff and wastewater disposal tend to be dry subjects.

But when it comes to AvalonBay – the 200-unit luxury apartment complex proposed off Route 3A – even the technical details about catch basins and sewerage treatment are of general interest and can be controversial.

And at no place was that more evident than at the Zoning Board of Appeals last Thursday, when a dispute arose over the watershed boundaries in the 61-acre site.

The disagreement is significant because of the way the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) classifies watersheds. Avalon is banking on new information that demonstrates the northern part of the site is in the Weir River Watershed. If that proves to be the case, it could obtain a surface-water discharge permit that would set the stage for the construction of a sewer treatment plant there to service the apartments.

But the Water Commission and its consultants, the Norfolk Ram Group, say the area where the treatment plant is proposed is within the Lily Pond Watershed, that drains into Lily Pond, the town's water supply. Because the Lily Pond Watershed drains to what is classified as "Class A Drinking Water Supply" – no degradation of the watershed is allowed, and Avalon would have to come up with another way to handle wastewater from the complex. The DEP does not issue surface-water discharge permits in "Class A" watersheds.

Scott W. Dale, vice president of development with Avalon, said the issue is a hurdle that needs to be cleared.

"Ultimately there needs to be an agreement on the watershed boundaries," he said after the meeting. "I think we have a more detailed map than they have."

Avalon officials said they walked the site with officials from the DEP and EPA, and found a ridge that sends the water down one side toward the Weir River, and the other side toward Lily Pond. The treatment plant is proposed for the Weir River Watershed side of the ridge.

But the Water Commission is using a 1986 DEP-approved map that shows 84 percent of the site drains into the Lily Pond Watershed with the remainder (area closest to 3A) draining into the Sohier Street Watershed, where the well fields are going to be reactivated. None of the project falls into the Weir River Watershed, said Chairman John K. McNabb.

"We're stunned by the description that a large portion of the watershed goes to the Weir River," he said. "That's not true. Clearly the entire area goes to the Sohier Watershed or the Lily Pond Watershed."

McNabb explained later the boundary lines for the Lily Pond Watershed were first determined by Camp, Dresser and McKee for the Water Commission and formed the basis for the town's Water Resource District Zoning Bylaw, adopted in 1986, which restricts certain adverse land uses in the watershed to protect Lily Pond.

He said more recently in 2002, Norfolk Ram prepared a Surface Water Supply Protection Plan for Lily Pond and the Aaron River Reservoir that included updated GIS (Geographic Information Systems) maps of the delineation of the Lily Pond Watershed. McNabb said the DEP approved the plan, which also means it approved the watershed delineation, a key element of the plan.

During the meeting, Mark Bartlett of Norfolk Ram said there was no reason to question the boundary line that was approved by the DEP. He explained the watershed incorporates not just Lily Pond but any tributary and wetlands that feed into the pond.

Carlos A. Quintal, of CAQ Engineering Associates that was hired by Avalon, said the Weir River is classified as a "Class B" and Avalon can apply for a variance to discharge water there.

"If we cannot make that point (the water goes toward the Weir River) than we cannot have a surface water discharge permit," he said.

What followed was a lengthy discussion about the treatment plant itself, with assurances by Avalon there are enough redundancy and safeguards in the system to keep it operating efficiently. Avalon will also hire a part-time plant manager, who will monitor the facility

Cohasset Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said for comparison purposes the zoning board could take a look at the sewer treatment plant at the Cohasset Knoll nursing home, also off 3A, that has some similar components.

"But the big issue is whether it will discharge into a Class A or Class B," he said. "You can't discharge into a Class A (water supply)."

In a telephone interview earlier this week, Dale said Avalon officials would be following up with the Water Commission and its consultants, Norfolk Ram, to get all the information on the table and see if they can come up with some agreement.

He explained Avalon's assessment of the watershed boundaries was accomplished with a physical survey of the area with instruments, which is usually more accurate than aerial photographs. Avalon also inspected the site with DEP and EPA officials and witnessed water flowing the direction that Avalon's drainage analysis said it would, Dale said.

He said if the Water Commission's boundary proves correct, then Avalon would have to look at alternatives that include revisiting the groundwater discharge capability of the site. The company has also not ruled out installing a sewer main down 3A to connect to the Hull Treatment Plant, although Dale said that option is unlikely.

The Zoning Board meeting also included a detailed Avalon presentation on a new stormwater management system for the site, which was formerly the Web-Norfolk Conveyor property and still contains several old buildings and a large paved area.

AvalonBay is seeking a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B (the state's affordable housing law) to build the apartment complex on industrially-zoned land. Cohasset is vulnerable to 40B projects because it has so little affordable housing.

Members of the Board of Health and Water Commission were in attendance at last week's Zoning Board of Appeals meeting, as well as a handful of interested citizens including some members of Cohasset Action, a grass-roots group opposed to the project because of its density among other issues. The group claims the project will flood the schools with more children than they can handle.

New gym sparkles at Town Meeting

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Prior to the start of Special Town Meeting on Monday, moderator George Marlette warned those in attendance that there could be technical glitches throughout the night, given that this was the first meeting held in the new gymnasium at Cohasset Middle Senior High School.

But aside from one hand vote recount — due to confusion over who was counting where — the evening went off without a hitch.

"It took a great deal of effort to be sure that everything worked out so that we could be here," said Marlette at the start of the evening. "There could be a few glitches tonight, but in the long run, I think everyone will enjoy the benefits of our new home."

For residents, those benefits began last night.

More than 500 Cohasseters attended the meeting, filling the 360 chairs set out over blue tarps on the gym floor, and spilling in to the pull-out bleachers on the side. But where other venues may have been full to the brim, the new gym housed the crowd exceedingly well, leaving plenty of room for people to maneuver.

"I thought it looked fantastic," said School Committee member Rick Flynn of the new digs. "This night provided us with a great showcase for our new school, especially since it was these voters who made this renovation possible."

The meeting was convened shortly after 7 p.m. and wrapped up four-and-a-half hours later at 11:35 p.m.

During that time the meeting covered all 18 articles, with the crowd dwindling down to about 200 at the closing vote – still double the quorum of 100. The crowd peaked around 8:30 p.m., just prior to the vote on to purchase the Barnes property, a 32-acre parcel that is adjacent to Wheelwright Park, for $1 million (see story page 4). The vote passed unanimously, largely due to the fact that the Community Preservation Committee had raised all of the $1 million purchase price, so that it would not affect the tax base in Cohasset.

"This night provided us with a great showcase for our new school, especially since it was these voters who made this renovation possible."
— Rick Flynn, School Committee Chairman

The crowd was holding strong at 10 p.m. until after the town approved the burying of wires in conjunction with the village project, but began to dwindle thereafter (see story, page one). The $800,000 allocation will now be put to a special election to be held after Jan. 1, 2003 for a debt exclusion override to Proposition 2 -1/2.

32-acre parcel preserves sanctity of Wheelwright Park

Voters approve Barnes purchase

By Brian Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

For six frantic months, Rich Silvia and Stuart Ivimey have spent the majority of their time devoted to a 32-acre parcel known as the Barnes Property, which is located adjacent to Wheelwright Park.

Now that Town Meeting voted unanimously to approve purchase of the property — based largely on the fact that the Community Preservation Committee had managed to raise the whole of the $1 million purchase price — they can finally rest.

"It actually physically feels very good," said Silvia, safe in the knowledge that the core deep forest habitat that exists in the area will remain protected. "The community, through Town Meeting, couldn't have been any more supportive."

But the support of the town was in essence reciprocal, and based largely on the work of the CPC prior to the meeting.

Silvia and Ivimey, the CPC chairman, spearheaded the charge, later joined by the Cohasset Conservation Trust, a private conservation organization, state Sen. Bob Hedlund, and countless others throughout the community.

The first hurdle was crossed when the Conservation Trust pledged $100,000 in cash, plus another $150,000 in matching funds for private donations. Then the Board of Selectmen approved the use of the $500,000 of the MBTA mitigation grant, which had been set aside for the purchase of open space. The real breakthrough came when the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs bestowed a "Self-Help Grant" worth $250,000.

Ivimey's party line throughout the meeting, was that this grant was "a funded grant." Not willing to leave it to chance that people would be skeptical, the CPC brought in living proof.

Joe Lerner of the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs appeared before the voters and assured the money was "in a bank account" awaiting the Town Meeting's decision.

The Water Commission donated $50,000 and the CPC spent $10,000 out of their administrative budget for appraisals and earnest money.

"It feels very good, the community, through Town Meeting, couldn't have been any more supportive."
— Rich Silvia, CPC member

The dealmaker, though, according to Sylvia, was the private donations of $65,000 which were then matched dollar-for-dollar by the Conservation Trust.

"You wouldn't believe how many people wrote $20 or $50 checks, who probably had no business doing so," said Silvia. "But they did it anyway, and now a beautiful piece of land has been saved."

Sylvia and Ivimey introduced the article, giving background, though it appeared most in the audience were well-apprised of the issue, thanks in part to a massive publicity campaign launched by the project's proponents. A full-color flyer was placed on each seat prior to the meeting.

"We first met with the Barnes on the subject this April," said Ivimey. "We sat down with the family and indicated that on the behalf of the town we would like to make an attempt to buy the property if they would be willing to hold it open."

Complicating the matters was the fact that a developer had already offered $1 million for the land.

Rich Sylvia, at right, and Stuart Ivimey applaud after the article authorizing the purchase of the 32-acre Barnes property passes muster with Town Meeting voters.

"We told them that we would like the opportunity to come up with the $1 million ourselves," said Ivimey. "It is our understanding that after that, the developer upped their offer, but the Barnes held to their handshake commitment."

Though only $10,000 from the CPC fund was used, Silvia said that the purchase was a textbook example of the CPC at work in the community.

"I don't think it would have happened at all without the CPC in place as an organization," said Silvia. "Right now you would be talking about the development of that land and how we could have let that happen."

The town adopted the Community Preservation Act at last year's annual Town Meeting. It derives it money from a 1.5 percent surcharge on real estate tax and some level of state match. Allocations are recommended by the committee and then voted on by Town Meeting. The committee's funds must be spent on three areas: open space, historical preservation, and affordable housing. The CPC can use a small percentage of its budget as earnest money for administrative tasks, such as appraisals.

Cohasset Action articles pass

40B moratorium meant as statement

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The major criticism of Cohasset's progress towards meeting the 10 percent affordable housing threshold mandated by Chapter 40B, has been that no steps were ever been taken towards addressing the problem.

That statement is no longer true.

On Monday night, Town Meeting approved two measures proposed by Cohasset Action, an anti-40B group, both clearly stating disapproval with the law as written, and an understanding that affordable housing is badly needed.

"A number of folks have looked at (Cohasset Action) as rabble-rousers," said Michael Westcott, the head of the aforementioned group. "I hope that after viewing the articles tonight you will see that is not the case."

"Chapter 40B is more of a sword for developers than a shield for towns."
— Michael Westcott – head of Cohasset Action

Article 3 requested that the Cohasset Housing Authority, the Cohasset Growth and Development Committee, and the Cohasset Planning Board create and implement and affordable housing plan for the town by Jan. 1, 2003.

There was some concern that the deadline was too soon, but members of those boards announced that they were already working on a plan and were confident the deadline would be met.

The second article, Article 4, was slightly more controversial. It calls for a three-year moratorium on any new 40B projects in Cohasset. That moratorium will be presented by the Board of Selectmen to the state legislature as special legislation.

"We're not asking for any money," said Westcott of the article. "In fact, I think that inaction on this issue will cost us a lot more in the long run. Chapter 40B is more of a sword for developers than a shield for towns."

The articles do not affect the current AvalonBay plan, because the comprehensive permit has already been filed with the Zoning Board of Appeals. However, according to Michael Sullivan, the chairman of the Board of Selectmen, the articles are meant to send a message to the state.

"I do not think that Cohasset will be granted a three-year moratorium by itself," said Sullivan. "But it is time to send a message to the state."

That message will be well-received, according to State Sen. Bob Hedlund who was in attendance and spoke on the issue.

"Chapter 40B has been on the books for 33 years now and it is an abject failure," said Hedlund. "It is going to take local activists, like Cohasset Action, to educate the legislature on the issue."

Hedlund said that there are currently 60 legislators, 14 senators and 46 state representatives in favor of making changes to the law including State Rep. Garrett Bradley, who was also in attendance at the meeting.

Despite the support, there were still calls from the public against the articles.

"We have provided two units of affordable housing through Habitat for Humanity, and several units on Government Island," said Chartis Tebbetts, a member of the school committee, speaking as a private citizen. "We have done nothing else and will continue to do nothing else until this is required of us."

Andrew Quigley of 38 Jerusalem Road agreed.

"This is superfluous," said Quigley. "It will have no affect on AvalonBay and since it has no legal standing, it will therefore accomplish nothing. It instead sends an alternative message that Cohasset had done nothing about affordable housing and is all of the sudden up in arms about a 40B development."

Despite the opposition, the vote passed by a large margin.

The articles, as initially authored were illegal, but Town Counsel helped rewrite them so that they were acceptable. The intent did not changed, but their wording has, in order to correct a violation of the separation of powers. The articles originally mandated that the town take action, first on a plan to meet their 40B requirements, and second to declare a moratorium on 40B affordable housing projects within the town. Since Town Meeting is the legislative body, a directive from it to the town's boards (the executive body) would be illegal.

Cohasset Action formed and brought the articles forward in response to the plans by AvalonBay to build at 200-unit 40B project at 155 King St.

bury the wires at a later date), the will to do this project would not be there," said Miller. "The benefit of this point in time is that it comes at the nexus of five different projects, so the benefit of this decision is paying dividends on all fronts and it will help the overall success of all the projects."

The Board of Selectmen offered differing views on the project, but wanted the town to have a chance to vote on the issues, because its long-term impacts.

"I think it is good to give the town the opportunity to address the entire project at once," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "I agree with what Gary Vanderweil said at Town Meeting — you need to take full advantage of this opportunity."

After considerable debate, the vote passed by the narrow margin, but not before a hand count. That count needed to be conducted twice after confusion the first time, over who was counting votes in different sections.

Another interesting angle were commitments from local business owners in the Village, offering to subsidize parts of the project.

Selectman Fred Koed announced that Gerd Ordelheide had promised $100,000 towards the project over four years. Hubert Vanderlugt, who owns Hub Shippingin the Village, said he spoke for four businesses which would be willing to contribute in some way.

"One thing we need to do right now is to clarify the statements made about private contributions to the project," said Haddad. "We need to make sure that is all flushed out before the override vote, so that people know exactly what they are committing to."

Estimates for the five-year debt exclusion (the maximum time frame allowed under state law for roadway projects) peg the cost to the owner of a $500,000 home at about $70 a year.

Harbor plan shot down

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

"Everyone agrees that the sidewalks need improvement The real issue at hand regards the fence."

— Dean Rizzo, director of the CRC

In the end, it was all about the fence.

Article 17, which called for an endorsement of the Community Revitalization Corporation vision for the Harbor area was shot down by a majority vote in the final minutes of Special Town Meeting on Monday night, a public mandate against wholesale changes to the Harbor area.

The major reason – at least publicly – was the proposed changes to the fence that exists currently, and would have been replaced under the CRC's "moderate" approach.

"Everyone agrees that the sidewalks need improvement," said Dean Rizzo, director of the CRC at the meeting. "The real issue at hand regards the fence."

Currently the fence consists of two horizontal beams placed on posts about six feet apart, but if it is changed in any way, it must be brought up to code.

However, if the fence were replaced and brought up to standards, the state transportation grant could be applied to $1 million of the $1.3 million price tag on the project. That grant provides 90 percent funding for a project, but takes into consideration any planning already completed. With the planning provided free to the town by the CRC, the level of funding for the sidewalk and fence restoration could reach 100 percent. (The additional $300,000 was to study and repair the seawall).

But citizens from the area – particularly along Border Street – objected to the plan, saying that it threatened quintessential Cohasset attributes.

"We need to ask here, is the project pushing the grant, or is the grant pushing the project?" asked Selectman Ronnie McMorris, who voiced her strong opposition to the plan.

The debate, presentation, and vote nearly did not even happen.

Richard deLima of 55 Summer St. launched two preemptive strikes against the article, first saying that the article was illegal, and the second calling for it to be postponed indefinitely because the corresponding materials were not filed in time. After those two motions failed, Russ Bonetti of 20 Parker Ave. challenged Rizzo's presence at the meeting, since he was not a resident of the town. That motion, too, failed. Town Moderator George Marlette had allowed Rizzo's participation, but seven people asked for the matter to be put to the town meeting.

"I hope that their is nothing personal motivating this," said Marlette to Bonetti.

The meeting overwhelmingly voted to allow Rizzo to speak, upholding Marlette's decision, before a voice vote defeated the article.

The CRC is backed by Cohasset businessman Peter Roy, who owns Atlantica, the Olde Salt House, and Kimball's, now called the Cohasset Harbor Resort, both of which are located in the harbor.

"I think there are a variety of issues why people voted against it," said Rizzo. "I don't want to characterize why they voted the way they did, but I think there are a variety of issues that come into play."

Rizzo said that he wished the article could have appeared earlier, but realizes that there were still about 200 people in the audience at the time, more than enough to represent the view of the town.

"Everybody would like to see their article earlier on the warrant, when there are more people here," said Rizzo. "But there were a few hundred people here, so it was a pretty decent crowd and you take your chances."

From here, the CRC is headed back to the drawing table.

"The CRC just has to evaluate the results of this vote at Town Meeting and decide how it wants to proceed," said Rizzo.

After the measure was defeated, Town Meeting approved an expenditure of $15,000 to study the condition of the seawall in the area, a study that would have been conducted by the CRC had its non-binding motion passed.

Voters agree to new Senior Overlay District

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

It was, in a word, confusing.

But after several issues, including exactly how much development would be allowed under the zoning changes, the Planning Board's proposed Senior Overlay District was passed by Town Meeting on Monday night.

Exactly the effect of the zoning change will be seen over the course of the years, but according to Planning Board members, it will be small.

"If anything, this zoning is too restrictive," said Al Moore, chairman of the Planning Board. "Most likely we will be back before you next year asking for changes so that we can make projects work under these regulations."

The article, drafted by Town Planner Elizabeth Harrington, seeks to create a senior housing overlay district (covering areas zoned Residential B and C). An overlay district allows specific types of zoning to be permitted across areas previously zoned otherwise. The change would require a project to have 25 percent affordability and to be age restrictive, while stopping development under the law when 20 percent of the town's housing is multi-family. Currently, according to the Board of Assessors, the town sits at 13 percent. If the proposed 200-unit AvalonBay development at 155 King St. (Route 3A) were to go through, the town would probably only have room for one senior housing development. It also restricts the application of the zoning change to parcels of 10 acres or more.

Andrew Quigley, of 38 Jerusalem Road raised the issue of the 20 percent cut-off mark, after Planning Board member Bob Sturdy had stated that the overlay district would cease to exist only after 20 percent of the town's multi-family units were created under this bylaw.

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Michael Sullivan addressed the issue and clarified that the town would shut off after "20 percent of its total housing stock" was multi-family. The town currently sits at 13 percent.

Moore said that concerns that the overlay district would create unwanted housing projects was unfounded.

"Obviously if we didn't think this would be of benefit to the town, we wouldn't have proposed it," said Moore. "We crafted this article with care. If we were going to err, we were going to err on the side of caution."

Case-in-point, according to the Planning Board, is the cluster-zoning overlay district passed 25 years ago. According to Moore, citizens were up in arms over the proposed changes, fearing wholesale changes to the town.

"When cluster zoning first came up, there were naysayers who said, "We'll end up with these projects all over town,'" said Moore. "We have had only three projects under that overlay district."

Moore and the board, hope to get one project out of the zoning change.

"First of all, I think you need to realize that the town is largely built out," said Moore. "Most of the building permits are not for raw land, but rather teardown and rebuilds. We would be very happy to get one, good project out of this."

GROUNDBREAKING

Everyone and especially children are invited to the groundbreaking at Sunday noon for "Our World," the children's global discovery museum, in the back wing of the former Osgood School (soon to be the new Paul Pratt Library). Kids get free hard-hats and globes. Luncheon at the ceremony at Atlantica for $15 adults, $10 kids. Call 781-383-0900 to reserve.

IN SCOTLAND

Justin Maitland, Forest Avenue, has been spending his Fall semester in Greenock, Scotland at James Watt College. He is starting his senior year there, as a history major. He will return in late November and finish his degree at the University of Maine, Farmington. His parents, Ken and Heidi Maitland, were able to visit him in October and all three took a week to drive around the country. What amazing experiences Justin!

The members of the Cohasset High School fall cheerleading squad await their turn to compete.

GRIDIRON T-SHIRTS

The Cohasset Gridiron Club is selling hats, long sleeve T-shirts and sweatshirts. If anyone wants them before the Thanksgiving Game, they can call Linda at 383-9131 and leave a message. These items can even be delivered to you! Come show your spirit and support in style at this years Thanksgiving Day game.

POST PROM PARTY

The next post prom party planning meeting will be held on Nov. 21 at 7:30 p.m. in the CHS Café.

EVENING FLU CLINIC

The Cohasset Board of Health will offer free flu immunizations on Tuesday, Nov. 26 from 7 – 9 p.m. at the Public Health Nurse's office at Town Hall.

Anyone 65 years or older is urged to be immunized and is asked to bring their Medicare Insurance Card. Vaccine is available for Cohasset residents and is especially recommended for those 50 years and older and those of all ages considered high risk with chronic medical conditions such as Asthma, and other lung disease, diabetes heart and kidney disease, anemia and other blood disorders and anyone with a weakened immune system.

No Appointment is necessary. If you have any questions please call Judy Fitzsimmons, RN, PHN at 383-2210. Please wear a short sleeve shirt.

As we get ready to enter our week of Thanksgiving, I want for all of us to stop and look around. Try and find someone who may need a little bit of warmth or help in their lives. Maybe someone who has recently undergone some difficult times, someone who may be struggling a bit or just needs a friend and a place to visit on Thanksgiving Day. This is a time for being thankful, putting bygones behind you and really feeling what it is like to have friends, family and a community that can be together for the holidays. I know that I so often forget how really lucky we all our to live the lives that we do and how special it is to have the lives we lead. Take the time to share with your children a little bit of what Thanksgiving is all about in your eyes and make the time to listen to what they have to share with us. "Out of the mouths of babes" takes on a whole new meaning when we just stop our days for a few minutes and listen!

That is all for this week. Please make sure to get me all your news, information and photos no later than Mondays at noon!

Herb Towle is always a Town Meeting regular

Says it's his duty to attend

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

Sitting in the Red Lion Bakery, Herb Towle, 84, breaks out into song.

"Let me hold your hand in mine, read your future line-by-line."

The waitresses behind the counter stop to listen as Towle's baritone creases the atmosphere. The voice is still strong and clear, with just a bit of gravel spicing the delivery.

"Life can be so fine, there is so much to see and learn."

The song is a line from the musical "March Meeting," a Cohasset production that Towle, and other citizens appeared in somewhere back in the 1950s. Originally intended as a fundraiser for the Cohasset Rotary Club's scholarships, the production was written by Isobel Grassie, Gudrun Birch Howe, and Jeanne Toy Gormley. The show was a riff on Town Meeting in Cohasset and included several characters based on town leaders at the time.

The woman sitting at the table behind Towle – Robin Lord Eaton – Towle had sparked the memory. She too, had appeared in the musical in 1950 and 1956, each time in a different role, like the majority of those who participated. Towle, however, played the same part both years. The name of the character escapes him, but the song is embedded in his consciousness.

"One women wrote all the songs, and they were just terrific," said Towle, breaking the respectful silence that had enveloped the room. "It was all about what it was like to live in Cohasset, and go to Town Meeting. The whole town got involved."

Needless to say, the role wasn't much of a stretch. For 84 years Towle has done just that — live in Cohasset and go to Town Meeting.

"I began to attend Town Meeting as soon as I was of voting age," said Towle. "Whenever there has been a town meeting, I have been there, aside from my time in the Pacific. I wanted to be involved in the town, I always wanted to see what was going on."

Welcome to Herb Towle's world.

He is a man about town, taking his burnt sienna Dodge Neon from place to place. The waitresses here at the Red Lion Bakery know him. He lives right next door and has coffee here every morning. They treat him in a caring, kind manner — as if he were their grandfather. When he arrived at 12:20 p.m. on a Friday unexpectedly to participate in a interview, they quickly sprang into action. A fresh cup of coffee was rushed to his table and arrived at the same time he did.

On a usual day, breakfast is followed by a trip to his beloved Harbor, followed by lunch at home — a seafood salad sandwich on oatmeal bread. After lunch comes another trip to the harbor, followed by dinner. Six nights a week, it is fish. On Fridays, he heads to Jamie's Pub in North Scituate for meat, but only so that he can feed the leftovers to his neighbor's dog.

Towle was born on the shores of Cohasset Harbor in 1918, in a double house on Border Street. He has lived here all his life, excepting during World War II, when he served as a First Class Petty officer on board the aircraft carrier, the USS Bunker Hill. During that time, he attended every Town Meeting he possibly could – over 60 years worth – a streak of Lou Gehrig or Cal Ripken proportions.

"It was never because I was excited," said Towle last Friday. "It was because it was my duty. I was there to vote."

And to express his opinions, something he says he never had trouble with.

"I'll always put my two cents in," said Towle. "I've never been afraid to express my opinion."

His icy blue eyes sparkle at the last comment and he leans in upon delivery. You can tell that the man enjoyed the rhetorical give-and-take over the years.

He's proud of his accomplishments in town, particularly regarding his role in founding the Cohasset Sailing Club in 1960.

"It was something I wanted to do," said Towle. "I had four children that I wanted to be able to learn how to sail, I wanted all kids to be able to learn how to sail."

To date, more than 10,000 children have benefited from the program and Towle, who first took to the water as a five-year-old on a raft, has seen his dream come true.

"It is very busy in the summer and now we have 25 boats," said Towle. "The harbor is just so beautiful, and I love to see it used in this way."

The resident expert on Town Meeting throughout the decades, Towle says he has seen the meeting change. Towle, on the other hand, hasn't. His opinion is always on the tip of his tongue.

"Well, the town spends too much money," said Towle. "We just built two new baseball fields, which we probably didn't need. We have fields here, which the kids could have played on, but here, things need to be perfect."

Towle says he doesn't have much patience for people who stand up at Town Meeting attempting to raise a ruckus – though some people suggest Towle may have been guilty of just that over the years.

"I'll put my opinion in on anything," said Towle. "But it has to be something that is worth saying. When I worked as an electrical engineer in Boston and salesmen would come into my office, I would tell them, 'Be seated, be brief, and be gone.' It was very effective."

Towle says recent meetings have frustrated him, because Town Manager Mark Haddad often quotes statutes and laws by number and code, which Towle says can be confusing.

"You'll see him get up there and say, 'Such and such article is in accordance with Chapter 41B, section 212 of the Massachusetts code,'" said Towle. "I don't know what Chapter 41B is. I'm sure he does, but I would like a more in-depth explanation. At Town Meeting it is important to take a moment to digest what you are really voting for, and that is harder to do now."

But he was there Monday, as he has been for the rest, sitting, waiting, ready to comment when he felt the need arise.

"It's a duty," said Towle, again repeating his mantra. "You really need to go there and express your opinions and try to keep the town from going completely overboard."

TOWN MEETING SHORTS

Cemetery gate to be refurbished

Article 5, submitted by the Community Preservation Committee also passed unanimously. The article provides $20,000 for the repair and restoration of the two iron gates at the front of the Beechwood Cemetery. It will also provide for a historically accurate wooden sign.

Police/fire study money approved

Town meeting also approved $60,000 to study and develop plans to put an addition on the current police/fire station building on Elm Street. The long-term plan is to house the departments in separate buildings, but an article that would have provided money for that project did not pass Town Meeting last year. This money will attempt to develop an interim solution.

Stabilization Fund

In anticipation of an override situation in the near future, Town Manager Mark Haddad and the Board of Selectmen put forward Article 10 to transfer $1,950,000 to the Stabilization Fund. With the school building assistance fund delayed, the town will need to cover payments on the school projects until the money comes in from the state.

Private ways to see more work

Town Meeting approved Article 12, which called for a $25,000 influx from the Surplus Revenue Account to the Private Way Capital Account. The move was necessary because of the passage of Article 15 of the Oct. 26, 1998 at Special Town Meeting.

Sewer plant

Town Meeting granted Town Manager Mark Haddad the right to enter into a contract with a company to run the Wastewater Treatment Plant. The initial term of the contract will be five years, with up to two additional extension terms of three years each. Haddad will conduct the process in conjunction with the Sewer Commission.

Senior tax exemptions

Town Meeting passed Article 15, which called for "expanded senior tax exemptions in the town of Cohasset." The article raised the maximum qualifying salary to $50,000. Senior tax exemptions allow seniors with cash flow problems to put off paying taxes until a later date.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

A no-brainer

Many of the issues tackled at Monday's Special Town Meeting will be debated for sometime to come. But one matter that can be put to rest is the purchase of the 32-acre Barnes property, soon to be renamed the Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary.

We'll admit we thought this was "pie in the sky" when the proposal first came before the Community Preservation Committee (CPC) about six months ago. The $1 million purchase price represented a lot of money to be raised in a relatively short period of time.

The land, which is a deep forest habitat, is well known to those who frequent Wheelwright Park. But it's must lesser known if at all, we suspect, to a majority of Cohasseters who haven't yet discovered the beauty of Wheelwright.

Cohasset's adoption of the Community Preservation Act has turned out to be a real plus for the town. Not only due to the stream of money it provides for open space, historical preservation and affordable housing – but also because it gets us thinking about possibilities.

The CPC has proved to be an energetic, activist board. Its members aren't sitting back waiting for proposals to come to them, but are going out and seeking ways to make a difference.

"I don't think it would have happened at all without the Community Preservation Committee in place as an organization," says Rich Silvia, who spearheaded the Barnes effort. "Right now you would be talking about the development of that land and how could we have let that happen."

The truly amazing part of the Barnes purchase is that is isn't costing the taxpayers anything. That's right, all the money has been raised through grants and private donations. We suppose some will say that state grants and MBTA funds come from our pockets too, so we'll concede there is some impact. But those same funds would go elsewhere if Cohasset hadn't been on its toes.

The purchase didn't even require monies from the Community Preservation Fund, other than $10,000 for administrative purposes, such as appraisals.

There are many people to thank but top of the list is Mr. Silvia, who spent about every waking moment on this proposal. The Barnes family should also be applauded for giving the town the chance to come up with the funds even though a developer had already offered them $1 million for the property. Kudos also to the Cohasset Conservation Trust for stepping up to the plate, selectmen for approving the use of MBTA mitigation money, state Sen. Bob Hedlund, R- Weymouth, for his help with the state "Self-Help Grant," and all the donors, who sent checks both large and small. Other members of the CPC, including its chairman Stuart Ivimey, also should take a bow, as well as the Water Commission that donated money and the voters at Monday's Special Town Meeting.

This is a win-win for everyone. And if all the critters in Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary could talk, they'd be cheering, too! Congratulations, Cohasset on a job well done.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Harbor fence

To the Editor

I have just had the unique experience of sitting through our town meeting and listening to the debate on Article 17. This article proposed that the town move forward with plans to improve safety and access to the harbor, including a new sidewalk, a wider road and a new fence. The new fence was not the desire of the organization proposing the changes, the Cohasset Revitalization Committee, but rather a requirement for state funding for the project.

We live on the harbor and walk the harbor almost every day. We have two young children and are acutely aware of the need for safety improvements along the harbor walkway. The sidewalk is uneven and filled with potholes, the fence is low and has wide gaps. As one resident, opposed to the motion stated, there is room to put a kayak in the harbor, both under and over the fence. This was her argument for keeping the fence as is. Surely this would reinforce the notion that the fence is not safe, that indeed if a kayak could be placed in the water, young children could fall between the rails or even over the low railing.

However, for the most part, the issue was presented, by its opponents, as one of aesthetics. Surely the state is not insisting on a new fence because it wants to change the aesthetics. In fact, it is clearly stated that a new fence is required to meet safety requirements. One of our selectmen is opposed of a new safer fence, because it would be damaged in the event of another blizzard like that of 1978, a storm that happens once in a hundred years, and the town would have to pay for repairs. No concern was given to the danger presented to pedestrians, who might break a leg in a pothole, be forced into traffic by the cars parked over the sidewalk or a child whose bike might falter and who could potentially fall into the harbor. There may not have been any serious accidents to date, but that does not mean that there is no, danger. Are we to wait for a serious accident before we take action ? I would suggest that given the record to date on this issue, the town will have a serious liability when such an accident does happen. Pray to God it won't, but if it doesn't it won't be for the farsightedness of the town's advisory board, who voted against this article or the residents of the town who value the aesthetics of a fence over its safety!

Where does that leave us know? Everyone present seemed to agree that there is a need for improvements in the sidewalks and work on the seawall. Since the town meeting voted against Article 17, which would have had these improvements made at the expense of the state, we are left to make the improvements at our own expense. The town will have to find $350,000 to pay for these much needed repairs. This will take money away from other projects or find its way into our tax bill. We can thank the Friends of Cohasset Harbor and the lobstermen who spearheaded the opposition against this bill for this additional financial burden. As was stated by one of the Article's opponents, There is no free lunch

Diabetes: The silent killer

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

November is National Diabetes Awareness Month. An estimated 17 million persons in the United States have diabetes. During 1990-2000, the prevalence of diagnosed diabetes increased 49 percent among U.S. adults. It causes heart disease and stroke, and is the leading cause of adult blindness, kidney failure and nontraumatic amputations. It contributes to the deaths of more than 200,000 Americans each year.

Even in its undiagnosed stages, diabetes can cause gradual unnoticed nerve and kidney damage, eye diseases, and heart disease. So gradual are these changes that nearly 6 million people living in the United States have no idea that they are among the 17 million Americans believed to have diabetes. Every day, 2,700 more people learn the news. There are at least 16 million more whose blood-glucose levels have climbed above normal but have not yet reached a level high enough for a diabetes diagnosis. These people have pre-diabetes, which will most likely develop into diabetes within the next 10 years of their lives. It, too, can cause serious harm to the body, long before a doctor detects it.

So gradual are these changes that nearly 6 million people living in the United States have no idea that they are among the 17 million Americans believed to have diabetes.

Diabetes is a chronic disease that has no cure, but can be controlled. There are two major types of diabetes. Type 1, which occurs most often in children and young adults, is an auto-immune disease in which the body does not produce any insulin, a hormone needed to convert food into the energy we need to live. Five to 10 percent of diabetes cases are of this type.

Type 2 diabetes, a metabolic disorder resulting from the body's inability to make enough or properly use insulin, accounts for 90 percent or more of all diabetes cases. It is most often associated with obesity and was once referred to as adult-onset diabetes, since it frequently strikes in adulthood.

However, the recent surge in childhood obesity has brought with it a disturbing rise in type 2 diabetes among our nation's youth. What makes this increase even more alarming is that children who develop type 2 diabetes appear to develop serious complications much earlier in their lives than people who are diagnosed as adults. A recent study documented a disproportionate number of kidney failures, miscarriages and diabetes-related deaths among one of the first generations of children with type 2 to reach their 20s.

This news comes on the heels of predictions by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) that the prevalence of type 2 diabetes will soar by 165 percent in the United States by the year 2050. The increase in obesity among children and adults, a growing number of older Americans and a trend toward more sedentary lifestyles have already combined to push type 2 diabetes to epidemic proportions.

But the CDC's predictions needn't come true. Recent studies tell us that diabetes can be prevented if we are willing to make and sustain moderate lifestyle changes, including maintaining a healthy weight or losing a modest amount of weight, and being physically active for at least 30 minutes each day. For those who already have diabetes, these changes can help ward off the serious health complications associated with the disease. They are changes worth making. They are changes that could save your life. To find more about diabetes, contact Judy Fitzsimmons our Public Health Nurse at the Town Hall or call the Board of Health.

Also, additional information about diabetes is available from Center for Disease Control, telephone 872 232-3422, e-mail diabetes@cdc.gov . and at http:www.cdc.gov/diabetes.

A pepõn is a pompion is a pumpkin is a pie

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

What calls back the past, like the rich Pumpkin pie?
John Greenleaf Whittier

Thanks to the ghosts and goblins who spared my Halloween jack-o-lanterns, I'll have fresh, garden-grown pumpkin for my Thanksgiving pies.

I'm a late arrival to pumpkin pie, having tried it for the first time - reluctantly - only a few years ago when a friend brought me one of his creations, made from one of my garden pumpkins. I could hardly say no, given that he had brought not only the pie but fresh whipped cream and immediately set about preparing me a serving. I've been hooked on pumpkin pie ever since.

It seems only fitting that pumpkin pie should be a mainstay of our Thanksgiving table, a native American food for a native American holiday. Evidence of pumpkin cultivation in Mexico and Central America dates back some 5,000 years. Early explorers to the New World found pumpkins growing in the West Indies and along the Southern and New England coasts. Specimens were taken back to the Old World where, according to Plimoth Plantation Food Historian Paula Marcoux, their similarity to gourds, cucumbers and melons already under cultivation assured their ready acceptance.

The word "pumpkin" comes to us from the Greek "pepõn meaning large melon, a clue that the pumpkin is genetically related to cantaloupes, watermelons, squashes and cucumbers, all vine crops and members of the Cucurbitaceae family. From "pepon," came a nasalized form, "pompion," dating back to 1547 and, ultimately, pumpkin. Botanically speaking, the pumpkin is not a vegetable, but a fruit, carrying and nurturing the seeds of the next generation. Among the species within the Cucurbitaceae family, C. pepo, is what we know as 'true" pumpkins, round fruits with bright orange skins and woody, furrowed stems. C. maxima are those fruits, including the Hubbard and turban squashes, with yellowy skin and spongy stems, and C. moschata include the long or oblong tan-skinned fruits such as butternut squash. Plimoth Plantation's Colonial Food Historian Kathleen Curtin explains that there can be some confusion about the terms "pumpkin" and "squash" which have been used interchangeably, especially in old recipes and historic accounts. The earliest colonists, she notes, referred to all squash and pumpkins as pompions. The word "squash," meaning any species of the genus Cucurbita, is an abbreviation of the Narragansett Indian word "asquutasquash."

If anything says autumn, it is a nip in the air, a hint of wood smoke and a field ablaze with pumpkins waiting to be harvested. Pumpkins come in what seems to be an endless variety of shapes and sizes, thanks to new hybrids and the ease at which pumpkins cross-pollinate among themselves and with squashes (only a problem if you save your seed). Among the more popular varieties these days are the giant county fair show pumpkins (the record weight for a pumpkin is 1,262 pounds!), the classic carving pumpkins (Howden and Connecticut Field), the sugar "pie" pumpkins and the miniature and specialty pumpkins, including my favorite the ghostly white Lumina.

Planted in manure-enriched hills of five or six seeds, most varieties need about 100 days to mature and at least six feet in each direction to spread and grow. A common mistake made by gardeners (including this writer) is not thinning the hills to two or three of the strongest plants. As heartbreaking as it may be to uproot healthy plants, it must be done. Over-crowding and excessive foliage discourage bees from transferring pollen, resulting in poor fruiting.

More than 95 percent of the pumpkin crop is available in October and most of that crop is used for decorative purposes, a trend that began with Irish immigrants who brought their Halloween and jack-o-lantern traditions with them to America in the mid-19th century. Despite the pumpkin's nutritional value - high in fiber, low in calories, rich in potassium and cancer-fighting beta-carotene (its bright orange color says it all) - a mere 1 percent of pumpkins sold today in the United States are consumed, generally as a sweet in the form of pies, breads and preserves though elsewhere around the world pumpkin is savored in stews, soups, salads and gnocchi.

We weren't always so dismissive of our native fruit. Native Americans recognized the nutritional value of pumpkins and cultivated them for food and medicine. Pumpkin was eaten fresh in stews. Dried over a fire, it could be stored for months, rehydrated by boiling and sweetened with maple sugar. Native Americans also ate the seeds, fresh or dried, to improve urinary function. An emulsion of seeds was believed to heal wounds and snakebites. Pumpkin shells, cut into strips, flattened and dried were woven into mats.

The first English colonists to arrive in the New World, already familiar with pompions, also recognized their value, both as a food and a curative. Though there is little documentation of the first harvest feast in Plimoth in 1621, Kathleen Curtin feels certain that stewed pumpkin would have been brought to the Pilgrims' thanksgiving table by their Wampanoag guests. Her colleague, Paula Marcoux, notes that a 1672 description of "The Ancient New England Standing Dish" by John Josselyn illustrates an interest in the "physical" nature of pumpkin as well as the early (ancient) use for such recipes in daily (standing dish) fare: 7

"But the Housewives manner is to slice them when ripe, and cut them into dice, and so fill a pot with them of two or three gallons, and stew them upon a gentle fire a whole day, and as they sink, they fill again with fresh pompions, not putting any liquor to them; and when it is stew'd enough, it will look like bak'd apples; this they Dish, putting Butter to it, and a little Vinegar, (with some Spice, as Ginger, & c.) which makes it tart like an Apple, and so serve it up to be eaten with Fish or Flesh: It provokes Urin extreamly and :is very windy."

By the early 19th century, pumpkins were grown primarily as stock feed. Debra Friedman, Historic Foodways Coordinator at Old Sturbridge Village, a "living" museum presenting New England life from 1790 to 1840, notes that pumpkins, like most fruits and vegetables, had assumed a lowly status as food for humans. The typical 19th century diet consisted largely of proteins and starches with fruits and vegetables eaten only if "elevated" in status by the addition of expensive cream, sugar and spices or the extra labor involved in pureeing (one pound of pumpkin yields one cup of puree). Pies and sweet meats - the flesh of fruits and vegetables preserved in sugar - were examples of "elevated" uses of pumpkin. Today, observes Ms. Friedman, we continue that early American tradition, eating a diet rich in meats and starches and treating fruits and vegetables more as a garnish than as the centerpiece of a meal.

With the 1796 publication of Amelia Simmons' "American Cookery," the young American nation had its first American published cookbook and its first "receipt" for pumpkin pie, then called pumpkin "pudding", the term used for single crust pies. Her recipe is not all that different from Libby's Famous Pumpkin Pie Recipe:

"One quart of milk, one pint pompkin, 4 eggs, molasses, allspice and ginger in a crust, bake 1 hour."

Joining chicken pies, mince, ham and mutton on the colonial harvest table, pumpkin pudding established itself as a symbol of the fall bounty. By 1863, with many states recognizing a day of thanksgiving, President Lincoln proclaimed Thanksgiving a national holiday. And pumpkin pie, heaped with fresh whipped cream, has become a staple of that holiday. If only, as Whittier observed, "thy life be as sweet/ and its last sunset sky/ Golden-tinted and fair as/thy own Pumpkin pie!

Though the season for pumpkins is short-lived, they are good keepers (several months) if properly prepared. Wipe pumpkins down with a damp cloth and check for mold, bruises and broke stems. If there are any signs of defects or decay, use immediately (puree freezes well). Store whole pumpkins in a dry, cool, well-ventilated area.

Ambitious gardeners may want to try one of the heirloom pumpkin varieties offered by Old Sturbridge Village. Visit their website at www.osv.org for more information about seeds.

And cooks may like to try the recipe for Pumpkin Preserve originally published in The Good Housekeeper (1839) and now available in the Old Sturbridge Cookbook (1995).

Pumpkin Preserves

Sugar pumpkin, 3 to 4 pounds
4 to 5 cups of sugar
2 to 3 lemons

Cut pumpkin in half and scoop out seeds. Discard or toss in olive oil and roast for a nutritious snack.

Cut pumpkin along ribs into eight sections and peel shell. Remove any inside membrane.

Cut pumpkin into thin strips and heat in a double boiler until tender, but not too soft.

Measure pumpkin and add an equal amount of sugar and the juice and peel of one lemon for every two cups of pumpkin.

Heat gently, stirring constantly, until sugar melts. Cook slowly until a half-teaspoonful placed on a plate is thick and rich and no longer runny.

Fill sterilized jars and seal.

And from Plimoth Plantation, a modern version, adapted by Paula Marcoux, of John Josselyn's "Ancient New England Standing Dish."

Ancient New England Standing Dish

Begin with 4 cups of cooked pumpkin (or squash), roughly mashed, in a saucepan over medium heat. Add 3 tablespoons butter, 2 to 3 teaspoons cider vinegar, 1 to 2 teaspoons ground ginger (or nutmeg, cloves or pepper) and. 1/2 teaspoon salt. Stir until hot. Adjust seasonings to taste.

Sex on campus

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth I dated an art student who lived in the Franklin Square House, a sort of a private dormitory in the South End that provided housing for, among others, college girls whose schools didn't have living facilities of their own.

They were guarded carefully, the girls of the Franklin Square House. Residents would have had more freedom under Dr. Laura. Male visitors were not allowed out of the lobby. Put your foot on the first step to the second floor and you were apt to wind up on the sidewalk with your bouquet wrapped around your neck.

Ten years later, as the most recent college graduate on the staff, I was called on to do a story about sex on the campus. The information I gathered — through interviews, not experience — indicated that the big debate was this: When entertaining a coed in your room, how many feet should be on the floor? The consensus figure was three.

Right now, no one seems to care when your foot reaches that first step or how many feet are on the floor or even whose room it is, what with the coed often living in the same building or on the some floor or even next door. In fact, the latest thing in college newspapers is the sex column, mostly written by the coeds themselves!

The best known of these fledgling Dr. Ruths is Natalie Krinsky, who pens "Sex and the (Elm) City," for the Yale Daily News and who recently advised, "Women know within the first five minutes of meeting a man whether they are going to hook up with him or not. But . . . women don't want the guy to know he'll be hooking up until he's actually doing it . .."

If you think this is just a passing phase, Natalie hired a literary agent the other day.

Amber Madison, who writes the "Between the Sheets" column for the Tufts Daily, began a recent dissertation: "Most of the sexually active population has mastered the act of putting on a condom, but there still seems to be confusion surrounding where to keep them, how to take them off, and even when to use them."

Whereupon, like Beth Winship in the Boston Globe, she tells them.

Even Boston College, where Anna Schleelein writes the "Sex and the Univer-City" column for The Heights, has bowed to the inevitable. "It's no secret that sex is a popular topic among college students," Larry Griffin, editor of The Heights, told USA Today, as if anybody didn't know.

"College is screwed up," wrote Schleelein, "It's not real life. They took 6,000 of us who are in our sexual prime and crammed us into a dorm room where there's no where to sit except on the bed. Members of the opposite — or same, of course — gender are but a single flight of stairs away, and often right next door."

As for me, I like Dear Abbie's advice to the coed who once wrote to her: "I had too much to drink at a frat party and I don't remember anything until I woke up the next morning. Did I do wrong?"

Abbie's answer: "Probably."

Convention decision helps lift the Democrats' mood

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of the week in state government ending Nov. 14.

The big news that Boston will hold the Democratic National Convention in 2004 landed oddly at the Statehouse, where Republicans are happily designing the new normal and the state-level Democrats are in a foul mood.

Until the announcement of the convention, the main issue Democrats wanted to talk about was what Shannon O'Brien did wrong, what message the party can find that will strike voters as fresh and exciting, and whether the chairman should be replaced.

Then came the news conference featuring the speakerphone declaration of Boston as the gathering place for the nation's minority party, in a state where Democrats will hold a 170-29 majority in the Legislature come January.

If all goes as hoped, the city will show off its "new diversity," shaking off the demonic ghosts of the busing crisis; the state will be able to show that the Big Dig was worth it; and the party will express its reinvented self in Beantown.

And, of course, if all goes as Democrats here hope, a candidate from Massachusetts will receive the nomination for president. Junior US Sen. John Kerry says he'll make up his mind about running in December; everyone here thinks he made up his mind in about December of 1973, and is simply ready now to execute his plan. Everyone could yet be proven wrong. Still, Kerry could be forgiven for perceiving the selection of Boston as destiny.

All of this did improve the Dems' outlook, but at the Statehouse right now it's the Republicans that have the interesting story lines going. Massachusetts just voted in a reasonably normal election — sure, there is anxiety in the air and some concern over the big budget problems, but no sense of widespread outrage or desperation for reform — and the Republican won easily. That's new.

There's nothing but opportunity for the Republicans now, but can they capitalize? Nov. 5 provided strong evidence that independent voters will elect Republicans if credible ones appear on the ballot. As never before, not even after the anomalous "Weld revolution" of 1990, the party could successfully invade the legislative and congressional ranks with good organization. It could even turn the convention to its advantage if President Bush is popular and Kerry et. al. can be positioned as The Failed Past.

But success in that regard depends on two things. Can the GOP finally hire some very good organizers and candidate recruiters? And will Romney succeed? At their victory celebrations Nov. 5, the Republicans were throwing around the word "mandate," and to them that means, Romney's got a mandate to balance the budget without new taxes, and fire some people. To the public, it's more like: Do what you did at the Olympics. Be a star.

It could happen. Interestingly enough, the events of the week set up a situation where both parties have cause to be hopeful about the future.

The major news concerned a future more immediate than 2004, as Romney started building a team.

• Romney and running mate Kerry Healey made public a 97-member committee to select people and agendas for the new government. The list includes local luminaries such as Michael Porter of Harvard, Thomas Stemberg of Staples, and Paul Fireman of Reebok. Romney said the assembly is bipartisan and diverse; he did not know the number of Democrats. The subject teams and leaders: Jobs and the Economy: Porter Crime and Public Safety: Healey Education: Tripp Jones, executive director of MassINC Health Care: Charles Baker, CEO of Harvard Pilgrim Health and former A&F secretary Housing and Transportation: Gloria Larson, chairwoman of the Mass. Convention Center Authority Environment: Diane Conrad, who headed environmental programs at the Salt Lake City Olympics

In other transition news, a collection of more than 70 environmental groups wrote to Romney, recommending that he retain current Environmental Affairs Secretary Robert Durand. Romney said he'd take the advice seriously.

• It looks like the health care team will have to grapple with yet another serious monetary problem facing Massachusetts. State number crunchers examining the uncompensated care pool have determined the fund will run a deficit of $152 million this fiscal year, burgeoning to $306 million in fiscal 2005. That means poor patients will receive that much more free care from hospitals than surcharges on patients with insurance can cover. Hospitals, already struggling financially, fear they will have to eat those costs, which could compromise care or even lead to hospital closings, executives said. A commission is due to make recommendations about handling the situation by Dec. 16.

• The advocacy group Health Care for All spun out the implications of state health care cuts in a report. With 50,000 people due to lose Medicaid benefits in April, the demand on emergency rooms and other health facilities will soar, and that will threaten the financial status of some institutions, Health Care for All said. Such closures could start a crisis of availability and cost beyond even the dire situation already projected. Several smaller but significant cuts add to the woes caused by the big MassHealth Basic cut.

• Attorney General Thomas Reilly, working in conjunction with federal trade officials, announced the filing of legislation aimed at mitigating the deception and annoyance associated with junk e-mail. Under the proposed law, marketers would face penalties if they did not disclose the commercial or "adult" nature of their message in the subject line, or used electronic trickery to hide the true source of the spam.

• The outgoing acting governor recently ordered every state office and department to establish zero-tolerance rules for worker violence. Under the executive order, employers must establish clear, zero tolerance policies in their offices, appoint a workplace violence point person, and take immediate action to deal with any incidents. Employers are also directed to implement workplace violence awareness and prevention programs, developed by the state public safety office. The policy covers not just actual acts of violence, but intimidation and threats.

• While her stance on violence was pro-active, Swift made clear that concerns about cuts in local aid are now someone else's problem. In her last meeting with the Local Government Advisory Council, the acting governor said she understands the budget fears of mayors and managers, but that they need to express them to the incoming administration and let it respond.

Greenbush costs soar

which is the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad Restoration project, and is estimating the project could end up costing $486 million.

It's too soon to tell if Greenbush opponents will have a friend in governor-elect Mitt Romney.

Romney spokesman Eric Fehrnstrom said the new administration won't stand for more cost increases.

"Mitt Romney will insist on effective management of MBTA capital projects, including the Greenbush Line," Fehrnstrom said. "He will have a zero-tolerance policy for cost overruns. Families in Massachusetts must live within their budget, and so should state government."

But transportation officials downplayed the latest hit to the project budget.

"We're not talking a major increase," said Transportation Secretary Jim Scanlan. "We're talking manageable increases and we're hoping we're going to lock down the project (cost) over the next few months."

Scanlan said he briefed Romney on the situation last week and doesn't believe the project is in jeopardy.

Most of the increase is due to higher-than-expected costs in acquiring land, undertaking litigation and putting together final mitigation packages for the communities along the line.

State Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, is suggesting that although this recently estimated hike is troubling to hear, there may be savings to be found in other areas to offset the increasing costs.

"When these things happen you have to find savings in other areas of the project," Hynes said. "During this very difficult financial state right now we have to be more efficient with the way we run projects and have more effective cost management."

Hynes said the cost for the Greenbush line had a 25 to 30 percent contingency when estimates first came in several years ago, but should have accounted for increasing market prices for land that have been prevalent the last few years.

"I said a year ago Greenbush would cost $1/2 billion."
— State Sen. Robert Hedlund

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, who is an outspoken Greenbush opponent, worries the MBTA may try to cut costs on mitigation to property owners along the line rather than pull the plug on the project.

"If they try to cut back on the project rather than stop it, I'll fight that tooth and nail," Bradley said. "I'm going to make sure they're not going to do the project on the backs of people in my district."

Bradley agrees with Hedlund and Hynes that project estimates were too low given the rising market prices for land.

"Now that they are actually taking land and writing checks to people," he said, "they realize they have to pay more than anticipated."

While financial documents indicate a $52 million cost increase, T General Manager Mike Mulhern said that's a worse-case scenario number, and Hynes agrees that the project will only be cancelled as a last alternative to skyrocketing costs.

"That's a maximum exposure if everything goes wrong...(and) if we do X, Y and Z," Mulhern told the Boston Herald. "I said (to my staff), 'Hey, I'm not doing X, Y and Z.

Mulhern said the actual increase will probably be around $30 million. The construction costs are capped at $252 million as part of the design-build contract awarded to Cashman/Balfour Beatty earlier this year.

Bradley explained it would be very difficult at this point, but not impossible to stop the project, even with the cost so high. He said the state is contractually obligated with CBB to do the project, and reneging on that would open the state up to a lawsuit.

But Hynes is suggesting that a more efficient management of this project may be all that is needed to get costs under control. With the current difficult financial state of Massachusetts, Hynes said every department has to be much more efficient with the way all programs are run.

"I hope the MBTA can work with the incoming governor to restrain costs so they don't get out of hand," Hynes said, recognizing that the completion of this project is still three years away. "But if the cost overruns are excessive enough this project may very well not go forward. I can't suggest that with such a tough financial situation for the state on hand that this new finding doesn't concern me."

Hedlund cites studies by the state's Blue Ribbon Commission, the Pioneer Institute (a private think tank) and the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation that all questioned the T's ability to conduct an aggressive capital program given its financial structure.

But he said the project has a legislative mandate and the authority is in place to borrow the money for it.

"It would take an executive branch decision not the release the (borrowing) authority to have it not go forward," Hedlund said.

But Greenbush supporters are quick to point out the T is legally obligated to restore train service to the Greenbush corridor as part of the Big Dig mitigation package.

"This is a legal obligation that has to be funded," said Toni Hicks, staff attorney for the Conservation Law Foundation. "(It) has the force of law, and budgetary constraints can't undo that."

103-unit 40B project is proposed for Beach Street

that include Morrissey's land (Lots #1 & 3) and land (Lot #2) owned by David Walsh, a developer, and pledged to raise the $1.2 million estimated cost. The land abuts the 25-acre Great Brewster Woods, one of the town's open space gems. At last year's annual Town Meeting voters approved appropriating $600,000 toward that purchase, with the interest and principal payments coming out of the Community Preservation Fund Open Space Account, with the caveat the balance of the money had to be raised by March 2003 or the town would pull out of the deal.

At the time Morrissey said the effort was fruitless because she had no intention of ever selling her land to the town. She told Town Meeting that the town has held up her efforts to develop her property for 10 years resulting in two lawsuits.

Morrissey said this week the town should be happy with the proposal.

"This is what all the boards have been asking for," she said about the need for affordable housing and senior housing in town. She explained the development would be near Cohasset's downtown area and the Plymouth-Brockton bus. Morrissey said all the units would be two bedroom and have 1-1/2 baths, and range in size from 1400-1700 square feet.

Morrissey said the land is "all buildable." There are three ways into the property and the engineering is complete on a septic system, she said.

"The fact nothing has been built there has nothing to do with the land, which has been subdivided for many years according to the local bylaws."

But Morrissey didn't want to focus on the past.

"Let's focus on what we have before the board," she said.

Great Neck LLC has applied to the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency (MassHousing) for project eligibility under the Housing Starts program. MassHousing is soliciting comments from the town on the proposal by Dec. 16. Then the agency will issue a decision as to the acceptability of the site and consistency of the development with the guidelines of the Housing Starts program, which is designed to spur the development of affordable homeownership, as opposed to rental housing.

"Any developer who wants to build affordable housing under 40B needs a site approval letter from a subsidizing agency of which MassHousing is one," explains Eric Gedstad, public information officer with MassHousing. "If they get that, it's the ticket for admission to the Zoning Board of Appeals, which grants comprehensive permits."

Towns with less than the state threshold of 10 percent affordable housing are vulnerable to comprehensive permits, through which a developer can skirt most zoning laws in exchange for providing 20-25 percent of the project as affordable housing.

Two previous 40B projects in the late 1980s — the 60-unit Crystal Woods that straddled the Cohasset-Scituate line near Ledgewood Drive, and Deck Point, 119 King St., with 128 condos — were approved with conditions, but were never built. The real estate market took a nose dive in the late 80s, although it's not clear if that was a contributing factor.

Wishing a good friend, good luck as he starts retirement

Maintenance worker retires after 17 years

"He's a good friend of the residents and a good friend to everyone down here."
— Police Chief Robert Jackson

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It may be hard to surprise a maintenance man, who also doubles as a groundskeeper. After all, things such as plumbing can break and weeds can pop up at any time, especially in a 76-unit housing complex.

But Vinny Mascioli was genuinely surprised and touched Monday morning when members of the Cohasset police and fire departments presented him with a cake honoring his retirement. And no one seemed to mind all that sugar and frosting at a little past 8 in the morning.

Mascioli has worked at the Harborview complex (66 Elm St.) run by the Cohasset Housing Authority behind the police and fire stations for the past 17 years. He's been an invaluable help to the town's public safety officials when there a problem arises in the apartments that house predominantly the elderly, and also include some units for the disabled and people with special needs.

The former Hull call firefighter and Hull intermittent police officer felt right at home in the room full of police officers and firefighters, who presented him with a fishing rod as a retirement gift.

"You know this is what I plan on doing," Mascioli said after he opened the package.

Mascioli said he had planned to stay on for 20 years but opted for early retirement when the town made the program available.

He described the people at 66 Elm St. as "family."

"I've made so many friends there," he said, adding there's a pizza party planned there on Friday, his last day.

Police Chief Robert Jackson said Mascioli will be missed.

"He's a good friend of the residents and a good friend to everyone down here," he said.

Cohasset Housing Authority Director Marilyn LeBlanc said Masioli will be truly missed by the residents, many of whom have no family.

"I've been fortunate to forge a partnership with him and we function as a team," LeBlanc said, who described his duties as repairing and maintaining all the physical property, snow removal, landscaping and "creating good will."

A Cohasset resident, Jill Rosano, will fill the position, LeBlanc said.

Voters nix sidewalk funds

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The town will be forced to stretch the $178,000 allocated last year for new sidewalks on Forest Avenue, after a request for an additional $250,000 to completely fund the project failed to pass muster at Monday's Special Town Meeting

Initially the town expected to be able to pay for the project with last year's funding, but bids came back at nearly double that figure, forcing them to reconsider what to do.

"It is important for people to know that the vote did not kill sidewalks on Forest Avenue," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "We still have $178,000 to spend, so we are going to have to get creative to see what we can accomplish."

Haddad has already scheduled a meeting with Carl Sesito, head of the Department of Public Works to attempt to work out a town-based plan.

"We are already working on the issue," said Haddad. "I will be meeting with Carl and the County Engineers to develop a new plan and bring that back to the selectmen."

Selectman Merle Brown was opposed to the extra money.

"We have $178,000 that are already allotted for Forest Avenue," said Brown. "After the bids came in for $250,000 more than that, I didn't want to do it. We need to re-look at the sidewalks with granite curbs as well as looking into whether the DPW can do the project."

The article was defeated, despite the presence of many residents of Forest Avenue who cited severe safety concerns.

Brown agrees, but notes that there are streets all over town that need sidewalks, something that may not be possible in the current fiscal climate.

"I think we have too many things already on our plate to go out for another $250,000," said Brown.

Cohasset resident nominated for judgeship

Michael J. Coyne

"The governor could not have made a better choice."
— Attorney Gregory Sullivan

Acting Governor, Jane M. Swift, has nominated Michael J. Coyne, an attorney currently practicing with the law firm of Malloy & Sullivan, Lawyers Professional Corporation, of Hingham, to become an Associate Justice of the Boston Municipal Court.

The opening was created by the retirement of Chief Justice William J. Tierney. Attorney Coyne's nomination will be placed before the Governor's Council for confirmation in early December.

After graduating from Suffolk University Law School in 1976, Coyne worked as an Assistant Attorney General for the Commonwealth and as an Assistant District Attorney for Norfolk County. From 1979 through 1998, he was a partner with the Boston firm of Coyne, Hodapp and Linnehan. Attorney Coyne has been a principal with the law firm of Malloy & Sullivan since 1999. He resides in Cohasset with his wife and two daughters.

"The governor could not have made a better choice," said Coyne's associate Attorney Gregory Sullivan. "He possesses all the qualities of a great judge: honesty, fairness and intelligence.

"The bench's gain is our loss – he will be greatly missed at Malloy & Sullivan."

Early deadline: Due to the Thanksgiving holiday, the Cohasset Mariner will go to press a day early next week. Therefore, the deadline for editorial copy for the Nov. 28 issue is noon on Monday, Nov. 25.

What's new in non-fiction

"The Child that Books Built" by Francis Spufford

Just how important is reading in the li of a child? Francis Spufford reflects on the impact books have had on his own life and how, as a boy, fiction fed his imagination and love of language and helped create the person he is today.

"And Words Can Hurt Forever" by James Garbarino, Ph.D. & Ellen deLara, Ph.D.

Bullying and school safety are issues of increasing concern to parents today. In this book, the authors share their research into the thinking of adolescents and offer strategies children can use to keep themselves safe during the school day.

"A Life's Work" by Rachel Cusk"

Subtitled "On Becoming a Mother," this account of motherhood by novelist Rachel Cusk is a book every woman will identify with. Cusk captures the complexities and contradictions of modern motherhood from the mundane and hilarious to the most profound.

"Lord Minimus" by Nick Page

Jeffrey Hudson was just seven years old and 18 inches tall when he popped out of a pie set before King Charles I's new bride and asked the Queen to be taken into her service. "The smallest man in England" hobnobbed with royalty and pirates but, in the end, lost everything because he refused to accept his physical limitations.

"Stormchasers" by David Toomey

In September, 1955, a crew of eight led by Cdr. Grover B. Windham flew into the eye of Hurricane Janet on a routine weather reconnaissance mission and never returned. Toomey reconstructs that ill-fated mission and details the dangers these early stormchasers; faced operating without computers and relying only on rudimentary radar systems to direct them to the eye of a storm.

Buttonwood Books hosts Book Angel program

In the spirit of holiday sharing, Buttonwood Books & Toys and Buttonwood For Kids invite all to participate in a Book Angel Program. The Book Angel program will run through Sunday, Dec. 15

This program is designed to help put books into the hands of children who might not otherwise receive them. The Book Angel takes an angel from the tree in the store and purchases a book for that child according to the interest of the child indicated on the angel.

Buttonwood will give a discount of 15 percent on the book and deliver the book to the selected group. Books selected at Buttonwood in Cohasset will go to children served by Wellspring in Hull, the Friends of the Homeless in Weymouth and the Blue Hills Healthy Families Program. Books purchased at Buttonwood For Kids in Hingham will be gifts for children served by the Hingham Interfaith Food Pantry, the Mary-Martha Learning Center and also Wellspring in Hull. This is the ninth year Buttonwood has sponsored the Book Angel program. About 300 books were donated last year!

Book Angels can be a wonderful way for children to understand the deeper meaning of the holidays. For more information please call Buttonwood Books & Toys at 781-383-2665 or Buttonwood For Kids at 781-749-2665.

Pilgrim Co-operative conducts canned food drive

Pilgrim Co-operative Bank will be holding a canned food drive to benefit both the Cohasset and Scituate Food Pantries. The pantries would greatly benefit by donations of the following items: tuna, corned beef hash, beef stew, instant oatmeal, snacks, condiments, canned fruit, Lipton side dishes, instant potatoes, coffee, tea, hot chocolate, and personal care items, such as shampoo, soap, toothpaste and dish soap. Donations can be dropped off at either Pilgrim location. The bank extends warm holiday greetings, and wishes to thank you in advance for remembering those who are less fortunate.

Stingrays a perfect 10

Scituate-Cohasset Youth Football team wins Super Bowl.

By Mike Spellman
mspellman@cnc.com

The Stingrays finished their undefeated season with a Super Bowl win over Hingham, 14-6, on their home field at Scituate High a week ago Saturday, capping off their perfect 10-0 season in fine fashion.

The Super Bowl tilt under the lights at Scituate High was a defensive battle. The difference on this day was Kenton Toney. The halfback carried the Stingrays to victory, scoring both touchdowns for his team.

Having played Hingham earlier in the season, coach Craig Diaz saw great improvement from this team and noted of his players: "they really came to play for the Super Bowl."

Hingham delivered an early wake up call, scoring first in the game.

"This really got our team fired up, especially our captains who had carried us through out the season," said Coach Dias. "Kenton Toney, along with Morgan Billings, kept pounding the ball until finally breaking through with Toney's first touchdown on the mighty Hingham defense.

The game remained tied until late in the fourth quarter, with both teams playing excellent defense.

The hard work in the trenches of Matty Stewart, John Maher, Craig Dias and Morgan Billings gradually wore down the Hingham defense, and that appeared to play a part in Toney being able to break free yet again late in the fourth quarter to seal the Super Bowl win.

"Our offensive lineman need to share the credit along with the running backs for the outstanding job that was done," continued coach Dias. "Also, our Red Team defense that hadn't given up a touchdown throughout the regular season needs to be recognized — players like Dan Sullivan, Mike Spinola, Nick Spinzola, Kevin Barbry, Ryan McCourt, Brendon Perkins along with the rest of the players."

Craig Dias was assisted on the sidelines by coaches Mike Stewart, Mike Maher, Mike Britton and George Taylor.

Coach Dias also expressed his gratitude to Joe Obert, the Director of Scituate Cohasset Youth Football, for giving him the opportunity to coach the

Skippers clip Norwell in thriller

Last second heroics lift Cohasset gridders, 16-13

Special to the Mariner

For many on the outside looking in, Friday night's gridiron showdown between Norwell and Cohasset no doubt seemed anticlimactic, given the events of the previous few weeks.

Three weeks ago, the South Shore League title chase was a three horse race — with Abington, Norwell and Cohasset all remaining unbeaten in league play — but Abington topped each of these rivals on back-to-back Friday nights to clinch its first league title since 1981.

So pride and second place in the SSL was all that rode on the outcome of this past Friday night's tilt under the lights at Cohasset's Alumni Stadium. Fortunately, this proved more than enough motivation for both teams to give the fans their money's worth.

"This was a good high school football team that featured two teams playing all out," declared veteran Norwell High coach Jim Sullivan. "Unfortunately, for us, Cohasset did a little better job taking advantage of their chances then we did."

The biggest of the chances came with just 39 seconds remaining, and Cohasset seniors Mike Snowdale and John Durkin delivered…literally. Quarterback Snowdale delivered a 5-yard touchdown pass to Durkin to sew up the thrilling 16-13 win, sending the packed Alumni Stadium into an uproar that was no doubt heard by a healthy portion of the population in tiny Cohasset.

With the win, Cohasset improved to 8-1 (3-1 in South Shore League play), while Norwell fell to 6-4 and finished up their SSL season at 3-2. The Skippers will host SSL rival Hull (5-4, 2-2 in league) on Thanksgiving, and Norwell will host Hanover, the 37th Turkey Day meeting between these two schools.

With less than three minutes to go in the game, Norwell held both the ball and a 13-10 lead, but the Cohasset defense forced the Clippers into a punting situation on their fourth drive of the second half. The attempt was mishandled and junior linebacker Tony Truglia recovered the ball on Norwell's 18 yard line.

"The Drive of 2002" started with a Braun Goodson 3-yard burst to the 15-yard line. An illegal procedure then moved the ball back to the 20-yard line and fullback Ted Straughn was thrown for a loss of 2 yards, bringing up a 3rd-and14 at the 22-yard line. A Snowdale pass attempt then went incomplete, setting the stage for the gutsy fourth-and-long call.

Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe called for a halfback option pass. Snowdale pitched right to halfback Braun Goodson — who setup behind the blocking of fullback Ted Straughn, left tackle Dan Tarpey, left guard Nick Arment, center Matt Casey, right guard Steve Davis and right tackle Cosimo Cambi. Snowdale then hit the

All-Scholastic field hockey team

Cohasset's Peraino and Dennis named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young women you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

In the end, though, we limited ourselves to a team of just 15, and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top 15 field hockey players in Marinerland for this honor.

Field General Lordan

Senior proved an exceptional leader for girls soccer team

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

As many Cohasset High sports fans witnessed over the past few months, the girls soccer team put together a season that qualified as more than memorable. They astounded the South Shore by racking up 10 wins en route to a playoff appearance after averaging just three victories per season the previous four.

In the 19 game schedule, however, the Lady Skippers managed a mere 35 goals, and 10 of those went into two blowouts over a hapless Holbrook team. So where did most of the team's success stem from? The defense, namely senior Julie Lordan.

"It was just really rewarding," noted Lordan, a co-captain of the squad. "All the other seasons, we worked so hard, but it was just out of our reach. This year, we communicated better. There wasn't one player who didn't want to make the tournament."

Lordan, one of four All-Stars on the team, was the only one to be named among the SSL's elite for two straight years. She competed in the All-Star game against the Patriot League (PL won 4-1).

With terrific speed, Lordan is both the field general as well as the leader on defense. With tremendous leg strength, she proved to be invaluable with her free kicks to start set plays. A rarity among defenders, she was among the team leaders in assists, most of them coming off re-sets.

Lordan was instrumental in jump-starting the team with scoring and blanket coverage of the opposition's top offensive player. The main difference between this year's team and those of the past was that this year the team found itself with early leads, as opposed to perpetually trying to dig out of one and two goal deficits.

A weakness of the Lady Skippers was their inability to play from behind. When Ashland scored a quick strike early in their preliminary round match-up of the tournament, the team looked noticeably deflated. But when the team had early leads, Lordan and the rest of the strong defense held remarkably tough.

"We buckled under the pressure sometimes," admitted the ever-modest Lordan, "but there's always pressure on the defense. I was more confident this year, mainly because I had Holly behind me."

Holly Graham, a junior sweeper, made the All-Star team for the first time this year, playing great help-defense and one-on-one coverage. Also, senior Catherine Coyne and junior Brenna O'Donnell were major contributors on the defensive line.

As for Lordan, her plans for

"Coaches Award" this year…finished second on the team in both goals (five) and assists (six)…two-time South Shore League All-Star…was instrumental on both ends of the field from her center-mid spot…quarterbacked the offensive attack…a member of the Year Book Staff and staff of the "Spinnaker" (C.H.S.'s fledgling newspaper)…also a standout basketball and softball player for the school…is considering attending UMass-Boston, Bridgewater State and Suffolk University, among others…plans to major in Nursing…would like to play field hockey in college…Cohasset field hockey coach Deb Bostwick: "We tried moving Heather to forward at one point to help the offense, but we found she was just so necessary in the middle of the field that we moved her back. She stabilized the whole team from the middle. She was a go to person on corners and she has a nose for the goal."

Sarah Dennis – Senior (Capt) Center fullback – Cohasset

Sarah Dennis

A very tough and durable defender who was arguably the central figure in the Lady Skippers low goals against average…was voted team Most Valuable Player…usually the team's center fullback, Sarah would often move to a wing fullback spot if an opponent was loaded up on that side…two year starter…South Shore League all-star…was also used as a rusher on corners…was also a gymnast for C.H.S. until badly straining her hamstring last year…may try track this spring…considering UNH, Keene State, Bryant and St. Michaels, among other colleges…undecided on a major, but is considerign Business Management… a avid snowboarder…would like to play college field hockey…Cohasset field hockey coach Deb Bostwick: "Sarah was our anchor on defense. Her speed and endurance were so huge for us. She took so many bumps and bruises, but she never wanted off the field. She helped the sweeper, the goalie, her other fullbacks. She was phenomenal at backing up her (defensive) teammates."

Cohasset's Sarah Dennis was voted team most Valuable Player for her outstanding work at the defensive end, and was a no-brainer for All-Scholastic honors.

Carolyn King - Senior (Capt.) Forward - Hanover

Carolyn King

A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic in field hockey, King capped yet another successful season for Hanover (12-6-2)…Finished as the team's best scorer and Patriot League's second-leading scorer with 25 points on 11 goals, 14 assists…A two-time Patriot League All-star, King's leadership, aggressiveness, and skills were among her greatest attributes this season, in which the Lady Indians tied EB for second in the PL (6-3-1) and reached the Div. 2 South Sectional quarterfinals…King is a three-sport athlete at HHS, also playing basketball and softball…She is a member of the National Honor Society and is ranked within the top 10 percent of her senior class. Hanover coach Judy Schneider: "She sees the whole field and passes well. She was the passer on our offensive corners and was a scoring threat. She knows where she has to be and has tremendous endurance. We're going to miss her."

Amy Martino - Senior (Capt.) Midfield - Hanover

Amy Martino

A two-time Patriot League All-star, Martino once again stood out both offensively and defensively for Hanover (12-6-2)…Martino was second on the team in scoring and fourth in the Patriot League with 20 points on 10 goals, 10 assists from her center midfield position…Was the team's No. 1 hitter on corners and was a top stroker on the Lady Indians squad…Her performance helped Hanover tie for second in the PL (6-3-1) and reach the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional…Martino is making her second appearance on the Mariner All-Scholastic field hockey team. Hanover coach Judy Schneider: "She's just so tough and really sparked the team. She's a great leader and has a tremendous work ethic. She has great stamina and distributes the ball well. She's also a great kid."

Keri Gerrish - Junior Midfield - Hanover

This speedy midfielder once again caused fits for opponents' defenses, using her quickness to continually set up the Hanover (12-6-2) offense…Gerrish is a two-time Patriot League All-star who racked up nine points on a goal and eight assists, despite primarily being the team's set-up person on offense…A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic in field hockey, Gerrish can play virtually anywhere she's put and whose versatility helped land the Lady Indians in the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South tourney and capture a tie for second with EB in the Patriot League standings (6-3-1)…Gerrish is a two-sport athlete at HHS, also competing in gymnastics in the winter and year round with …Gerrish will be among the top returning players to the Hanover squad next season. Hanover coach Judy Schneider: "She's one of those players who we practically never take out because she's such a key ingredient to what we do. She was a leader, despite not being a captain, and wasn't afraid to be one. Her skills are so impressive and her speed is essential."

Keri Gerrish

Nicole Downs - Junior Goalie - Hanover

While coach Judy Schneider knew Downs had talent, she never expected the season the junior had in her first varsity year for Hanover (12-6-2)…Downs proved to be the Patriot League's best goalie, allowing just nine goals in 16 games for an impressive 0.56 goals against average…Recorded 10 shutouts this season and did not allow more than two goals per game, fueling Hanover to a tie for second with East Bridgewater in the Patriot League standings (6-3-1)…Was the starting JV goalie last season and spent the summer at field hockey camps to prepare for her varsity season. Hanover coach Judy Schneider: "She was a great surprise. She always worked hard in practice and never got down in games. She positioned herself well and always cleared to the wing. She loves the game."

Kristin Mulligan - Senior (Capt.) Midfield - Hingham

This hard-hitting and tremendously tall midfielder is one of the best defensive middies around, consistently shutting down some of the areas best offensive weapons…This was demonstrated most in a 2-1 win over Hanover and a tough 1-0 loss to PL champs Duxbury…A two-time Patriot League All-star, Mulligan is one of those players who doesn't show up in the stats, but is essential to a team's formula…Her hard, flat hits always gave the Hingham (8-9-2) offense opportunities and her undeniable presence fueled several Harborwomen victories and landed the team in the Div. 2 South Sectional…This is Mulligan's first appearance on the Mariner All-Scholastic field hockey team. Hingham coach Meredith Gordon: "She doesn't have a lot of stats, but she gave the forwards opportunities. She rarely gets beat, is a great stick handler, and distributes the ball very well. She's clearly a Div. 1 (college) player."

Jacqui Crowley - Senior Midfield - Hingham

In a breakout season for the Harborwomen, Crowley's hard work in the defensive midfield proved invaluable for Hingham, particularly when it counted…A first-year Patriot League All-star, Crowley had the ability to shut an opposing team's offense down with her slick stick skills and always relaxed style of play…Was an unselfish player, distributing the ball effectively and often…Her performance this season helped land Hingham (8-9-2) in the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney…Crowley is making her first appearance on the Mariner All-Scholastic field hockey team. Hingham coach Meredith Gordon: "Jacqui was every bit as effective as Kristin (Mulligan). She was probably our most consistent performer. She always demonstrated grace and poise under pressure."

Ashley Hubbard - Junior Forward - Marshfield

Ashley Hubbard

Undeniable speed made this junior forward a force to be reckoned with on Marshfield's frontline…Finished the year as the team's leading scorer with 14 points on 11 goals, 3 assists…Was the Lady Rams' go-to girl inside the circle, but her ability to carry the ball down the wing is among her greatest attributes for Marshfield (6-9-3)…Hubbard keyed many big victories including wins over field hockey powerhouses Hanover (1-0) and Hingham (4-2)…Hubbard is a three-sport athlete at MHS, running indoor and outdoor track, and established herself as one of the state's best 200-meter runners last season. Marshfield coach Carol Anderson: "She was fluidity in motion. She made the most of her speed but didn't waste it either. It's like she was there and then gone. She definitely grew as the season went on."

Meghan Duffy - Senior (Capt.) Midfield - Marshfield

Meghan Duffy

Was a forward the first three years of her field hockey career before making the switch to center midfield this season and she did for the better of the team, according to coach Carol Anderson…An Old Colony League All-Scholastic, Duffy's unselfish play and tremendous skills helped the Lady Rams (6-9-3) knock off powerhouses like Hanover (1-0) and Hingham (4-2)…Duffy is three sport athlete at MHS, playing basketball and tennis, and will captain all three teams this year. Marshfield coach Carol Anderson: "Meghan is the epitome of the consummate team player, which one of the best things I think you can say about a player. She used her talents for the better of the team and at no time was she ever out there for herself."

Cohasset's Deanna Brown earned an all-scholastic selection with her strong play at the offensive end.

Lindsay Souza - Senior (Capt) Fullback — Braintree

Lindsay Souza

Lindsay was the backbone of a defense that received only three goals of offensive support all year, providing her and her unit an extremely small margin of error…was involved in all of defensive corners and took all of the offensive corners… an excellent distributor with very god speed…named to the Bay State League All-Star first team…a three year varsity player…also a sensational softball player who hit .400 this past season and played shortstop for B.H.S….an Honor Roll student…member of the Spanish National Honor Society...was chosen to travel to Spain this spring with high school group…looking at Rhode Island College and University of Vermont…plans to major in Psychology…plans to play softball at the college level and may try field hockey as well…Braintree coach Christine Day: "Lindsay was our backbone, no doubt about that. She has such solid skills and excellent stick work. She stopped the ball and opponents with ease and confidence, and she distributed the ball extremely well. She'll be missed a lot next year."

Kathryn Noonan – Senior Center halfback – Scituate

Kathryn Noonan

Quarterbacked the Lady Sailors offense, helping to lead the program to one of its best seasons in years… had 11 assists for a team that did not score much…had two goals called back because of violations…Patriot League all-star…a very unselfish, team oriented player…also a standout for the S.H.S. lacrosse team and a four year member of the Scituate High-Cohasset High swim team…has been named a swim team captain for this year… a member of the S.H.S. debate club…has a GPA over 4.0 and is in all Advanced Placement and Honors classes...a member of the National Honors Society…has applied to a number of colleges, including MIT, Brown, BU and BC…plans to major in chemistry…may try to play field hockey in college, depending on where she winds up…also an avid sailor who has competed in several prominent regattas in recent years…Scituate field hockey coach Marcia McKeever: "Kathryn was never scared on the field. She made our offense go. She contributed a lot to the good things we were able to do this year. She'll certainly won't be easy to replace."

Renee Schneider – Senior (Capt) Midfield – Silver Lake

Renee Schneider

The team Most Valuable Player was instrumental for the Lady Lakers (13-2-3) at both ends of the field, but was a true force at the defensive end…was the team's field general…finished with one goal and three assists…Old Colony League all-star… a three-year varsity team member…plays field hockey pretty close to year round, moving indoors to the Plymouth Sports Dome in the winter and spring…has a 3.95 Grade Point Average this year to date…plans to major in Management and play field hockey at Becker College in Leister, MA, a school that has a strong Div. 3 program that has won its league title three years running… Silver Lake field hockey coach Marlene Lopes: "Renee controlled the middle of the field for us. She determined the flow of the game. Her defensive instincts are incredible and she has great tackling and dodging skills."

8th grade squad is TopGun

Cohasset Middle School lax squad off to 10-0 start

Special to the Mariner

Cohasset's eighth grade Middle School TopGun Lacrosse Team has been tearing up it's opponents in the South Shore TopGun Silver Division since early Fall. The team captured the first session championship a few weeks ago and is 3 and 0 in the second session. These players are skilled and confident. They have won three championship sessions thus far dating back to last year and also the "TopGun Championship of Champions "last February where they competed against all of the championship teams in TopGun's four leagues.

The capabitlity of this group of kids is the result of a lot of hard work and dedication. They have been playing together as a unit for four years and they play year round. In the Spring they play in Cohasset's Youth Program as well as the Middle School Team. During the Summer most of them travel to Vermont together and go to TopGun's Lacrosse Camp for an intensive week of training and games. When the Fall and Winter arrive they spend their weekend's playing Lax. They do this as well as participate in other athletic programs such as football, soccer. wrestling, etc. They are a unique and special bunch and all of them are Players who put points on the board.

The defense includes Jeff Brown who not only stops the other teams offensive stars but gets the ball in the net himself. He is a two way threat. Jared Dick is a defensive specialist and back-up goalie when the going gets rough and always plays hard. Patrick Flynn plays physical and can score as well ; as demonstrated by a five goal game this session. Bobby Meikleham is very fast with good stick skills which gives the team an excellent fast break ability. Robert Silvia rounds out a very experienced defensive unit and ranks near the top of the team with getting ground balls and keeping Cohasset on offense.

On offense the team is also loaded with talent. Parker Berg is a very athletic and talented big play maker with a nose for the ball and lightning speed. Mike Bunstein knows how to find the net and balances his goals with an equal number of assists making him a double threat. Corey Chase can always be found near the ball and gets his share of scores. Ryan Donovan is a steady and gutsy kid who also gets his tallies each game. Jared Kinch has been a sparkplug for the team scoring not only when he plays offense but also on long runs down the court when he is in the cage and makes a save. Ryan Kucinski is a fast and hard .nosed offensive player who dominates face-offs, fights for ground balls, and scores a lot of points. Adam Smith plays hard and steady and can get the ball in the goal as well. He also had a 75% save percentage when in the cage for a game. And finally there is Dan Trendowicz who led all teams in points last session and is number one again this session. Dan plays with his total heart. Trendowicz, Bunstein, Kucinski, Brown, Kinch, and Flynn are all on the league's top ten scoring leaders list.

With three games remaining in the second TopGun indoor session, Cohasset remains the team to beat.

"Having never been a head coach before I did have a vision of what a team should be made up of," said Dias. "Things that were important to me were to be fair and have fun, while also being competitive.

"Even though I was somewhat new to coaching and never have played the game, I have been around football all my life. I was fortunate to have Coach Mike Stewart this year as my assistant and I could never thank him enough for the job that he did this year with our team."

Tara Hostnick

A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic selection and two time Old Colony League all-star... a three year varsity team member who emerged as an offensive force the last two seasons...a very strong player with excellent stick skills...also a member of the Silver Lake tennis team who has started as a singles player since her freshman year, playing number one singles last year...will run indoor track this winter for the first time, and specialize in distance running as well as throwing events...also enjoys theater...is looking at St. Michaels, Providence, UConn and Deerfield Prep...leaning towards majoring in Marine Biology...hopes to play field hockey in college, and has already spoken with a few coaches...Silver Lake field hockey coach Marlene Lopes: "Tara could go around players on the other team or through them. She's very strong and has great hand-eye coordination. I've been extremely happy with her work ethic."

Kristen Conboy – Senior (Capt) Halfback — Silver Lake

Kristen Conboy

An Old Colony League all-star and three-year varsity regular...a force in the middle of the field...was an Old Colony League All-Star Honorable Mention last year...has also run track at Silver Lake and has been a member of the school golf team the last few years, playing in the number two position last spring...plans to major in Education in College, and would like to continue playing field hockey at the next level...is presently looking at Keene State, Bridgewater State, Westfield State and Fitchburg State...Silver Lake field hockey coach Marlene Lopes: "Kristen was definitely a big thorn in the side of the other team. She helped control the middle of the field too, along with Renee (Schneider), and she really got our offense going."

Skippers clip Norwell in thriller

gas on a downfield course, and Goodson escaped the Norwell pressure to drill it in to him at the 10-yard line. The Cohasset QB went the last five yards on his own, putting the Clippers in business first-and-goal at the 5-yard line.

"I've got to give those two Cohasset kids full credit," offered Norwell head coach Jim Sullivan. "We put a lot of pressure on Goodson, and (Norwell's Dan) Dooloy was right on top of him when he threw it. He made a good pass, and Snowdale made a beautiful catch. It was one of those plays you look at and say 'what else can you do'."

The Snowdale- to-Durkin gamewinner came on the next play from scrimmage.

Cohasset was held to just 34 yards net rushing and 64 yards passing for the game by a strong Clippers defense. However, three visits inside the 20-yard line resulted in three scores for the Skippers.

"They took advantage of their chances better than we did ours," continued Sullivan, a one-time assistant football coach at Cohasset High. " We had opportunities too, and moved the ball pretty well, but we just couldn't come up with the big plays when they were needed. Again, though, Cohasset deserves some of the credit for that."

Tom Anderson opened up the scoring with his first field goal of the season from 25 yards out, to give Cohasset a 3-0 lead early in the second quarter. This capped of a 15-play drive that included key first down receptions by D.J. Silvia (from his knees) and Tom Anderson – the latter hookup placing the ball at Norwell's 12-yard line.

Cohasset's Mike Dooley (#24) drags down Norwell's Frank Granara (#33) from behind in Friday night's thrilling 16-13 win for the Skippers.

The Skippers defense forced the Clippers to punt on each of their first two series. The second punt set Cohasset up at their own 35 yard line. On second down, Norwell defensive back Terence Bohan picked off a tipped pass, beginning a whacky final two minutes of the first half.

Two plays later, Norwell's junior running back Frank Granara rumbled around the left side for a 37-yard touchdown run. The kick attempt failed, leaving Norwell with a 6-3 lead just 1:41 before the break.

On the ensuing kickoff, Durkin returned the ball 79 yards to Norwell's 5-yard line (John had 102 yards in kickoff returns for the night), finally being dragged down by Norwell junior Andrew Farinick.

On the first down play, Goodson scored his 16th touchdown of the season, a 5-yard rush behind the blocking of center Matt Casey, right guard Steve Davis, and right tackle Cosimo Cambi. Anderson added the extra point and Cohasset held a 10-6 lead with 1:23 left on the clock.

The scoring wasn't done yet, as the Clippers marched quickly from their 27-yard line to the Skippers' 28. Norwell junior QB John Mohan then hit Granara with a touchdown pass with just five seconds showing on the clock. With the extra point boot from Adam Nogueira splitting the uprights, Norwell held a 13-10 lead at the break.

The name of the game in the second half was defense. Cohasset's offense was forced to punt on each of its first three series of the second half, going 3-and-out, 3-and-out, and 4-and-out – this the result of superb defensive play by the Clippers.

Not to be outdone, the Skippers defense would bend a little, but refused to break, as they proceeded to stop the Clippers at Cohasset's 3-yard line, 35-yard line, and 29-yard line on their first three series of the second half. The Skippers were led on D by linebacker Cosimo Cambi (a team leading nine tackles), fellow backers Matt Casey and Tony Truglia, a backfield of Durkin, Dooley, Anderson, and Matt Davis (who collectively accounted for 20 tackles), along with the front line of Ben Lynner, Nick Spirito, Sean Connolly, and Steve Davis, (who had the lone quarterback sack of the night, cleaning up for Lynner on the play).

The Clippers final desperation push started at their own 47-yard line thanks to a fine 36-yard kick return by senior Brendan Feldstein. On their first play from scrimmage, an illegal forward pass moved the Clippers back five yards. Anderson and Durkin then broke up a pass attempt over the middle on first-and-15. On second down, with nine seconds left in the game, junior Mike Dooley intercepted Norwell's last pass attempt of the game on Cohasset's 35 yard line. Snowdale then took a knee, and the Skippers had pulled off their most dramatic win of the season.

next year do not seem to include soccer.

"I just want to focus my freshman year on schoolwork," she notes. She plans on studying nursing, having long been interested in the medical field. Her top choice for a college is Northeastern, but she also has her eye on the University of Connecticut and University of Rhode Island.

While Lordan may not land herself a spot on a varsity team at college, she did admit that soccer will assuredly be a part of her post-high school experiences, be it club or intramural. For now, however, Lordan is just enjoying the success she had this year, because it will not be long before the spring season, when she will try to perform a similar feat to the one she accomplished this fall: getting the girls lacrosse team back into the postseason.

Putting Cohasset town history in perspective for schoolchildren

Maps, timeline used in schools

Cohasset schools are expanding the local history curriculum in collaboration with the Committee on Town History that produced the Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III (J. Dormitzer). Expansion is in the form of maps of Cohasset, tours of the Town and a comprehensive timeline for students.

Proceeds from the sales of the history book are being used to fund the education expansion that will improve the knowledge and appreciation of Cohasset among first, third, and eighth graders.

The collaboration is being led by Louis S. Harvey of the Town History Committee and Ruth Fennessey, Curriculum Coordinator for Cohasset schools, with support from a number of teachers and committee members.

The first initiative was to transform the historical map from the history book into forms that teachers and students can use. Students in a variety of grades are now using these maps to learn about landmarks and the changes in streets and roads since the 1950s. Maps include giant laminated wall mounted copies and electronic images that can be printed for students for years to come.

Students of the first grade got a first hand guided tour of Government Island, Cohasset Common and Sandy Beach shortly after schools opened for the fall.

Still in the works, is a timeline that presents the history of Cohasset in each decade since the mid 1800s. The timeline juxtaposes the world history of each decade with Cohasset's historical events. The timeline is intended to offer an interesting comparison that will capture the imagination of students and reinforce their knowledge of history.

Osgood School first-graders and their teachers (Laura Keating, Sabina Troy and Jared Alves) visit Cohasset Harbor on a tour with the Committee on Town History.

IT'S HAPPENING

Our World groundbreaking

A groundbreaking celebration this Sunday, Nov. 24, will signal the beginning of renovation of the back wing of the former Osgood School into "Our World," the children's global discovery museum.

The former elementary school will soon be the home of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The museum will occupy a two-story wing built in 1929.

The $1 million project, the brainchild of Leah Taylor Roy and Mary Larson, will include a global-themed playpark and will likely open shortly after the library is complete.

The museum wing has been cleared and is ready to be wired, plumbed and filled with both permanent and changing exhibits aimed at helping children learn about the world in all its wonderful diversity.

The public is invited to the ceremony, which will take place at noon Sunday. Children are especially welcome and will receive free hardhats and globes.

Cider, cookies, hot chocolate and coffee will be served. Our World T-shirts will be on sale, as will personalized tiles and bricks that will eventually decorate the museum and grounds.

The museum is located at 100 Sohier St., near the intersection of Ripley Road.

Participants are also invited to a 1 p.m. lunch at Atlantica after the ceremony. The lunch will cost $15 for adults; $10 for children. Reservations are required at 781-383-0900.

Our World luncheon and fashion show

There will be a holiday luncheon and fashion show to benefit "Our World," the children's global discovery museum, at 11:30 a.m. Dec. 12 at Atlantica Restaurant.

The museum is set to open next fall in the back wing of the former Osgood School. The new Paul Pratt Memorial Library will occupy the rest of the building.

Fashions by Talbot's will be featured at the luncheon and a number of exciting prizes, including a night at Boston's Ritz Carlton and a gift certificate for tea for two at the Ritz Carlton, will be raffled.

Tickets for the event are $45 per person and tickets for the grand raffle can be ordered at $25 each or six for $100. Winners do not have to be in attendance. Checks made out to Our World CGDM can be sent to Our World, P.O. Box 422, Cohasset, 0225. For further information, call Amy Fitzpatrick at 781-383-9911.

Evening flu clinic

The Cohasset Board of Health will offer free flu immunizations on Tuesday, Nov. 26 from 7 – 9 p.m. at the Public Health Nurse's office at Town Hall.

Anyone 65 years or older is urged to be immunized and is asked to bring their Medicare Insurance Card. Vaccine is available for Cohasset residents and is especially recommended for those 50 years and older and those of all ages considered high risk with chronic medical conditions such as Asthma, and other lung disease, diabetes heart and kidney disease, anemia and other blood disorders and anyone with a weakened immune system.

No Appointment is necessary. If you have any questions please call Judy Fitzsimmons, RN, PHN at 383-2210.

Please wear a short sleeve shirt.

Legends of nine Christmas herbs

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its monthly meeting at the Second Congregational Church Bates Hall Tuesday, Nov. 26 at 9 a.m..

Betsy Williams, author of several books on the lore and use of herbs, will share with the members the legends of nine Christmas herbs. In addition, through story and demonstration, she will give the history of traditional Christmas greens. Betsy◊s work has been featured on the Discovery Channel.

All who attend will have a very interesting and informative morning.

Jingle Bell Walk is Friday, Nov. 29

The South Shore Community Center (SSCC) invites family and friends to join in the holiday spirit at the Jingle Bell Walk, a Cohasset tradition offered by the SSCC. The walk begins at 2 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 29 when Santa Claus arrives by boat with his elves at Cohasset Harbor (Border Street). After Santa distributes jingle bells to the children, he and his elves will board a hayride and the walk continues along the sidewalks of Elm to Main Streets in Cohasset. At 2:30 p.m., the South Shore Community Center welcomes you to partake in cookies, a beverage, and a holiday sing-along. Holiday music and carols will also be sung by all.

Santa will be upstairs in the center to pose for pictures with you and your children. Please stroll through the village to share in the local shops' holiday ambience.

At 3 p.m. on Cohasset Common, there will be a "Turkey Tot Trot" for kids ages three-to-10. You may pre-register for this event for $2, or register the day of the event for $3 per participant. Proceeds will benefit the Nursery School. All participants will receive a prize!

Listen to the bells of St. Stephen's playing from 2:30-4 p.m. while enjoying a hayride around the Common. Hayrides will be available from 3-4 p.m. Then gather around Cohasset Common at 3:45, to listen to the Rusty Skippers Marching Band. The festivities culminate on Cohasset Common at 4:15 p.m. with the lighting of the tree.

There is something for everyone this year at the Jingle Bell Walk! It's a great way to appreciate our picturesque surroundings while involving the whole family in a Cohasset tradition.

In the event of rain, all outdoor activities will be cancelled but Santa will arrive in the Community Center Gym at 2 p.m.

T-Day breakfast at Legion Hall

The Sons of the American Legion are hosting an all-you-can-eat breakfast from 7:30-9:30 a.m. on Thanksgiving Day at the Legion Hall on Summer Street. The cost is $5 and the event is open to everyone.

Order your tree early!

First Parish's eighth annual, fresh-cut balsam Christmas tree sale in conjunction with the Village Fair is Saturday Dec. 7. Pre-orders are being accepted. Order early to be in the "your tree free" drawing. All tress are $35 for any tree 5-9 feet. Besides being a fund-raiser for the First Parish, trees are donated to various families served by the Cohasset Food Pantry, Wellspring, Friends of the Homeless, and others as including the Senior Center at the Community Center, allowing for many to benefit. Call 781-383-9845.

Holiday Ball

This is an off year for the Community Garden Club◊s very popular Holiday House Tour and the first year for their Holiday Ball. A limited number of tickets are now being offered for sale to the general public.

The Holly Ball will be at "Stoneleigh", 478 Jerusalem Road on Saturday, Dec. 7 from 7-11 p.m.. Stoneleigh will be decorated for the holidays by garden club members. Included in the decorations will be many club-member designed holiday wreaths available for purchase by means of a silent auction.

Guests will enjoy a buffet supper served throughout the evening. They will be entertained by a five-piece band playing music suitable for dancing. Suggested dress is optional black tie.

The cost of admission is $75 per person. (Cash bar).

This is a fund-raising event to benefit club projects. The club maintains the gardens at three locations in Cohasset — the Lothrop House, the Lightkeeper's Residence, and Constitution Park. The club also supports local beautification projects, provides scholarships for three deserving Cohasset High seniors, and contributes to many environmental organizations.

For more information phone 781-383-9689. Make checks payable to the "Community Garden Club of Cohasset" and mail them to One Windy Hill Road, Cohasset

Festival of trees

Friends of the Paragon Carousel Inc., 205 Nantasket Ave., Hull, presents the First Annual Festival of Trees at the Carousel. The gala grand opening will be Friday, Nov. 29, from 6 to 9 p.m. Tickets: Child $2/Adults $10. Tree lighting entertainment, refreshments.

The event runs Nov. 30, Dec. 1, 6, 7, 8, 13, 14, and 15. Hours: Friday, 4 to 8 p.m. Saturday, 4 to 8 p.m. and Sunday, 3:30 to 6:30 p.m.

Bird watching at Straits Pond

By Nancy Kramer
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The total now is 75 species sighted on 10 SPWA-sponsored bird walks.

The annual November Straits Pond Watershed Association sponsored Bird Walk, led by Cohasset birder, Sally Avery and husband, Richard, sighted six new birds to add to our three-year birding list total.

In Straits Pond and area, Black Rock and Gunrock Beach and Ocean areas we recently sighted 40 species in two hours: Common Loon; Horned Grebe; Double-crested Cormorant; Great Cormorant; Great Blue Heron; Canada Goose; Mute Swan; American Black Duck; Mallard; Lesser Scaup; Common Eider; Surf Scoter; White-winged Scoter; Black Scoter; Bufflehead; Hooded Merganzer; Red-breasted Merganzer; Ruddy Duck; Greater Yellowlegs; Sanderling; Purple Sandpiper; Bonaparte's Gull; Ring-billed Gull; Herring Gull; Great Black-backed Gull; Mourning Dove; Downy Woodpecker; American Crow; Black-capped Chickadee; Tufted Titmouse; Carolina Wren; European Starling; Yellow Rumped Warbler; American Tree Sparrow; Song Sparrow; Northern Cardinal; Brown-headed Cowbird; House Finch; American Goldfinch; House Sparrow.

Six more birds species were add to the 69 species on our master list (see www.weirriver.org http://www.weirriver.org): Common Loon; Horned Grebe; Lesser Scaup; Black Scoter; Purple Sandpiper; American Tree Sparrow.

The total now is 75 species sighted on 10, approximately two hours each, SPWA-sponsored bird walks June 2000 to November 2002. Watch for notices in the spring to join us in these free, educational walks.

Also, 25 more Tree Swallow houses, made this summer by Ohio resident, Pete Curtis, will be placed in Straits Pond on poles at the end of March by Hull resident, John Loupos. The annual migration of these birds back to Hull to take up residence for the spring and sSummer is anxiously awaited by residents in the area as these bird species are well known for munching midges, mosquitoes and other flying insects while in flight. The birdhouses are cleaned each Fall after the Swallows have left. The nests are made from the tops of the phragmites reeds and lined with white swan feathers.

To sponsor a Tree Swallow house, poles and hardware, donate $10 or more, by check made out to Straits Pond Watershed Association, C/O Merle Graham, 715-B Jerusalem Rd., Cohasset, MA 02025.

Early deadline: Due to the Thanksgiving holiday, the Cohasset Mariner will go to press a day early next week. Therefore, the deadline for editorial copy for the Nov. 28 issue is noon on Monday, Nov. 25.

HSO Welcomes Yule! with classical music

"We are very excited to enrich and enliven the holiday season throughout the South Shore with a concert that is brimming with energy and warm spirit."

— MaryBeth Alger, president of the HSO Board of Directors.

The Hingham Symphony Orchestra will perform its annual Welcome Yule! concert on Dec. 7 at 7:30 p.m. at the Old Ship Church in Hingham, and on Dec. 8 at 4 p.m. at St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset.

Under the direction of Conductor Jin Kim, the HSO will perform Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 and Faure's Pelleas et Melisande Suite, along with Anderson's medley of carols, A Christmas Festival. In what has become a new tradition for many, the Yule concert will also present an opportunity for the audience to participate in a holiday sing-along.

"We are very excited to enrich and enliven the holiday season throughout the South Shore with a concert that is brimming with energy and warm spirit," said MaryBeth Alger, president of the HSO Board of Directors. "Jin's selection for this year should greatly please everyone in our audience and inspire them throughout the coming year."

Tickets for the Yule Concert are available at Hingham Public Library, Cards & Shards, Cohasset, Front Street Book Shop, Scituate, and Noble0s, Norwell, or call 781-740-5694. $20 adult, $18 senior, $10 through age 18.

Forrest C. Miner

Forrest C. Miner

Forrest C. Miner, of Rutland, Mass. and Punta Gorda, Fla., previously of Barrington, N.H. and Shrewsbury, Mass. died Wednesday, Nov. 6 at the Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home where he had been in residence for the past 16 months. He was born in 1922 in Sugar Hill, N.H.

He was a World War II veteran serving in the US Marine Corps. He was a graduate of Shrewsbury High School, the University of New Hampshire and earned a master's degree in education at Worcester State College.

For 31 years he taught social studies at Newmarket, N.H. and Wachusett Regional High School in Holden, Mass., the last 25 years at the latter. Over the years, he coached four sports but devoted most of his energies to the promotion of rowing for school age boys and girls, an interest that developed from his own participation as an oarsman on the Shrewsbury High School national championship crews of '40 and '41. He retired from teaching in 1981 but continued to coach crew at Clark University and Shrewsbury High School.

After moving to Punta Gorda, Fla. in 1986 he became interested in the wildlife rescue program and volunteered at the Peace River Wildlife Center.

He is survived by his wife of 55 years, Miriam Buecher Miner; two sons, Jeffrey F. Miner of Rutland, Mass. and David B. Miner of Boulder, Colo.; one daughter, Julie-Anne Miner White of Marshfield Hills; a sister, Marjorie Roberge of Taftville, Conn.; a brother, Paul Clifford of Brattleboro, Vt.; two daughters-in-law, Wendy (Seavey) Miner and Sarah (Martens) Miner, a son-in-law Bradford D. White, and four grandchildren, Justin and Brittany Miner of Rutland, Mass., Elizabeth Miner of New Orleans, La. and Allison Miner of Boulder, Colo.; numerous nieces and nephews.

A private family service was held Nov. 10 with a public memorial service to be held in Shrewsbury in the spring, the date and location to be announced.

In lieu of flowers donations may be made to the Shrewsbury High School Rowing Program, 45 Oak St., Shrewsbury, MA 01545, Att. Gordon Warren.

Sunrise Assisted Living offers residents and families round-the-clock care by dedicated staff in a caring, inviting environment.

All Assisted Living Is Not Created Equal

At Sunrise Assisted Living, our approach to senior care is different—and better. It's an unmatched living environment beautiful beyond compare. It's residents chatting with friends in the parlor with music playing in the background. It's joining a group outing or taking a quiet stroll on the walking paths on our grounds. More importantly, it's a caring place where help is always at hand. Here, residents enjoy supportive health care for the challenges of advanced age—and the promise of new friendships, too. It's a positive alternative to an institutional setting.

Return of Plymouth Parade is reason to give thanks

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

Thanksgiving and Plymouth.

You can't think of one word without evoking images of the other.

As they did nearly four centuries ago, pilgrims continue to journey to America's Hometown throughout the year but especially at Thanksgiving to enjoy an authentic holiday celebration. And Plymouth's annual Thanksgiving parade has traditionally been one of the biggest draws.

But last year the group that had organized the event since the mid 1990s pulled the plug for financial reasons, leaving a big void in the town's annual celebration.

"It was a huge disappointment," said Kingston Selectman Olavo DeMacedo, who had been involved with the parade a few years ago as a volunteer and board member. DeMacedo, who has strong ties to Plymouth (his brother Vincent is a state Representative) was approached in May and asked if he'd find a way to get the parade back on track.

DeMacedo turned to the Plymouth Rock Foundation for help running the event and the historical group agreed to get on board as long as the history of Thanksgiving and the Pilgrims at Plymouth were included as part of the program.

An American history buff himself, DeMacedo did more than that — he made the American history including its beginnings in Plymouth, the entire theme of this year's parade.

"We're calling it 'America Gives Thanks through the Years'," said DeMacedo, noting that floats in the parade will tell the story of America from the days of the Pilgrims straight through the 21st century.

The ambitious theme starts out with the story of the Native Americans who helped the Pilgrims survive the first difficult years in America and lived peacefully side by side with them for decades, DeMacedo notes.

"The Native Americans were a lifeline for the Pilgrims," he said.

Members of the Wampanoag Nation will be on the parade's first float — a first for any Native American group, he said. In fact, in the past, the Plymouth parade has drawn protests from Native Americans who consider the Thanksgiving holiday a day of mourning. Smoothing out past problems and clarifying historical fact from fiction, misunderstanding and misrepresentations about the relationship between the Pilgrims and the Native Americans was part of the reason DeMacedo said it was important the Indians were represented in the parade.

Melanie Estre and Lori Tate busily create a thatched roof for the parade float depicting the first Thanksgiving.

A chance to Bond with fame

Tracking the fate of some of film history's most famous Bond girls

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

The "Bond girl" legacy began in 1962, when Ursula Andress, playing Honey Rider, walked out of the Caribbean in that tiny white bikini and into the life of Sean Connery's James Bond. Forty years later, in an homage to that famous entrance, Oscar-winner Halle Berry steps out of the Caribbean in tiny coral bikini, as the latest Bond girl, in "Die Another Day." (Berry had already begun shooting the film when she won the Academy Award.)

In between, dozens of other actresses have played "Bond girls." (Even the age of political correctness couldn't change the term to "Bond women.") Does anyone remember that Kim Basinger, Jane Seymour and Teri Hatcher all played Bond temptresses?

For some, the role may have provided a career boost; others probably consider it a career-ender. Here's a look at some of the past Bond girls, and effect it had on their careers.

The newest "Bond girl" Halle Berry.

Ursula Andress (Honey Rider in "Dr. No," 1962)

Best known for: pulling a knife on Bond, but being subdued

Before Bond: a couple of small Italian films

After Bond: more Italian films and lots of "B" American films; most recent was "Cremaster 5" in 1997.

Verdict: career builder

Honor Blackman (Pussy Galore in "Goldfinger," 1964)

Best known for: her character's name

Before Bond: two dozen small films, played Cathy Gale, the original female lead on "The Avengers"

After Bond: two dozen more small films, lots of TV movies; most recent was "To Walk with Lions" in 1999.

Verdict: career builder

Diana Rigg (Tracy Draco in "On Her Majesty's Secret Service," 1969)

Best known for: marrying Bond, then being murdered on their honeymoon

Before Bond: played Emma Peel on "The Avengers"

After Bond: lots of film and theater work, and her own TV series "Diana;" longtime host of "Mystery!" on PBS

Verdict: career builder

Jill St. John (Tiffany Case in "Diamonds Are Forever," 1971)

Best known for: turning from smuggler to Bond ally

Before Bond: light comedies and action films

"Standing Room Only" and "Safe Harbor" are two of several works by Braintree artist Susan Lynch Raffa on display in the NRAS exhibit "Caught on Canvas" showing at the James Library and Center for the Arts in Norwell through Dec. 3.

Lasting Impressionism

Braintree painter finds new dedication to art at NRAS

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

"I always paint from real life, in mostly local settings," says artist Susan Lynch Raffa. "But I've also been to Monhegan in Maine and painted there and I've had the chance to go to Italy and work too. I'm thinking of moving toward producing bigger canvas works in the future and likewise broadening my range of painting locations as well."

Raffa's mind as an artist is fittingly on the future. A Braintree wife and mother of two and former gallery owner in Plymouth, the thirtysomething artist has more recently joined the North River Arts Society, becoming one of the younger members of the Marshfield arts group. Even more recently, she accepted an invitation to a spot on NRAS's Board of Directors and teaches children's painting classes for the society.

Raffa is currently marking another milestone with her first one-person show. "Caught On Canvas," a collection of mostly oil works with the odd watercolor and charcoal piece is on display in the basement gallery of Norwell's James Library and Center for the Arts through Dec. 3.

I've really gotten to know Impressionism and become aware of master painters from the past, like (John Singer) Sargeant, (Edgar) Degas, (Joachin) Sorolla and (Anders Leonard) Zorn. These are some of my favorites, who've influenced my ideas about light and design."
Artist Susan Lynch Raffa

"I enjoyed running the Gallery By the Sea in Plymouth and it was great experience, showing my work and that of other local artists there," said Raffa, whose work has also exhibited at NRAS Members Shows, The Beacon Hill Art Walks and Martha's Vineyard All Arts Shows among other places.

"But I found that the Gallery didn't leave enough time for my own painting and studies. I left that and joined the North River Arts Society soon after. I've really been able to commit myself to painting since then, especially studying in John Kilroy's class there. I've really gotten to know Impressionism and become aware of master painters from the past, like (John Singer) Sargeant, (Edgar) Degas, (Joachin) Sorolla and (Anders Leonard) Zorn. These are some of my favorites, who've influenced my ideas about light and design."

Raffa applies the ideas of light and design from these icons and others to a wide variety of real-life subjects, as evidenced by her James Library show. But she seems most drawn to coastal landscapes, subjects from which spring her strongest work. Particularly the series of oil renderings produced on Monhegan Island, which is becoming an artist' retreat.

"The Maine waters are so deep blue, with all these vibrant greens running through them," Raffa said.

The lazy cook's guide to Thanksgiving

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

OK, Thanksgiving is approaching. The last time you made a pumpkin pie was in 1978 and it had the texture of mud. The idea of making gravy is about as unappealing as organizing the basement. And, to top it off, the notion of messing about with a hot, 14-pound hunk of half-baked poultry is enough to make you take up meditation. You want help and you want it fast.

To provide that help, Cook's Illustrated magazine, home of America's Test Kitchen, went to supermarkets and mail-order suppliers to find out which brands (if any) of turkeys, stuffings, gravies, cranberry sauces, dinner rolls, and pumpkin pies really taste like (or close to) homemade. You may do most of the Thanksgiving cooking yourself, just getting help with the gravy or pie, or you might cover the dining room table entirely with store-bought items. Either way, our test cooks and tasters discovered that the difference between buying the right brand versus the wrong one is night and day. One brand of pumpkin pie was so awful, so gluey and unappetizing, that if you served it by mistake you would never have to worry about hosting Thanksgiving dinner again. The best pumpkin pie, however, was as good, or better than, homemade. In most cases, it was less an issue of expense than it was of knowing which brand is best.

So here are the winners in each category with a few words of caution. Note that at Cook's Illustrated we hope that you will still do most of the cooking yourself at Thanksgiving. There is nothing wrong with a bit of culinary cheating we all do it but there is nothing quite like homemade, especially when it comes to the turkey that costs under a dollar a pound at the supermarket and over $12 per pound if someone else cooks it for you!

THE STORE-BOUGHT TURKEY

When you get to the supermarket to buy a turkey, the options are many — fresh or frozen, flavor-enhanced or not, kosher, organic, etc. We cooked eight different brands using the same roasting method for each in order to remove different cooking techniques as a variable. The winner, the Marval frozen and basted bird, was a huge surprise since it beat out higher-priced brands of fresh, not frozen, birds. (Marval is 79 cents per pound; natural, free-range birds run about $1.80 per pound.) We were also shocked that the frozen Butterball bird outscored two higher-priced natural brands. Our conclusion is that birds that are "basted" which means injected with a salt solution (this is akin to brining) outperform regular birds since the meat turns out moister. The one kosher brand we tasted, Empire, was also well liked for the same reason. The bird is salted and therefore has more flavor and moisture.

MAIL ORDER, PRE-COOKED TURKEY

OK, so you want to buy your turkey pre-cooked. Well, we found three brands of cooked mail-order turkeys, thawed them, heated them, and then taste-tested them to see if any would pass the Norman Rockwell authenticity test. One smelled, looked, and tasted just like ham. Another brand which was smoked had a ham-like texture and an odd, artificial flavor, but one brand, the whole roasted turkey from the Second Avenue Deli in New York City, was the real thing and tasted like it, too. (It also cost a mind-boggling $12.50 per pound without shipping! The Marval, our winner in the supermarket turkeys, cost just 79 cents per pound.) They will the roast the bird for you at their store and then ship it to your home in a cold container. (Reheating takes less than an hour.) Contact them at 1-212-228-3354 or at www.2ndavedeli.com <http://www.2ndavedeli.com/> .

STORE-BOUGHT STUFFING

None of the commercial stuffings we tasted compete with the homemade variety since a good stuffing really depends on fresh ingredients such as onions, celery, eggs, bread, and stock. Packaged stuffings also tend to use a lot of sugar, salt, and sometimes fat to make up for the lack of freshness.

Therefore, we are inclined to put stuffing on the homemade list for your Thanksgiving meal. That being said, the best of the lot was the Bell's Family Style Stuffing that received good but not excellent scores.

STORE-BOUGHT GRAVY

Gravy is a mystery to many home cooks since you are usually asked to simmer the giblets (whatever they are) for a couple of hours, degrease pan drippings, and then whisk in cornstarch. It's tiresome work and the results are often mediocre. We expected to find nothing but heartache in supermarket gravies when we tasted nine different brands and, for the most part, this is what we got. Our tasters had comments such as "slimy," "gooey," "awful," and "scary aftertaste." But to our great surprise, one brand, Butterball Instant Turkey Gravy Mix, wasn't half-bad. One taster even said that it tasted "just like Grandma's." (Others were less generous in their description.) However, if you aren't going to make it yourself, this supermarket time-saver is a good alternative.

STORE-BOUGHT AND MAIL-ORDER CRANBERRY SAUCE

Some of us in the test kitchen do have a fondness for canned cranberry jelly. You know the one, it slides out of the can like Jell-O and wobbles and shakes on the serving plate. However, we opted to taste test a wider range of cranberry relishes, sauces, and chutneys in an effort to see if a commercial product could compete with the very good bag-of-the-bag recipe found on sacks of whole fresh Ocean Spray cranberries. (This easy, top-notch recipe takes about 10 minutes to make.) The verdict? Well, one brand was so horrible that it tasted like cocktail sauce. (One taster remarked, "where are the shrimp"?) However, the Ocean Spray Whole Berry Cranberry Sauce was a winner, highly recommended, and available in supermarkets everywhere.

STORE-BOUGHT AND MAIL-ORDER PUMPKIN PIES

There is nothing quite like a homemade pumpkin pie, or is there? Our tasters were shocked to discover that two brands (out of seven tasted) one supermarket and one mail-order were actually quite good, even excellent.

The winners were the pricey Deep Dish Pumpkin Pie from Harry and David ($39.95 plus shipping and handling; 1-877-456-7700 or www.harryanddavid.com <http://www.harryanddavid.com/> ; for Thanksgiving, order by November 19 for standard shipping; they will overnight pies up until November 25) and the much cheaper Marie Callendar's Pumpkin Pie ($5.99) which is available in supermarkets. The Harry and David pie does have a whipped-cream topping so it is less traditional. but the filling was moist, creamy, and nicely spiced.

We also tested a "gluten-free" pie, which was horrendous. It had the texture of Elmer's and didn't taste much better.

For more information about these tastings and others, log onto the Cook's Illustrated Web site at www.cooksillustrated.com <http://www.cooksillustrated.com/> . Access to detailed articles is limited to paid Web site subscribers, but some information and recipes are available free of charge.

"You can't tell the story of America with the Native American story."

"We have our cultural differences and we should celebrate our diverse cultures," DeMacedo said. "But today we're all Americans and we should move forward as one."

Other floats will tell the story of the first Thanksgiving, The struggle for American Independence with a depiction of George Washington at Valley Forge and the Civil War highlighting the preservation of the nation with the surrender of Lee to Grant.

A 20th century float will honor American veterans and will feature the renowned Norman Rockwell image "Freedom from Want" and the final float depicting the three New York City Firefighters raising a flag in the rubble of the World Trade Center will pay homage to Sept. 11 victims and to public safety officials all over the region and the nation. DeMacedo said color guards from area police and fire departments will accompany the float.

In addition to the incredible floats, DeMacedo said numerous local groups including Girl and Boy Scouts will march in the parade. Fifteen musical groups including the nationally acclaimed Fife and Drum band the "American Originals" from Washington D.C., marching bands and drum and bugle corps will also take part along with a convoy of antique cars cruising the parade route.

Opening ceremonies for the parade will begin at 9:30 a.m. Saturday, with a pilgrim procession and candle lighting ceremony. The famed "singing trooper" Dan Clark will give his rendition of "America the Beautiful" and the intermediate school choir will continue the patriotic concert.

The church bells in town will chime in unison at 10 a.m. as the parade steps off at Nelson Street. As the parade makes its way to Water Street and the waterfront area, DeMacedo said there will be a fly over complete with red, white and blue smoke filling the skies above Plymouth and confetti cannons going off.

In the past the parade has drawn as many as 150,000 spectators and following last year's disappointment, DeMacedo said there could be a record crowd. The event will take place rain or shine.

"I just hope everything goes off smoothly," said DeMacedo, who hopes to keep the tradition going. "I'm very grateful to the past organizers including Joseph McStowe, who laid a strong foundation for the parade. I'm pleased to be able to build upon that foundation and add to that original vision."

DeMacedo says this year's event is ambitious because of what it is trying to accomplish — "telling the story of this great land. It's an exciting time," he said. "We want to be known as the Thanksgiving capital."

Parade spectators are urged to get their spot along the parade route early. Roads will close by 9 a.m. Saturday and DeMacedo said the best viewing spots will be on Court Street from Benny's to Route 44 and along Water Street.

The parade is set for Saturday morning but the weekend-long events get started Friday afternoon with educational workshops and free tours of Plymouth's historic sites led by guides in Pilgrim costume followed by a patriotic tribute concert planned at the newly restored Memorial Hall Friday evening at 7 p.m. Tickets for the concert are $15 for general admission, $20 for premium seating and proceeds will help defray parade costs which will top $100,000, DeMacedo said. Parade costs include everything from operations to float construction and paying for the various marching bands which charge as much as $8,000 to appear in the parade. DeMacedo said the Plymouth community has been very supportive. Fundraising efforts including local contributions along with many corporate sponsorships has already raised upwards of $90,000, he said. Following Saturday's 1-1/2-hour parade, visitors can tour various encampments set up by Civil War reenactment and Native American groups.

Another Memorial Hall concert featuring the Senior Drum and Bugle Corps Reunion is set for Saturday evening. Tickets are $20 and $30 for that performance.

Lasting Impressionism

Vineyard, Scituate, Cohasset, Humarock and even "Boston Skyline" as viewed from Hull Bay. The blues of the water are not so richly textured, and the coastlines not so panoramic, but Raffa gives these scenes equally fine, sensual treatments.

Dancers are also a favorite subject of the artist's, as are children, as shown in the portrait, "My Daughter, Lila" and the communing-with-nature figures of "Hopeful Future," which previously won Raffa a Spirit Award at a NRAS and North Community Church Show. Raffa's notable range of subject matter further extends to figures as disparate as "Elephants in New England" and the folk musicians onstage of "Afternoon Harmony."

Raffa's work will next be on view in a group show at Hingham's South Street Gallery in December.

Prepare your landscape for winter weather

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the end of November approaches, time grows short for preparing our landscapes for winter weather. Holiday shopping, decorating and celebrations leave limited time for raking, mulching and other gardening chores, and by the first of the year, the ground may be frozen or covered with snow. Every effort should be made to put the gardens to bed by month's end.

The chilly temperatures and shorter day length during November signal plants to enter dormancy. The leaves of deciduous trees and shrubs fall to the ground and many perennials die back to basal rosettes or disappear altogether. Despite little vegetative growth above ground, plants continue to absorb water and nutrients to assist with winter survival. In seasons passed, supplemental moisture was a critical issue as drought conditions left parched plants at risk during the winter months but Mother Nature has been generous this fall providing plentiful moisture to our thirsty plants. Additional moisture should not be necessary in the weeks to come with the exception of any trees or shrubs planted late this fall.

For the next six months, most of our plants will remain dormant as fluctuating temperatures, chilly winds, snow and ice challenge their very existence. Evergreen plants, particularly boxwood and broadleafed shrubs including rhododendrons and mountain laurels, face the greatest hazard. Subjected to desiccating winds and winter sun, their leaves may be scorched, especially during the latter half of the winter. Most broad-leafed evergreens appreciate sheltered conditions to minimize this exposure. In addition, azaleas and rhododendrons have extremely superficial root systems that become easily stressed during periods of low moisture. A layer of shredded bark mulch is essential in all seasons to assist with moisture retention.

Azaleas and the flamboyant pink and blue hydrangeas also tend to bloom most reliably when grown in sheltered locations. The buds of some varieties of azaleas are cold sensitive and may freeze during winter cold snaps or become desiccated by drying winds. The large-flowered pink and blue hydrangeas bloom on "old wood"; this means that their existing woody stems and the tender green buds along these branches must survive the cold and the dry breezes that winter brings. Avoid pruning these shrubs in autumn or early spring. To ensure blossoms next season, construction of a windscreen may be helpful to protect plants growing in exposed areas. Install a series of stakes around these shrubs and construct wrap with burlap, leaving the top open for air circulation. Fill the interior space with pine needles or oak leaves.

Mild winters are sometimes more damaging to plants than winters when the ground remains frozen much of the season.

Few gardeners can resist the temptation to grow roses despite their demanding cultural requirements. The introduction of numerous lower maintenance cultivars has appealed to some, but most rose fanciers still succumb to the seductive beauty of the hybrid tea roses that tend to be the most challenging and require special attention in order to survive our harsh winters. Protection of the bud union is critical for their survival. A six- to 12-inch cone-shaped mound of fresh soil, mulch, or well-draining compost should be applied to the base of the plant and completely cover the fist-shaped graft. Use soil from a vegetable garden or another source rather than pulling soil together from around the base of your rose plants as you risk exposing their shallow roots, making them more susceptible to the cold. Apply a layer of mulch to the mound once the ground freezes.

Pruning of trees, shrubs and particularly roses should wait until late winter or early spring however if there are canes that are especially long, it may be advisable to trim these back to approximately 3 feet in height to lessen the possibility of damage cause by wind or snow. Remove dead or diseased shoots and any suckers that may have sprouted from beneath the bud union. Be sure to rake up and dispose of rose foliage to minimize diseases overwintering in the ground surrounding your plants.

Mild winters are sometimes more damaging to plants than winters when the ground remains frozen much of the season. Warm days followed by evenings below freezing can adversely affect young or thin-barked trees, particularly those located in open areas or in southwesterly facing exposures. During the warmth of the day, the trunk of the tree, both its bark and inner core, expand in response to the heat of the sun. When the temperature drops dramatically at night, the thin outer bark rapidly shrinks, while the dense inner core cools down more slowly causing the bark to split and peel. The bark of a tree is analogous to our own skin. If the outer layer is damaged, the vital inner trunk becomes susceptible to infestations by insects and diseases. The use of tree wraps during the winter months can greatly reduce this damage. Local nurseries usually stock these protective wraps that breathe and expand as temperatures! fluctuate in addition to protecting the trunks from destructive rodents near their bases. Keep grass short around tree trunks and remove leaves and debris until the ground freezes; be sure to remove this protection each spring.

Split or peeling bark is not always a sign of a tree in distress. Sycamore, birch, paperbark maple, Kousa dogwood, stewartia, oakleaf hydrangea and Heptacodium are only a few of the woody plants that routinely exhibit appealing exfoliating bark. These lovely specimens add beauty to our winter landscapes.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 20

At 1:25 a.m. the moon enters Gemini, setting a quick pace today and tomorrow. It is better to handle a variety of jobs, rather than one that demands mental focus and attention to detail. People will be talkative and easily distracted. On the other hand, communications and people-oriented activities get the green light. Promote new ideas; launch a sales campaign. Let fun and games top your agenda this evening.

THURSDAY, NOV. 21

The planet Venus has been traveling in retrograde motion since October 10 in the sign Scorpio. Today at 2:12 a.m. Venus turns direct. However, a lunar opposition to Pluto may spark emotional fireworks this morning. Keep it light. Don't rock the boat. The good news is that a harmonious alignment of the Gemini moon and Jupiter generates a lighter, brighter mood this afternoon. Yesterday's advice applies to today as well.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 22

The sun enters Sagittarius at 6:54 a.m., remaining there until December 21. However, the Gemini moon aligns with Saturn at 7:06 a.m., making for a rough start to this day. There may be unexpected delays or setbacks. Keep a cool head. Influences turn around completely at 11:48 a.m., when the moon enters Cancer. The green light for new starts goes on. Enjoy a special dinner this evening with friends and family.

SATURDAY, NOV. 23

The moon travels in Cancer throughout the weekend, making it prime for spending quality time with family. All cooking/baking or redecorating projects are highlighted. Mars forms a flowing 120-degree contact to innovative Uranus. Keep an open mind; try new ideas and methods for solving old problems. Be more spontaneous.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 24

The Cancer moon forms a challenging 90-degree alignment to Mars at 11:51 a.m. and becomes inactive. Choose your words carefully. Others may be moody, irritable, impatient. A harmonious alignment of Mercury and Neptune also affects the day. Take some soul time; meditate, listen to music, write poetry. At 8:00 p.m. the moon enters Leo, setting the stage for a social evening. Put on your party hat and go for the good times.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 25

A Leo moon generates an upbeat mood today and tomorrow. In addition, the planet Mars prepares to form a harmonious contact to Saturn. That means that you can be extremely productive. Organize your time and stick to your game plan. New starts in your personal or professional life are recommended. Pull out all the stops. Launch important ventures, make major decisions or purchases, set new goals. There is one lull period in the day between 9:35 a.m.-12: 35 p.m., when the moon opposes Neptune. Stay alert and use common sense.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 26

Take advantage of planetary influences that hold high potential for productivity. Roll up your sleeves and tackle a full work agenda. People will be friendly and cooperative. A lunar opposition to Uranus at 5:09 p.m. may disrupt the flow of the day. Slow down and pay attention. On the other hand, the green light for new starts is on between 6:00-8:51 p.m., when the moon becomes inactive.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 27

The Mars-Saturn alignment culminates at 1:33 a.m. A Virgo moon takes over at 1:42 a.m., traveling there today and tomorrow. This is a period that can go either way. Don't get caught up worrying or fussing over little things. Be positive. Count your blessings. The last quarter phase of the moon begins at 10:46 a.m. A new moon will culminate next week, December 4. This is a great day to clean and reorganize; get your life in order. Launching important enterprises or making major decisions are not recommended.

THURSDAY, NOV. 28

The Virgo moon forms stressful 90-degree alignments to Mercury and Pluto in the early morning and to Saturn this evening. Maintain an easygoing, lighthearted demeanor. Be flexible. Events may not go as planned. Keep it light and look on the bright side. If you have work or study projects to accomplish, you can be most productive.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 29

Fair and sunny astrological weather returns today and tomorrow. Planetary action rates high across the board, whether you are working or playing. The Virgo moon aligns with Saturn at 12:01 a.m. and becomes inactive until 4:54 a.m., when it enters Libra. The Libra moon forms easy contacts to the sun and Neptune. All social and romantic activities are highlighted. In addition, an applying alignment of Mercury-Pluto aids study, work or research projects. You can cut through obstacles and get to the heart of a matter.

"exciting, rewarding music-making ..."
"a crackerjack professional ensemble..."

Plimoth Plantation is the quintessential place to spend the Thanksgiving Holiday. Throughout the day, our living history sites are filled with activities of the 17th century. Light food and beverages are available throughout the visitor center and outside the carriage house craft center. The Victorian Thanksgiving Dinner is an experience to behold with food of the Victorian period and Victorian interpreters who entertain in grand style. The New England Thanksgiving Buffet offers a traditional Thanksgiving meal with a New England flair. Dinners available by reservation only. For reservations call 508-746-1622 x 8365.

10th Annual Dreamcatcher Classic Road Race - The race starts at 8 a.m. at the Weymouth Junior High School (360 Pleasant St.) and features a five-mile and a two-mile fun run and walk. The event is open to walkers/runners of all abilities. Proceeds from the $15 registration fee ($18 on race day) benefit Julie Rodick Scholarship Fund, which was established in 1993 in memory of Julie Rodick, who died in a car accident. The first 1,200 runners will receive long sleeve T-Shirts and there are trophies for all age categories. For information and registration call 781-331-0600 or visit www.coolrunning.com

Thanksgiving holiday excursion - "Thanksgiving at the Mount Washington" travel via comfortable chartered motor coach over the hills and through the woods form the metropolitan Boston area (MBTA stations at Braintree, Riverside and Wellington) on this national holiday. Feast with family and friends on an all-you-can-eat holiday buffet in the grand style of this palatial hotel nestled in the White Mountains of New Hampshire. Relax by the roaring fire or stroll the wooded trails through Bretton Woods. Convenient parking with planned morning departures and early evening arrivals. The fare of $60 per person covers it all. Sponsored by the Mystic Valley Railway Society, P.O. Box 365486, Hyde Park 02136-009 or call 617-361-4445 or www.mysticvalleyrs.org

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

HEARING IS BELIEVING

For most adults, hearing loss occurs so gradually as to be nearly imperceptible. The people who usually notice first are family and friends, who often tire of having to repeat themselves to accommodate their loved one's poor hearing. When it is taken into account that only 16 percent of physicians routinely screen for hearing loss, it typically falls upon family and friends to bring a person's hearing loss to his or her attention. Even then, many delay (ten years on average) before they seek help. Hearing specialists caution against waiting so long, however. It is much easier to get used to a hearing instrument when the loss is mild and the wearer is young.

When any hearing impairment is suspected, a painless, comprehensive hearing test is in order. It can indicate whether the problem can be helped with medication, surgery, or amplification by a hearing aid. If a hearing instrument is the answer in your case, we welcome you to FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 80 North Avenue, Rte. 139, North Medical Building, Abington, for knowledgeable assistance, compassionate concern, and a selection of the best hearing devices on the market today. Call us at 781-878-9723. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits and Mass Health.

P.S. Many hearing-impaired older adults find themselves relieved of depression after they are fitted with a hearing instrument that increases their socialization.

In keeping with a nine-year tradition recognizing an individual for outstanding service to the community or a special achievement — the Cohasset Mariner is now accepting nominations for the annual Citizen of the Year Award.

Here at the Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to Cohasset. This is a community award: the Mariner is the mean by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make our town a wonderful place to call home.

Last year, Cohasset Mariner readers honored Glenn Pratt as Citizen of the Year for his dogged determination over 20 years to see more cemetery space in town, remembering local soldiers who made the ultimate sacrifice, helping to lead the effort to expand the community center, serving as an elected official, and leading the effort to build a memorial to local mothers who lost sons in wartime.

Wetlands are battleground for train foes

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Train opponents could have some tiny friends that include the Mystic Valley amphipod, spotted turtle and the elderberry longhorned beetle.

These little critters are protected by the Endangered Species Act and live in vernal pools that could be impacted by restoration of the Greenbush Line, according to John Bewick, head of AfTA, which is against the MBTA's Greenbush project.

Those potential impacts are just one of the reasons Hingham-based AfTA — which stands for Advocates for Transportation Alternatives — is appealing the recent state Department of Environmental Protection's issuance of a wetlands variance to the MBTA.

The MBTA needs a variance because the 17.7-mile rail project that runs from Braintree to Scituate will disturb more than 5,000 square feet of wetland area – the maximum allowed under the Wetlands Protection Act. In fact in Hingham alone, more than an acre of wetlands will be impacted by Greenbush. The project also affects vernal

Historical society seeks new home

Will bid on Pratt building

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Historical Society is eyeing the Paul Pratt Library building for its new headquarters.

The private group is putting together a bid package for the 100-year-old structure and plans to offset the cost by selling its current headquarters, the Caleb Lothrop House on Summer Street.

"The people we're talking to are about 90-10 in favor of it," says society first vice president Tom Gruber.

The town is asking a minimum price of $725,000 for the Pratt building that includes a $25,000 real estate commission. Sealed bids are due in the selectmen's office by 10 a.m., Monday (Dec. 2).

Selectmen have the final say whether to accept a bid.

Gruber said the idea first surfaced two years ago when it was decided to renovate the old Osgood School for the new town library. But at the time, the society thought the operating

Parent forum on teenage drinking draws a crowd

By Amanda Gontarz
CORRESPONDENT

Last Wednesday's forum at Cohasset Middle-High School wasn't for school administrators to tell parents that there is a problem with underage drinking among the town's teenagers.

Parents already know that.

"It's a reality that teenagers drink," Bill Foley said.

The forum, however, was for concerned parents to speak with school officials and each other about keeping their children safe. CMHS Principal Michael Jones explained the forum was held as a result of alcohol-related incidences at school dances over the past year and general safety concerns about the students.

"We're looking at changes in polices and procedures and want the input of parents and the town before going forward with recommended changes," he said.

Most of the almost 100 parents in attendance agreed that the safety of Cohasset's youth is a community effort and that they need to work together.

Lynn Durkin said she heard from another parent that a party was being planned and she kept her son home that night, as did other parents who knew of the party. If parents would talk to each other, then they could better help their children.

"We should be less concerned with what people think and willing to get on the phone and save lives," Durkin said.

Stephanie Noble, a former

"We have to do whatever it takes to make safety our first priority."
— Ann Musto, parent

member of the School Committee, said parents should question their children's activities, getting specific details such as where are they going, who's driving and are parents going to be there.

"Do you know where your children are before a dance?" Noble said.

Jones discussed having police detail at school dances, as well as the use of breathalyzers.

"There was a time I wouldn't use breathalyzers before a school function but now I'm not so sure," he said.

While parents were split as to the presence of police at school dances, all agreed that changes need to be made after several events that have happened this year, most recently the car accident on Beechwood Street involving three high school students.

"We have to do whatever it takes to make safety our first priority," Ann Musto said.

Police Chief Robert Jackson said the breathalyzer machine the police department could donate to the school system could not feasibly be used for every student, as it would take about eight minutes per use. Hand-held units could be purchased and used for school functions, but Jackson said the test would only tell whether the student has been drinking.

Dr. Michael Gill said, right now, school officials only have visible indications, such as wobbling or vomiting, as to whether students have been drinking.

"We're not able to know how many students drink before the

'Bulldog' keeps watch over school projects

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

An ill-informed contractor appeared before the School Building Committee recently to argue about the committee's objections to a change order on one of the school projects.

"What do you care?" he asked. "It's not your money."

Whoa, buddy – wrong move.

Rob Spofford, chairman of the School Building Committee.

"I made the point right then and there," said Chairman Rob Spofford. "I told him, 'Don't ever come back to this committee and make the statement that it is not our money. It is my money. I'm a taxpayer, just like every other citizen of Cohasset."

It is a classic Spofford moment by all accounts, the definition of a man with strong ideas and strong values, but who more importantly isn't afraid to use them.

"I view what the town has done with the school projects as a public trust," said Spofford. "It is also a fiduciary trust of $42 million and I don't take that lightly."

That attitude – along with a healthy dose of town-wide teamwork – has led to a $10 million Deer Hill project that is both on-time and on-budget, an anomaly for school projects in the area. It also led to a new nickname for Spofford – "Bulldog" – thanks to School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn

"I went home and told my wife (what Flynn had said) and she said, 'I don't know if that is a good thing,'" said Spofford. "But I said 'It's there and the newspaper is probably going to use that.'"

Physically, Spofford is anything but a bulldog. He is one of those fit, trim and clean-cut people who manage to look better in an open-collared shirt and slacks than most do in three-piece suits.

But there is another side to Spofford, led by a hard-nosed business philosophy and the willingness to confront and fix mistakes that more than earns the nickname.

"The word bulldog connotes different images," said Spofford. "It can be a positive and it can be a negative. Taken in the context of the way that Rick said it, I think it is a positive."

After almost 10 years with the building committee, though, Spofford has learned to be prepared for differing public reactions.

"I would consider myself, in a lot of ways, a strong personality," said Spofford. "And people

Whitman assessor hired to fill Cohasset position

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

The controversy surrounding the hiring of a new deputy assessor ended quietly last Thursday, when Finance Director Michael Buckley announced at the Board of Assessors' meeting that Mary Quill will fill the position at an annual salary of $58,000. Quill, who lives in Pembroke, is currently the head assessor in Whitman.

Two members of the Board of Assessors, Elsa Miller and Mary Granville, approached selectmen earlier this month, saying their opinions were not being considered by Town Manager Mark Haddad, who by statute, holds the power to hire and fire.

After several meetings, though, the miscommunication was resolved and all appeared happy with the result.

"I think she is going to do a great job for us," said Haddad. "I'm very excited and I think we are very fortunate to get somebody of her quality to fill the position."

Haddad feels that Quill, as department head, has the skills to improve the office.

"I think Mary Quill brings a level of expertise to the Board of Assessors office that is really needed," said Haddad. "I think she had a good rapport with the Board of Assessors office when she interviewed with them, the Director of Finance (Michael Buckley), who will be her direct supervisor, is extremely comfortable with her, and I am extremely comfortable with her."

"I have worked with her before, I know she can do the job and I know she has the right temperament for the town."
— Finance Director Michael Buckley

Buckley, too, was pleased with the decision.

"I'm very happy with the person we have selected," said Buckley. "I have worked with her before, I know she can do the job and I know she has the right temperament for the town."

Quill replaces outgoing deputy assessor Cheryl Pooler, who accepted a position in East Bridgewater.

Originally, Quill was scheduled to make $55,000 a year, but after selectmen requested that the position be changed from a four-day schedule to a 40-hour a week schedule, that was raised to $58,000.

"The Board of Selectmen informed us that they would like to see this position be a 40-hour-a-week position," said Buckley. "If we had left her salary where it was previously, it would result in a substantial hourly pay cut from her current position."

There is a clause in the contract that would drop the higher figure down to the initial figure in the event the position reverts to a four-day-a-week job.

The department itself is also in for an overhaul. From re-painting the offices, to attempting to streamline procedure by reevaluating past practices, the town is using the hiring of new department head as a springboard for changes.

"Anytime you have a new department head there are going to be changes," said Buckley. "But, yes, things will be done differently."

The Selectmen were expected to officially appoint Quill at their meeting Tuesday, after the Mariner went to press. Quill will assume the position on Jan. 6.

Selectmen to set Special Election

The Board of Selectmen were expected to set the date for the Special Election to override Proposition 2-1/2 at Tuesday night's meeting, after the Mariner went to press.

"I'm going to recommend Jan. 11," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "But Merle Brown may ask for it to be postponed until Jan. 25 because of a conflict wit the Massachusetts Municipality Association Conference."

The vote is needed after Town Meeting approved an $800,000 debt exclusion to bury the utility wires downtown in conjunction with the Village Revitalization project. The two-thirds majority vote at Town Meeting is only the first step. In order for the override to take place, it must also pass in the election, this time by a simple majority.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Monday Nov. 25:

Sewer Commission, Dec. 2, at 6 p.m.

Zoning Board of Appeals, Dec. 2 (Avalon-Health and Environment), Dec. 16 (Avalon - Public Safety), Jan. 6 (Avalon - Infrastructure), and Jan. 27 (Avalon - Local Preference and Affordable Housing needs), all at 7:30 p.m. All Avalon meetings will be held in the selectmen's office and will be televised.

Sewer Commission, Dec. 2 at 6 p.m.

Conservation Commission, Dec. 2, Jan. 1, and Jan 23 at 7:30 p.m.

Water Commission, Dec. 3 at 8 p.m. (at 339 King St.).

Board of Assessors, Dec. 5 at 4:00 p.m.

Growth and Development, Dec. 9 at 7:30 p.m. (Housing forum).

Planning Board, Dec. 11 at 7:30 p.m.

Harbor Committee, Jan. 14 at 7 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise indicated.

T-Day breakfast at Legion Hall

The Sons of the American Legion are hosting an all-you-can-eat breakfast from 7:30-9:30 a.m. on Thanksgiving Day at the Legion Hall on Summer Street. The cost is $5 and the event is open to everyone.

Flag depository at American Legion

The American Flag Code adopted by the United States Congress in 1942 says, "When a flag is in such condition that is no longer a fitting emblem for display, it should be destroyed in a dignified way, preferably by burning."

The American Legion, George H. Mealy Post 118 in Cohasset now has a way for the public to be able to bring them their tattered and worn flags so they may be properly and ceremoniously destroyed. Their new Flag Depository, located in front of the legion post at 98 Summer St., has the look and shape of an American flag. This solid metal Flag Depository protects the flags until they are removed for storage and kept until the time of the desecration ceremony. The Herb Chambers Automobile Dealerships made this new service possible through a donation to the post. Everyone is invited to bring his or her retired flags to the depository.

Foreign objects clogging pumps

There are still many cases of foreign objects clogging sewer pumps, and this is to remind customers that only normal toilet and garbage disposer waste should be discharged. As the sewer department previously advised its users, it is necessary to charge for the Town's $85 ($100 on weekends) cost for service calls to remove foreign objects.

The following objects have caused repeated service calls: tampons, dental floss, baby wipes, Q-Tips. In addition, the following objects will also clog the pumps: bones, diapers, cloth, glass, metal, nuts, plastic, rags, rope, rubber, sand, sanitary, napkins, shells, towels.

Commuter boat users start paying for parking

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The MBTA has decided to charge $2 a day to park at the Hingham Shipyard commuter boat lot.

Even though SeaChain, LLC, which has plans to redevelop the shipyard, is already charging the same amount to park in its over-flow parking area, some commuter boat riders object to the recent MBTA decision, which was made in light of budget shortfalls.

"I'm very concerned about the proposed increase without input from commuter boat riders," said commuter boat advocate Martha Bewick. "They didn't have an opportunity to say anything about it. To begin with, the amount charged to ride the commuter boat is far higher than other fares, including commuter rail, which already puts commuter boat riders at a significant disadvantage."

Hingham commuter boat riders aren't the only ones to be hit with additional costs. The MBTA plans to increase parking fees at Red Line stations by 50 cents and by $1 at commuter rail stations.

"The reality is that the MBTA is facing a budget deficit of about $18 million this year," said MBTA spokesperson Lydia Rivera. "Obviously the parking fees will affect the pockets of our customers, but the quality of service is guaranteed."

The MBTA has also laid off a number of workers and is stepping up fare-collecting procedures to ensure "all our riding public are paying," according to Rivera.

"The MBTA certainly does need money, but $12 per round trip (including parking) for those who don't have discount commuter boat tickets is a lot to pay," Bewick said. "The commuter boat rider subsidy of 90 cents is far less than subsidies for other forms of transportation. It's as though the tremendous commuter boat population from the South Shore is being penalized by the process."

Reardon notes that 47 percent of the Hingham residents who travel to downtown Boston for work purposes take public transportation. More than 50 percent of those in Cohasset who work in that area arrive there via public transit. Many of those individuals take the commuter boat.

"Why is the MBTA implementing the parking fee and not putting the funds into the commuter boats?" Reardon wonders. "Only minimal improvements have been made there. There has been very little thinking through on the part of the MBTA."

Matt Bell, who lives in the Bradley Woods neighborhood, can walk to the commuter boat, so parking isn't an issue for him.

On the one hand, he notes that even with the implementation of a parking fee, the total daily fare could be far less than the cost to park a car in Boston, which can be as high as $20 a day.

"You have to weigh those things," he said.

Still, Bell has sympathy for commuters who have no choice but to park in the commuter boat lot and pay a fee to do so.

"I'm sorry to see the charge, but nothing's free," he said.

Bell also thinks the MBTA is being short-sighted when it comes to other commuter boat issues.

"I think the MBTA could push boat use more than they do and is (remiss) in not building a second level to the current parking area," he said.

There are more than 1,500 available spaces at the commuter boats currently, but the lot fills up quickly, making parking difficult if not impossible for some commuters and others arriving later in the day to take the boat to destinations other than work.

Schools struggle to fill business manager duties

Klimko's future is still in limbo

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

It has been more than three weeks since school Business Manager Ivan Klimko was arrested and charged with the attempted murder and assault and battery on his wife, but his future in the Cohasset School District still remains unclear.

"As of Monday of this week Dr. Klimko has been suspended and he has been placed on an administrative leave without pay," said Supt. Edward Malvey last week. "That status is pending further review from the court action scheduled for Dec. 18."

Klimko, 55, who was released on $1,000 bail, was also served with a restraining order that compels him to stay away from his wife and avoid alcohol.

The school department has been hit hard by the loss. Klimko, who lives in Hull, was hired about 18 months ago to serve as the school's business manager. He quickly overhauled the accounting system and had recently taken over running the school transportation system.

"It has been a real patch job."
— Edward Malvey, Superintendent of Schools

"A lot has obviously shifted to my plate, because there are so many daily operational matters that need to be attended to," said Malvey. "So, I have had to juggle my own schedule, but we have been able to keep things moving forward without any undue delay. There have been some minor delays, but that is to be expected."

Malvey credits the school district staff with allowing things to operate smoothly.

"We have had a lot of help administratively pulling together throughout the district, but more importantly we have also had secretarial help pulling together," said Malvey. "I've been able to bring in some of the secretaries from the other schools to assist with purchasing process, computer entry, record keeping, such that our financial bookkeeper can shift to some of the responsibilities that Dr. Klimko was responsible for."

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn commended Malvey for his handling of the situation.

"I think that Dr. Malvey and his staff are doing their best to get through this situation," he said.

If the situation drags on too long – especially given the upcoming budget cuts – there could be calls to eliminate the position rather than hire a replacement.

"There will be people who will say, 'Gee you were able to survive, you didn't need that position," said Malvey. "But on the other hand I'm not going to mislead anyone to believe it was easy for us. It has been a real patch job."

Regardless, Malvey says he wants the situation cleared up as soon as possible.

"My hope would be that we could get this thing resolved and one way or another move forward still having a full-time business manager position," said Malvey. "This is not, as far as I am concerned, a test for us to see if we can do without it. To the contrary, we've had to double up on a lot of things. But I'm not going to sit make and tell you it can't be done, my job is to keep things moving forward."

Wetlands are battleground for train foes

pools and protected species habitat.

AfTA filed an appeal Nov. 22 on the variance granted the MBTA for the Hingham portion of the train project. According to the DEP, the Greenbush project does not require a variance in Weymouth and Braintree because less than 5,000 square feet of wetlands will be disturbed in those towns. In Cohasset and Scituate, a variance will be required and those applications have been filed separately by the MBTA.

Bewick, who is a former state Secretary of Environmental Affairs, said the group is seeking an adjudicatory hearing, which is an administrative hearing set up under the Wetlands Protection Act to present facts in a case that are in dispute. During the hearing AfTA will present evidence and witnesses, and cross examine the MBTA experts in depositions, so it is much like an administrative trial, Bewick said.

The process that also includes pre-conference hearings between the parties could take six to nine months, according to DEP spokesman Ed Coletta. The administrative law judge can rule to uphold the DEP decision, modify it or overturn it, he said.

Train work within the 100-foot wetlands buffer zone cannot go forward until the appeal is resolved, the DEP said.

John Carlisle, spokesman for state Transportation Secretary James Scanlon, said the office would be working with environmental officials to expedite the process.

"We feel confident we can work on the other parts of the project in order to break ground on our anticipated schedule in the spring," he said.

If the DEP grants the MBTA variances for the Scituate and Cohasset portions of the project, AfTA will also appeal, Bewick said.

Bewick said AfTA is prepared to go to court if the judge upholds the DEP variance.

"The three conditions for granting a variance are: showing an overriding public interest, no reasonable alternatives to the project; and the mitigating measures proposed will contribute to the protection of wetlands," he said. "The project fails on all three."

Bewick said there is no overriding public interest for several reasons including no significant air-quality benefit as originally thought because there is no evidence that there will be an actual reduction of vehicle miles traveled as a result of the project. That's because of latent demand on the Southeast Expressway and lack of impact on that traffic from the Plymouth and Middleboro Lines, the other spurs of the Old Colony Restoration project that started service five years ago.

But the DEP decision says Greenbush will serve the public interest by reducing automobile congestion, vehicle miles traveled and associated air emissions.

"The project along with numerous other public transportation improvements will help to create a balanced transportation system to assist in the attainment of air quality goals and standards to mitigate the air quality impacts of the central artery/tunnel project," the decision states.

The decision also states that Greenbush would attract more riders than commuter boats with feeder bus service. The DEP also says through discussions with the Massachusetts Natural Heritage and Endangered Species Program, the rare species habitat survey, findings and proposed mitigation are deemed sufficient for purposes of the variance.

Carlisle said alternatives to Greenbush have been studied ad nauseam.

"The alternatives have been studied and restudied," he said. "We think our argument that Greenbush is the best alternative for the South Shore is a very solid one."

But AfTA believes there are alternatives that would cost far less and have little affect on the environment, and provide better, more frequent service for commuters than Greenbush.

AfTA's alternatives are to build on the existing commuter boat service, use express buses, expand service and parking at the Red Line stations at Braintree and Quincy, and a new connection to the Plymouth Old Colony Line from Route 3 to the South Weymouth station plus new parking capacity. Bewick said AfTA's alternatives would cost about $150 million versus the $486 million projected for Greenbush.

"A new connection to the Plymouth line at South Weymouth would allow three more trains to be added to the Plymouth branch and provide the incremental service that is needed by Plymouth, which is the fastest growing area for the next 20 years, as well as access for the lower end of the Greenbush corridor," he said.

Carlisle said AfTA has tried to stop the project before.

"Mr. Bewick and his group have tried to get an injunction against the project on similar grounds and the judge has sided with us," he said. "We think from a legal standpoint we'll prevail."

In addition to the wetlands variance from the DEP, the MBTA also needs a permit from the Army Corps of Engineers, the federal agency that has jurisdiction over federally protected historic properties and wetlands. Under ACE jurisdiction is Hingham's Town Brook, which is an anadromous fish run, where fish migrate from the ocean to fresh water to spawn.

"Until the permit hurdles are overcome, this is far from a done deal," Bewick said.

Committee on History selling three-book packages

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

George Lucas hasn't cornered the market on trilogies.

While Lucas, of Star Wars fame, is currently working on his prequel trilogy to the classic Star Wars movies of the late 1970s and early 1980s, the Committee on Town History has just completed a trilogy of their own, with the printing of "The Narrative History of Cohasset Volume III."

But taking a page from Lucas' book (who seems to annually re-release the original films in new packaging), the committee is re-issuing all three volumes in a gift set for the first time. The set will cost $98 and will be available on Dec. 4 – just in time for Christmas.

"The books aren't in stores yet," said Wigmore Pierson, the committee's chairman. "But we expect them to be in the stores on Wednesday, Dec. 4."

The gift set was made possible thanks to the strong sales of "Volume III," which was written by Cohasset resident Jacqueline Dormitzer. After being released in mid-June, sales quickly caught fire. By July 11, the committee had sold and shipped 800 pre-ordered copies at $32 a piece.

"We have already sold 7 percent of our total shipment of 100 book sets, sight unseen."
— Wigmore Pierson, History Committee

"We are looking forward to it," said Pierson. "We have already sold 7 percent of our total shipment of 100 book sets, sight unseen."

The first two books will include dust jackets for the first time. The first, authored by Victor Bigelow covers in more than 500 pages from the glacial period to the late 19th century, will feature a lithograph of the Town Common dating to 1855 and the second book, penned by Burtram Pratt, took more than 300 pages to cover a 50-year-period from 1900-1950. It will feature a collection of postcards from the era, depicting scenes around Cohasset.

"It is a great opportunity for us to add dust jackets to the first two books," said Pierson. "They will add a nice touch and will both be historically appropriate."

Aside from the gift set, the sales from the "Volume III" were so successful that the Committee on Town History has launched several splinter ventures.

First, the committee has presented a number of Cohasset maps to the school system as teaching aides, as well as working with the system to create Cohasset specific history curriculum. The members also working on a timeline that juxtaposes world events with the history of Cohasset, also for use as a teaching tool.

The books will be sold at the Buttonwood Bookstore, Cards n' Shards, Cohasset Hardware, as well as Village Wine and Spirits and there will be a book-signing of "Volume III" by Dormitzer on Dec. 6 from 5-8 p.m.

As for the committee, it expects the order to sold quickly.

"Absolutely," said Pierson. "We expect these sets to be gone in a matter of days."

At right: Herb Jason chats with Jackie Dormitzer, author of "A Narrative History of Cohasset," volume III, during a book signing at the harbor last July. The book committee is now offering all three history volumes in a book set.

Meeting the authors of the first two town histories

Burtram J. Pratt, author of the second volume of A Narrative History of Cohasset, was born July 23, 1919. He was not quite 30 when the town history committee tapped him to write the book in June, 1949.

Though young, Burt had the intrinsic advantage of roots that reached many generations deep into Cohasset's rocky soil.

"But the underlying thing was how very much he loved the town," said his widow, Helen (Carroll) Pratt.

Burt married Helen in 1953, midway through his work on this book. They raised their son, Peter, and daughter, Joy, in Cohasset.

Burt's involvement with town affairs was lifelong and passionate. At various times, he was elected to the planning board, board of registrars and board of selectman. He even served as fence viewer!

Burt was particularly proud to be named chairman of the Cohasset Bicentennial Committee in 1970. He was also a founding trustee of the South Shore Playhouse Association, parent company of the South Shore Music Circus and the Cape Cod Melody Tent.

Burtram J. Pratt, author of the second volume of A Narrative History of Cohasset.

For 40 years, Burt was a member of the Cohasset Republican Town Committee. In 1952, he was publicity director for the Eisenhower for President campaign in the northern section of the Ninth Congressional District.

His career was mostly as a salesman, buyer and estimator in the printing field, with side forays into advertising, public relations and journalism.

Burt's myriad civic activities included membership in the Rotary Club, the Cohasset Historical Society, the Old Goats Club, the South Shore Art Center, the Sixty Plus Club and the Chamber of Commerce.

During World War II, Burt was a master sergeant with the First Army in Europe. When he returned to Cohasset, he was instrumental in planning the veterans' development on the old Town Farm land off Pond Street. He became a member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion and wore his old uniform to march in the Memorial Day parade until a few years before his death on May 7, 1994.

Reverend Edwin Victor Bigelow was born on June 9, 1866 at Kingsport, Nova Scotia. He was a son of Isaac N. and Emeline D. Bigelow of Nova Scotia. On October 9, 1895 he married Carrie T. Hardwick whose parents and grandparents were natives of Cohasset. He acknowledged his wife in the dedication for her help in writing the book.

He graduated from the University of Washington, Seattle, in June of 1887, then received a Bachelor of Divinity from Yale in New Haven in May 1890 and received a Master of Arts from Harvard University in June of 1891. Later he also received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Taylor University in Upland, Indiana. On September 24, 1891 Reverend Bigelow was installed as Pastor of the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset.

During his pastorate in Cohasset, he undertook the task of writing the text of the town's first history book, A Narrative History of the Town of Cohasset, published in 1898 by the first Committee on Town History. The Committee had been established by vote of Cohasset Town Meeting in 1894 for the purpose of recording, for the first time, the unique and fascinating history of our town. It covered the time period from the forming of its granite ledges, the beginning as Hingham's unpopulated east section, through its growth flourishing in the era known as the nation's great "Age of Sail" His description of the town's contemporary status as a late 19th century summer colony was a portent of the shift in Cohasset's socioeconomics to be later covered in the two town histories that followed "Burtram J. Pratt's Volume II 1898 to 1950 and Jacqueline M. Dormitzer's Volume III 1950 to 2000.

It may have surprised us to learn that Reverend Bigelow was not a long-time resident of Cohasset and that he was fresh out of divinity school just three years into his first parish, a young man in his late 20s. Surprising, too, was the fact that he also left Cohasset not long after the publication of his monumental history, accepting the call to assume the pastorate of the Eliot Church in Lowell, where he was installed as pastor in 1901.

While in Cohasset, Reverend Bigelow founded the young men's group called the Endeavor Cadets, said to be the forerunner of the Cohasset troop of Boy Scouts of America. In later years he was closely associated with Andover Theological Seminary and was a Trustee of the Punchard Free School. He died in November 1929 and was buried at Mt. Wollaston Cemetery, Quincy. His wife Carrie died in 1956 at age ninety years.

'Bulldog' keeps watch over school projects

often have strong opinions about the one way or the other, so that word could generate positive or negative reaction from people."

If there is one thing Spofford is uncomfortable with, it is the fact that the success of the projects is being credited to the heads of each department and not the whole team.

"I am firm believer that no one particular person can really drive a project, particularly one of this magnitude," said Spofford. "Obviously you are going to need quarterbacks and individuals to lead the project, but the way to bring something to a successful conclusion is through a team effort."

Spofford thinks that there are two reasons for the success of the school building projects (the Osgood School project was also on-time and on-budget): the dedication of the committee and that committee's philosophy for prosecuting projects.

"I'm just very fortunate to be the quarterback, if you will, of a great team," said Spofford. "If you look at the make-up of our committee, we haven't had a lot of turnover. People like David Chase, Scott Cullins, Adrian McCarthy, JoAnne Chittick, have all been on the committee for a long period of time."

The committee members' longevity has played a large role in the overall success of its projects.

"I believe that contractors look at us in the Town of Cohasset and say 'We have got to keep our eye on the ball or they are going to get the better of us,'" said Spofford. "So we get the better people from these contractors and they pay attention to us, because to get the profit margin that they are going to get, they need to manage our projects, I think, a little bit better."

Another reason may be the way the committee – and Spofford – approaches problems.

"I'm a solutions person, not a problem person," said Spofford. "And I think that anyone who has worked with my both in my own business and with these projects would agree with that assessment."

The key to success? Keeping a bulldog's guard over every detail, from $10 change orders (changes to the original plan that usually increase costs) to the progress of subcontractors.

"We sat down with all of the contractors and had a very frank and open discussion with them about what we expected," said Spofford. "And we set down the philosophy that we were going to bring to this project in regards to change orders."

It is important to lay down the ground rules, according to Spofford, because there are general misconceptions about public projects.

"I think a lot of people come from the private sector and think a public project is a way to enhance their own pocketbook or get jobs for people, so I think it is a philosophy that you bring to it, as well as a discipline."

Next December, the renovation project at the middle-high school will be complete and the seven-year school building ride will be over for Spofford. But indications are he won't remain on the sidelines for too long.

"I don't know what the future holds for me," said Spofford. "But I am a firm believer in public service. I love being in the public domain. I don't know what will be coming next, but I think that there will be something next."

Deer Hill project gets A's for teamwork, timeliness

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

As school projects all over the state run past deadline, the Cohasset projects continue to march to their own tune.

The latest bit of good news is the announcement that the Deer Hill School renovation-expansion is on-schedule and will be open on Jan. 4.

"This is my 12th school in seven years," said Wayne DelPico, the head of Bay State Contracting, Co., which is the main contractor (The project is officially being done as a BSC Systems Joint Venture project). "And this is the first time that I have seen a project come to fruition in the end, and everybody is still working as a team."

Supt. Edward Malvey echoed DelPico's sentiments exactly.

"Wayne is so right," Malvey said. "I have been involved in seven school building projects in my career and it can get testy. There have been issues, but we have always been able to work them out."

The major reason for the success according to those involved is the teamwork that the town has displayed from Town Manager Mark Haddad right down to the sub-contractors, DelPico said.

"Virtually everybody that was involved came together and cooperated and worked to resolve issues or problems," he said. "We didn't build this school in the newspaper, we built it as a team. Building a school today is an extremely complex project."

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn said teamwork was the key.

"Obviously having Simon (Tempest) and Rob (Spofford) involved has really helped," Flynn said. "It really is a town project. The school worked with everybody in town to get this done."

Building Committee Chairman Rob Spofford thought that the varying expertise of those involved helped tremendously.

Spofford also pointed out the experiences with the Osgood School project also provided a good foundation of working knowledge.

"We learned a lot from the Osgood School project," he said. "We had Simon in as a Project Manager and not as a clerk of the works, and I think there is a big distinction there, but we brought Simon in the beginning when we were designing the plans and I think that was another major piece of it."

Both Spofford and Tempest lauded the work of DelPico and his company, crediting them with being open, honest, and on-time.

"We've really enjoyed working with Wayne's company, it really has been going well," said Tempest. "I keep thanking my lucky stars, wondering when it is going to go wrong, but it hasn't. It's been a great experience and I really feel that we are going to pull it off and make the deadline."

Malvey wanted to recognize another group that played a role — the students and their families.

"I would like to thank the children, staff, and parents," said Malvey. "Because they have had to live in this environment for the last year-and-a-half."

DelPico said that times have changed when it comes to building schools and that needs to be taken into account.

"It's no longer just the walls and ceilings, it is also the technology that goes with it," said DelPico. "And it takes a lot of people resolving a lot of issues quickly to get it done on time."

Forum on teenage drinking

dances but it's fair to say a number of them do," Jones said.

Numerous parents agreed that teenagers who choose to drink should face reprimands from home as well as the school.

According to Jones, a student who is caught drinking receives a two-day suspension from school, as well as a 30-day suspension from sports teams and activities.

While punishments from home vary from almost non-existent to strict, many of the parents said that teenagers need to know that drinking underage is not only illegal, but also dangerous.

"I want these kids embarrassed and kicked off the teams rather than wrapped around a tree," Musto said.

Parents were also concerned about the students who do not drink.

Peggy Lovallo, mother of twin sophomores, said her children do not attend the school dances because they feel uncomfortable around the students who are drunk.

"I want them to go and have fun," Lovallo said. "They deserve it, but they don't feel it's their place anymore."

In addition, school-sponsored trips and programs have been cancelled sometimes because of kids who broke the rules. As a result, parents said they were worried because everyone was being punished for the mistakes of a few students.

Parents were also concerned that teenagers who don't drink feel pressure from their classmates and that these youths may see joining their peers as an easier way to fit it.

"It's too easy to do what other kids are doing," Musto said.

Jones said plans are to present some recommended changes in procedures and policy to the School Committee over the next two months.

"We in the school, through the administration, guidance, and health and physical education departments, will process what we've heard and then present our recommendations to the School Committee," he said.

Getting back to nature at the Osgood

Trail clears final hurdle

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

When Sarah Porter first decided to tackle the rehabilitation of the nature trail on the Cook property behind the Osgood School, she was thinking it would be a neat, clean, and quick process.

Oh how wrong she was.

"When I first began this project in 1999, I thought it might take a week," said Sarah Porter, who was president of the Osgood PSO at the time the project began, but is no longer a member. "As you know, when I initially came before you, I was coming for your approval to build an observation platform and a boardwalk over the wetlands in what everybody calls the Cook property."

But the presence of all the wetlands — which the boardwalk and observation platform will allow students to study — forced the project into overtime.

"Because there were so much wetlands involved, we had to file a notice of intent with the Conservation Commission," said Porter. "We did receive an order of conditions in July of 2000, and this April (after construction) we finally received our certificate, which means that it has been certified that our boardwalk and platform are in compliance with all of the conditions."

In the meantime Porter spent time maintaining the trail, and removing briars. This past Make-A-Difference Day, Porter and several other parents collaborated on more cleaning, also removing a few downed trees from the path.

"That was the very last step," said Porter of the most recent filing with the Conservation Commission. "Everything is complete."

While the project was occurring, students continued to utilize the woods as a learning tool. All of the first-grade classes go on one walk out there a year to study rocks and minerals and the third-grade classes go out there for two walks, the first one in the fall to study woodland habitats and the second in the spring to study wetland habitats.

PHOTOS/BRIAN SCULLY

The boardwalk in the nature trail behind the Osgood School.

The observation platform is also part of the nature trail.

The program can get expensive, but this year there was help.

"For the past three years, the Osgood PSO has funded the program," said Porter. "It costs about $1,000 every year. This year, though, I am very happy to report that Osgood PSO is picking up half the tab and the other half will be picked up by the Cohasset Conservation Trust."

Porter thinks that the education of young citizens in the importance of the environment goes hand-in-hand with the Trust's cause.

"One of the goals of the Cohasset Conservation Trust is to protect open space," said Porter. "And I really believe that by this donation the Trust is really cultivating the next stewards of nature in this town."

School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo, who also serves on the Trust, agrees wholeheartedly.

"We were very happy to do it," he said.. "We just felt that to have young children go out see and study these habitats will only be beneficial."

Board tries to curb traffic pattern

Worries about parent backups

By Brian J. Scully
BSCULLY@CNC.COM

It was meant to be a sidebar at the end of a short School Committee meeting, but the new (and temporary) parent and school bus drop-off plan at the Middle-High School generated 45-minutes of discussion Thursday night.

Supt. Edward Malvey presented the plan, which was designed by the school construction team, to the board. The new plan is needed as the construction project progresses.

At issue is the elimination of the driveway that cuts across school property, from the entrance to the student lot (by the football field) to the main two-lane driveway directly in front of the main entrance to the school. The paved roadway presently connects the two, and runs between the student parking lot and the school itself. Originally, school buses entered school grounds at the entrance in front of the football field and drove along the connecting driveway (the one that will be eliminated) before exiting out the main driveway.

As of Dec. 2, buses will enter at the same location as they did before, by the football field entrance, and proceed out back to a newly constructed rotary that lies between the back school entrance and approximately the 50-yard line of the football field.

The problem, however, is that parent drop-off will be limited to the main driveway, which could create large traffic jams. After driving up the up the main driveway on the right lane, parents dropping students off will exit via the left lane and will be forced to take a right turn onto Pond Street when exiting. (The buses could not use the main entrance because the turn from the right land to the left lane is too sharp).

"I guess we will try what they have put forward and if it needs to be adjusted we will do so."
— Rick Flynn, School Committee

"None of us are traffic specialists," said Chairman Rick Flynn, who voiced the opinion with several other members that perhaps saving the driveway that is being eliminated would help the situation. "So I guess we will try what they have put forward and if it needs to be adjusted we will do so."

Malvey said that the access road was eliminated out of concern for the safety of the students, and that despite several reviews by the building committee, the plan remained in place.

"This is good-natured discussion on it," he said. "My concern is with the safety of the students. There is no best way of doing it, so we are going to make it work. We think that this is doable and we think that it is designed with safety in mind, but given the volume of traffic we are going to have on such a small site, we are going to have to do some adjustments."

School Committee member Chartis Tebbetts said the committee should abide by the Building Committee's recommendations.

"I think we can't assume that we are better than the people whose job it was to try and find something that worked," said Tebbetts. "But things never work if the community doesn't want them to."

That being said, Tebbetts asked for the community's support for the temporary fix.

"We ask the community to do the best to make it work," she said. "This is not going to be easy, it may not be ideal, but it is the best that we can do."

Welcome to new arrivals, Bernie Mulcahy and Sam Laugelle

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

IT'S A BOY!

I would like to start this week's column by announcing the arrival of two wonderful and bouncing baby boys.

Kimberly & Craig Mulcahy would like to announce the birth of their first child, Bernard Roland Mulcahy! Baby Bernie was born on Nov. 17, 2002 at 10:46 a.m., weighing a whopping 9 pounds, 9 ounces and was 20-1/2 inches long. Bernie's paternal grandparents are Terry Carraher of Cohasset and the late Bernard Mulcahy. His maternal grandparents are Todd and Joan Williams of Scituate. Bernard was born on the anniversary of his great-grandfather's death (he was also Bernard Mulcahy).

We know that we will see this little(well, maybe not that little) guy all around town. Congratulations!

BOUNCING BABY BOY

Proud parents, Julie and Peter Laugelle Jr. of Cohasset along with big sister, Hannah, would like to announce the birth of Samuel Peter Laugelle. Samuel was born on Oct. 29, 2002 and he weighed in at, (are you ready for this?) 10 lbs. 11 oz and was 22-1/2 inches long! His proud grandparents are Peter and Pat Laugelle of Cohasset and LeRoy and Betty Williams of McPherson, Kan. Oh is he going to be hugged, snuggled and adored by so many. Congratulations to all of you.

JINGLE BELL WALK

The South Shore Community Center will hold its annual Jingle Bell Walk at 2 p.m. this Friday. The walk will begin on Border Street at Cohasset Harbor with Santa arriving by boat with his elves. After Santa gives out his Jingle Bells to all of the children, he and the elves will lead the walk and a hayride along Elm Street to Main Street. Their will be cookies, beverages and a sing-a-long at 2:30 in the Community Center followed by a Turkey Trot for children from ages 3-10 on the Common. The fee for this is $2 for those who sign up in advance and $3 on the day of the Trot. Their will also be hayrides, bells playing and at 3:45 p.m. the music of the Rusty Skippers. The days events will end with the lighting of the tree on the common at 4:15. For more information, call the Community Center at 781-383-0088.

TREE SALE

The First Parish's 8th Annual Fresh Cut Balsam Christmas Tree Sale in conjunction with the Cohasset Village Fair on Saturday, Dec. 7 is here! Pre-orders are being accepted so that the offering can be based on what people want. You will have a nice selection of trees to choose from. Make sure to place your order early to be in the "Your tree free" drawing. All trees are $35 and they are from 5-9 feet tall. People who have bought these trees in the past have declared them to be the freshest trees ever. Not only is this a fundraiser for the First Parish Church, trees are donated to various families served by the Cohasset Food Pantry, Wellspring, Friends of the Homeless and others including the Senior Center at the Community Center allowing for so many to benefit. To place your order, call 781-383-9845.

WREATH, CANDLE SALE

The Annual Cohasset PSO METCO Holiday Wreath and Candle Sale is happening and also benefits so many! . Please order your Hanukkah candles, ivory pillar candles and wreaths through this wonderful, PSO sponsored sale to benefit the METCO program in town. Hanukkah candles will be available by Nov. 25. Wreath pick-up is on Saturday, Dec. 7 at the Middle/High School from 9-12. If needed, wreaths can be available by Dec 1. Order forms are at all schools or contact Lisa Dunne 383-1596 or Olivia Baldwin 383-1866.

'BABES IN TOYLAND'

The Cohasset Dramatic Club presents "Babes in Toyland" at the Cohasset Town Hall weekends, Nov. 29-Dec. 15. Fridays and Saturdays at 7:30 p.m., Sunday matinees at 2 p.m., Additional matinee Saturday Dec 14 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $10 and can be purchased at Buttonwood Books & SpringBrook Kids in Cohasset and Front Street Books in Scituate, by phone at 781-544-0304 and at the door. Receive $1 off your ticket price at the door only when you bring a non-perishable item for the Cohasset Food Pantry. Girl Scout troops of five or more receive discounted tickets when reserved ahead of time. For more information, call Wendy at 545-1655.

This is going to be a wonderful way for families to get together for the holidays and get the spirit flowing!

Senior citizen volunteers help assemble a mailing for the South Shore Art Center's annual appeal.

XAVERIAN HONORS

Brother Daniel E. Skala C.F.X., Headmaster of Xaverian Brothers High School has announced that senior Alexander Berg of Cohasset has earned second honors (all grades above 80) for the first marking period of the 2002-03 academic year. Alex's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Peter Berg. Great news, Alexander.

HELPFUL SENIORS

A great big thank you goes out to these generous seniors! Last Wednesday 10 dedicated volunteers spent much of the day assembling a mailing for the South Shore Art Center's Annual Appeal. For the first time, the appeal will go to all residents of Cohasset, asking for support. Due to state budget cuts in funding for the arts, the Annual Appeal is more important than ever, and the Center is so grateful for all the help from our delightful senior citizens. Louise Smullen, Shirley DeAngelis, Pat Hanlon, Olga Sawchuck, Stella Nardo, Debbie Burnham (Hingham), Lou Tedeschi, Betty Maree, Betty Brooke and Maria Perroncello were all incredibly helpful. Cohasset residents are generous in many ways!

DEAN'S LIST

Lindy A. Holway, daughter of Holly H. Holway of Cohasset, qualified for the spring semester dean's list at Babson College. What a fantastic effort Lindy!

Just like his father and grandfather

Another Lehr seeks top rank in Boy Scouts

By Amanda Gontarz
CORRESPONDENT

Rob Lehr stands by the skating pond he refurbished as an Eagle Scout project.

Rob Lehr has always known he would be an Eagle Scout.

"It's a family thing," he said. "I didn't have much of a choice."

Both his father and grandfather earned the ranking of Eagle Scout when they were Lehr's age and, since he was very young, he knew he wanted to follow in their footsteps.

"I think I'll be in trouble if I don't get it," he said.

After climbing through the ranks of the Boy Scouts of America, Lehr began working on his Eagle Scout project last fall, when he received permission from Cohasset, as well as the Boy Scouts, to improve the Skating Pond on the Barnes property. He cleared out some of the brush around the pond and then let the winter weather kill the rest of it.

With more than 300 pounds of cement used to sturdy the pond's borders, the majority of the project's physical work began in the spring and Lehr has spent most of his weekends at the pond since then.

The Boy Scouts require at least 100 hours of work to be put into the Eagle Scout project, but Lehr said he believes he and his volunteers will have put in more than 200 by the project's Feb. 27 deadline, also Lehr's 18th birthday. Lehr, however, plans to have the physical labor completed by Thanksgiving and will use the rest of the time to complete paperwork.

In addition to help from his family and local Boy Scouts, Lehr said he has been lucky to receive strong support from the community.

"People will be walking by and they'll stop and help us for a half hour," he said.

Also, the Rotary Club donated funds that Lehr used to buy cement while the town allowed him to borrow tools and the excavators who worked on the site refused to take payment from him.

And it's the community for which Lehr is working hard. One of the Eagle Scout stipulations is that the project must be beneficial for at least five years, but Lehr said he hopes that his efforts will last and be enjoyed for longer than that.

"I wanted to do something I could be proud of but also something that other people could admire," he said.

"I think I'll be in trouble if I don't get it."
— Rob Lehr, Eagle Scout candidate

Lehr said that many people have been impressed with the ambition of his project, but he just sees as it as a culmination of all the time he has already devoted to the Boy Scouts.

"It's a huge project, but so far I'm proud of it," he said. "I figured if I'm going to do it, I might as well go out with a bang."

Lehr looks around at a few young boys cutting back brush as a number of adults work on the other side the Skating Pond on a warm, sunny fall day.

"I'm not known to be good at sitting inside an office," he said. "This is where I excel so I'm going to stick with it."

The Cohasset High School senior is taking what he's learned from this project and his experience with the Boy Scouts to college next year. Scouting out schools in Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine, Lehr said he plans to earn a major in outdoor recreation, which would prepare him for a career in guiding others in outdoor adventures.

GIVING TREE

The Cohasset Social Service League will have a Giving Tree in place the day after Thanksgiving at the Consignment Shop on Route 3A in Cohasset. The Giving Tree is being set up to collect unwrapped children's gifts to be distributed to the children of adults that are in local rehabilitation facilities such as Project Turnabout in Hingham and Serenity House in Scituate. Gifts of toys or clothing will be accepted unwrapped until Dec. 23. The age range is infant to 14 years of both gender. If you have any questions call the League at 781-383-0771.

I want to wish everyone a wonderful and happy Thanksgiving Day and also send out wishes to all who are celebrating Hanukah a happy start to their holidays. Good Luck to our CHS Football team and everyone stay safe in the wintry weather that is coming our way. Send me all of your news no later than Mondays at noon.
